SHEAT-FISH, n. [G. scheide.] A fish, a species of Silurus, having a long slimy body destitute of scales, and the back dusky, like that of the eel. It is the largest fresh-water fish of Europe, being sometimes six feet or more in length.

SHEATH, n. [Sax. scæath, scæthe; G. scheide; from separating, G. scheiden, Sax. scæadan. See SHADE.] 1. A case for the reception of a sword or other long and slender instrument; a scabbard. A sheath is that which separates, and hence a defence.—2. In bot., a term applied to a petiole when it embraces the branch from which it springs, as in grasses; or to a rudimentary leaf which wraps round the stem on which it grows, as in the scapus of many Endogenous plants.—3. Any thin covering for defence; the wing-case of an insect.—4. A land-guard of loose stones for confining a river within its banks.

SHEATHE, v. t. To put into a case or scabbard; as, to sheathe a sword or dagger.—2. To inclose or cover with a sheath or case.

The leopard...keeps the claws of his fore feet turned up from the ground, and sheathed in the skin of his toes. Grew.

'Tis in my breast she sheathes her dagger now. Dryden.

3. To cover or line; as, to sheathe the bowels with demulcent or mucilaginous substances.—4. To obtund or blunt, as acrimonious or sharp particles.—5. To fit with a sheath.—6. To case or cover with boards or with sheets of copper; as, to sheathe a ship to preserve it from the worms.—To sheathe the sword, a figurative phrase, to put an end to war or enmity; to make peace. It corresponds to the Indian phrase, to bury the hatchet.

SHEATHED, pp. Put in a sheath; inclosed or covered with a case; covered; lined; invested with a membrane.

SHEATHER, n. One that sheathes.

SHEATHING, ppr. Putting in a sheath; inclosing in a case; covering; lining; investing with a membrane.—Sheathing leaf, a leaf which forms a sheath to the stem; as in wheat, oats, and grasses.

SHEATHING, n. The casing or covering of a ship's bottom and sides; or the materials for such covering. The object of sheathing is to protect the ship from worms. Sheets of thin copper nailed on with copper nails, constitutes at present the sheathing of all the better kind of vessels.

SHEATHING NAILS, n. Nails used in fastening sheathing to ships.

SHEATHLESS, a. Without a sheath or case for covering; unsheathed.

SHEATH-WINGED, a. [sheath and wing.] Having cases for covering the wings; as, a sheath-winged insect.

SHEATHY, a. Forming a sheath or case.

SHEAVE, n. [in D. schuff is a slice, a truckle, a noit, a fillet, a draughtsman, a pane. In G. scheibe is a mark, a pane, a wheel, the knee-pan, a slice.] In seamen's lan., a wheel on which the rope works in a block. It is made of hard wood or of metal. When made of wood, it is sometimes bushed, that is, has a piece of perforated brass let into its centre, the better to sustain the friction of the pin or axis.

SHEAVE, † v. t. To bring together; to collect.

SHEAVED, † a. Made of straw.

SHEAVE-HOLE, n. A channel cut in a mast, yard, or other timber, in which to fix a sheave.

SHECHYNAH, SHEKYNAH, n. The Jewish name for the divine presence which rested in the shape of a cloud over the mercy seat; Lev. xvi. 2.

SHECKL'ATON, † n. [Fr. ciclaton.] A kind of gilt leather.

SHED, v. t. pret. and pp. Shed. [Sax. scædan, to pour out. If s is a prefix, this word coincides in elements with D. gieten, to pour, to cast, G. giessen, Eng. gush. It coincides also in elements with shoot. See the Noun.] 1. To cause or suffer to flow out; to pour out; to spill; as, to shed tears; to shed blood. The sun sheds light on the earth; the stars shed a more feeble light.

This is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins; Matt. xxvi.

2. To let fall; to cast; as, the trees shed their leaves in autumn; the fowls shed their feathers; and serpents shed their skin.—3. To scatter; to emit; to throw off; to diffuse; as, flowers shed their sweets or fragrance. [The peculiar sense of this word is to cast off something that belongs to the body, either a substance or a quality. Applied to animals and plants, it expresses a periodical casting off of a natural covering.]

SHED, v. i. To let fall its parts.

White oats are apt to shed most as they lie, and black as they stand. Morimer.

SHED, n. [Sax. scæd, a shade; Sw. skydd, a defence; skydda, to protect, to defend or shelter; Dan. skytter, id.; shyttier, a shooter; shyts, a defence; shyt, a gun; shyder, to shoot; G. schützen, to defend; schütze, a shooter; D. schutzen, to defend, to parry or stop; schutter, a shooter. It appears that shed, the noun and verb, and shoot, are from one source, and shade, scud, scath, and several other words, when traced, all terminate in the same radical sense, to thrust, rush, or drive.]

1. A slight building; a covering of timber and boards, &c., for shelter against rain and the inclemencies of weather; a poor house or hovel.

The first Aletes born in lowly shed. Fairfax.

The sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea. Byron.

SHĒEN, n. Brightness; splendour.

SHEEP, n. sing. and plur. [Sax. sceap, scep; G. schaf.] 1. An animal of the genus Ovis, which is among the most useful species that the Creator has bestowed on man, as its wool constitutes a principal material of warm clothing, and its flesh is a great article of food. The skin dressed, forms different parts of our apparel, and is used for covers of books. The entrails, properly prepared and twisted, serve for strings for various musical instruments. The milk is thicker than that of cows, and consequently yields a greater quantity of butter and cheese. The sheep is remarkable for its harmless temper and its timidity. The varieties are numerous. The principal varieties of the English sheep are the large Lincolnshire, the Dorset breed, the South-down, and the Cheviot. The foreign breeds of sheep are exceedingly numerous, but of these perhaps the Asiatic variety is the most singular.

Barbary Broad-tailed Sheep (Ovis stratiopyga).

In India, the sheep is long-tailed; and in Persia, Tartary, and China, &c., the tail is not only elongated, but loaded with a mass of fat, in some instances weighing ten pounds. The variety most celebrated for the fineness of the wool is the Spanish merino, [see MERINO,] as improved in Germany. The wild sheep or Argali [see ARGALI] is found in Asia, Africa, and America. The Rocky Mountain sheep is nearly related to the goat, and its fleece is said to be as fine as that of the shawl goat of Cashmere.—2. In contempt, a silly fellow.—3. Figuratively, God's people are called sheep, as being under the government and protection of Christ, the great Shepherd; John x.—4. A congregation considered as under a spiritual shepherd or pastor. More usually termed a flock.

Rocky Mountain Sheep (Ovis montanus)

SHEER, a. [Sax. scir, scyr; G. schier; Dan. skier; Sans. charu, tscharu; from the root of shear, to separate; whence sheer is clear, pure. It might be deduced from the Shemitic זָהָר, zehar, to be clear. But the Danish and Saxon orthography coincides with that of Shear.]

1. Pure; clear; separate from anything foreign; unmingled; as sheer ale. But this application is unusual. We say, sheer argument, sheer wit, sheer falsehood, sheer ignorance, sheer stupidity &c.—2. Clear; thin; as, sheer muslin.

SHEER, † adv. Clean; quite; at once.

SHEER, † v. t. To shear.

SHEER, v. i. [See SHEAR.] 1. In seamen's lan., to decline or deviate from the line of the proper course, as a ship when not steered with steadiness.—2. To slip or move aside.—To sheer off, to turn or move aside to a distance; to part or separate from; to move off or away.—To sheer up, to turn and approach to a place or ship.

SHEER, n. The curve which the line of ports or of the deck presents to the eye when viewing the side of a ship. When these lines are straight or the extremities do not rise, as is most usual, the ship is said to have a straight sheer.—To quicken the sheer, among shipwrights, is to shorten the radius which strikes out the curve.—To straighten the sheer, to lengthen the radius.—2. The position in which a ship is sometimes kept at single anchor, to keep her clear of it.—To break sheer, to deviate from that position.

SHEER-HOOKS, n. An instrument with prongs and hooks, placed at the extremities of the yards of fire-ships, to entangle the enemy's rigging, &c.

SHEERS, n. plur. In ships, an apparatus consisting of two or more pieces of timber or poles erected in a mutually inclined position, and fastened together near the top, their lower ends being secured to the opposite sides of the vessel. Tackle blocks are suspended to them for the purpose of hoisting in or getting out the masts of a vessel; the same contrivance is also used for other purposes, such as the loading or unloading the vessel, &c.

SHEER-STRAKE, n. In shipbuilding, the strake under the gunwale in the top-side. [See STRAKE.]

SHEET, n. [Sax. scæt, sceta, scyta; L. scheda; Gr. σχῆδη.] The Saxon scæt signifies a garment, a cloth, towel, or napkin; sceta is rendered a sheet, and the Greek and Latin words signify a table or plate for writing on; from the root of Sax. scædan, to separate, L. scindo, Gr. σχίζω.] 1. A broad and large piece of cloth, as of linen or cotton; the linen of a bed.—2. A broad piece of paper as it comes from the manufacturer. Sheets of paper are of different sizes, as royal, demy, foolscap, pot, and post paper.—3. A piece of paper printed, folded, and bound, or formed into a book in blank, and making four, eight, sixteen, or twenty-four pages, &c.—4. Any thing expanded; as, a sheet of water or of fire; a sheet of copper, lead, or iron.—5. Sheets, plur. a book or pamphlet. The following sheets contain a full answer to my opponent.—6. In poetry, a sail. [Improper.]

SHEET, n. [Fr. escote. This word seems to be connected with scot or shot; Sp. escotar, to cut out clothes, to pay one's scot or share of taxes, and in nautical lan., to free a ship of water by pumping. The word is probably from that root, or from shoot.] In nautical lan., a rope fastened to one or both the lower corners of a sail to extend and retain it in a particular situation. In the square sails above the courses, the ropes attached to both clues are called sheets; in all other cases the weathermost one is called a tack. When a ship sails with a side-wind, the lower corners of the main and fore sails are fastened with a tack and a sheet. The stay-sails and studding-sails have only one tack and one sheet each.

SHEET, v. t. To furnish with sheets. [Little used.]—2. To fold in a sheet. [Little used.]—3. To cover as with a sheet; to cover with something broad and thin.

When snow the pasture sheets. Shak.
To sheet home, is to haul home a sheet, or extend the sail till the clue is close to the sheet-block.

SHEET-ANCHOR, n. [originally written shote-anchor, that is, the anchor thrown out for security or preservation.] The largest anchor of a ship, which in stress of weather is sometimes the seaman's last refuge to prevent the ship from going ashore. Hence,—2. The chief support; the last refuge for safety.

SHEET-COPPER, n. Copper in broad thin plates.

SHEETING, n. Cloth for sheets.

SHEET-IRON, n. Iron in sheets, or broad thin plates.

SHEET-LEAD, n. Lead formed into sheets. [See LEAD.]

SHEETING-PILES, } of thick plank, shot or jointed on the edges, and sometimes grooved and tongued, driven closely together between the main or gauge piles of a cofferdam or other hydraulic work, to enclose the space either to retain or exclude water, as the case may be. Sheeting piles have of late been formed of iron.

SHEETS, n. The ropes attached to sails, by which they are set and the top-sails hauled up. [See SHEET.]

SHEIK, n. [In Ar. elder, or eldest.] A title of dignity properly belonging to the chiefs of the Arabic tribes or clans. The heads of monasteries are sometimes called sheiks among the Mohammedans, and it is also the title of the higher order of religious persons who preach in the mosques.

SHEK'EL, n. [Heb. שֶׁקֶל, shakel, to weigh; Ch.Syr. Ar. and Eth. id.; Eth. to append or suspend; Low L. sichus; Fr. sicle. From this root we have shilling. Payments were originally made by weight, as they still are in some countries. See POUND.] An ancient weight and coin among the Jews and other nations of the same stock. Dr. Arbuthnot makes the weight to have been equal to 9 pennyweights 2½ grains, Troy weight, and the value 2s. 3½d. sterling. Others make its value 2s. 6d. sterling. The golden shekel was worth £1 16s. 6d. sterling. The shekel of the sanctuary was used in calculating the offerings of the temple, and all sums connected with the sacred law. It differed from the common shekel, and is supposed to have been double its value.

SHELD'AFLE, } n. A chaffinch. This SHELD'AFLE, } word is also written Sheld'apple.

SHELD'DRAKE, n. An aquatic fowl of the duck kind, the Anas tadorna, which is the type of the subgenus Tadorna of Ray, and of modern ornithologists. It is also called bargander, St. George's duck, burrow duck, sly-goose, skeel duck, and skeeling goose. These birds inhabit the sea coasts, and breed in rabbit holes. They feed on small fish, marine insects and sea-weeds.

SHELD'DUCK, n. A species of wild duck.

SHELF, n. plur. Shelves. [Sax. scylf, whence scylfan, to shelve; Fr. écueil, a sand-bank.] 1. A platform of boards or planks, elevated above the floor, and fixed or set on a frame or contiguous to a wall, for holding vessels, utensils, books, and the like.—2. A sand-bank in the sea, or a rock or ledge of rocks, rendering the water shallow and dangerous to ships.—3. of which the origin and nature are involved in great obscurity, and which have of late years excited extraordinary interest by their periodical appearances in unusually great numbers. They appear to be equally numerous in all climates. They are observed at all seasons of the year, but, generally speaking, they appear to be more abundant in the end of summer and autumn than at other seasons. They burst from the clear azure sky, and, darting along the heavens, are extinguished without leaving any residuum, except a vapour-like smoke, and generally without noise. Many of them appear at altitudes far beyond the limits of the atmosphere, which clearly proves that they are not of atmospheric origin. Some have supposed that they have a lunar origin, and others that there are myriads of bodies revolving in groups round the sun which only become visible when inflamed by entering our atmosphere. They have been observed to be unusually abundant at certain periods of the year, as for instance on the 12th and 13th of November, the first two weeks, and particularly the 10th day of August.

SHOOTING, n. The act of discharging fire-arms, or of sending an arrow with force; a firing.—2. Sensation of a quick glancing pain.—3. SHORE WEED, n. A British plant of the genus Littorella, the L. lacustris.

SHORL, or SCHORL, n. [Sw. shörl, from shör, brittle; Dan. shöör.] A mineral, usually of a black colour, found in masses of an indeterminate form, or crystallized in three or nine-sided prisms, which when entire are terminated by three-sided summits. The surface of the crystals is longitudinally streaked. The amorphous sort presents thin straight distinct columnar concretions, sometimes parallel, sometimes diverging or stelliform. This is called also tourmalin. The shorl of the mineralogists of the last century comprehended a variety of substances which later observations have separated into several species. The green shorl is the epidote, or the vesuvian, or the actinolite. The violet shorl and the lenticular shorl are the axinite. The black volcanic shorl is the augite. The white vesuvian shorl is the somnite. The white grenatiform is the leucite. The white prismatic is the pycnite, a species of the topaz, and another is a variety of feldspar. Of the blue shorl, one variety is the oxide of titanium, another the sappare, and another the phosphate of iron. The shorl cruciform is the grenatite. The octahedral shorl is the octahedrite or anatase. The red shorl of Hungary and the purple of Madagascar, are varieties of the oxide of titanium. The spathic shorl is the spodumene. The black shorl and the electric shorl only remain, and to this species the name tourmalin was given by that celebrated mineralogist, the Abbé Haüy. Blue shorl is a variety of Hauyne. Red and titanitic shorl is rutile.

SHORLA'CEOUS, or SCHORLA'CEOUS, a. Like shorl; partaking of the nature and characters of shorl.

SHOT, pret. and pp. of Shoot.

SHOT-BELT

SHOT, n. [Sax. scyt; D. schoot, schot. See SHOOT and SCOR.] 1. The act of shooting; discharge of a missile weapon.

He caused twenty shot of his greatest cannon to be made at the king's army. Clarendon.

Note.—The plural shots, may be used, but shot is used in both numbers.—2. A missile weapon, particularly a ball or bullet. Shot is properly whatever is discharged from fire-arms or cannon by the force of gunpowder. Shot used in war is of various kinds; as, round shot or balls; those for cannon made of iron, those for muskets and pistols, of lead. Secondly, double headed shot or bar shot, consisting of a bar with a round head at either end. Thirdly, chain-shot, consisting of two balls chained together. Fourthly, grape-shot, consisting of a number of balls bound together with a cord in canvas, on an iron bottom. Fifthly, case shot or cannister shot, consisting of a great number of small bullets in a cylindrical tin box. Sixthly, langrel or langrage, which consists of pieces of iron of any kind or shape. Small shot, denotes musket or pistol balls.—3. Small globular masses of lead, used by sportsmen for killing birds and other small game. They are numbered according to their sizes. In manufacturing this kind of shot, the melted lead is poured into a kind of sieve, elevated about 200 feet from the ground. It falls down in a shower, and in descending the streams separate into drops or globules, on the principle of cohesion. Before they reach the ground they are cooled and become solid.—4. The flight of a missile weapon, or the distance which it passes from the engine; as, a cannon shot; a musket shot; a pistol shot; a bow shot.—5. A reckoning; charge or proportional share of expense. [See SCOR.]—6. Anything emitted, cast, or thrown forth.—To shot the guns, is to load the pieces of ordnance with the necessary quantity of gunpowder and ball.—Shot-boxes, boxes in which grape, case, and small arms shot are packed for service.—Shot gauge, an instrument for measuring the diameter of shot.—Shot locker. [See LOCKER.]—Shot-racks, wooden frames bolted to the coverings and head-ledges round the hatchways on the decks, to contain the different species of shot.—Shot-pile. [See PILE.]—Shot of a cable, in seamen's lan., the splicing of two cables together; or the whole length of two cables thus united. A ship will ride easier in deep water with one shot of cable thus lengthened, than with three short cables.

SHOT, v. t. To load with shot over a cartridge; as, to shot a gun. [The term is merely confined to charging cannon, for to load is the word used in the case of small arms.]

SHOT, pp. That which has been emptied at one movement; as, a cart of rubbish has been shot.

SHOUGH, † interj. (shoo.) [Ger. scheuchen.] A cry used to scare away fowls.

SHOULD, (shood.) The preterit of Shall, but now used as an auxiliary verb, either in the past time or conditional present. "He should have paid the debt at the time the note became due." Should here denotes past time. "I should ride to town this day if the weather would permit." He should, expresses present or future time conditionally. In the second and third persons, it denotes obligation or duty, as in the first example above.—1. I should go. When should in this person is uttered without emphasis, it declares simply that an event would take place, on some condition or under other circumstances. But when expressed with emphasis, should in this person denotes obligation, duty, or determination.—

2. Thou shouldst } Without emphasis, should, in the second person, is nearly equivalent to ought; you ought to go, it is your duty, you are bound to go. [See SHALL.] With emphasis, should expresses determination in the speaker conditionally to compel the person to act. "If I had the care of you, you should go, whether willing or not."—3. He should go. Should, in the third person, has the same force as in the second.—4. If I should, if you should, if he should, &c. denote a future contingent event.—5. After should, the principal verb is sometimes omitted, without obscuring the sense. So subjects love just kings, or so they should. Dryden.

That is, so they should love them.—6. Should be, ought to be; a proverbial phrase, conveying some censure, contempt, or irony. Things are not as they should be.

The boys think their mother no better than she should be. Addison.

7. "We think it strange that stones should fall from the aerial regions." In this use, should implies that stones do fall. In all similar phrases, should implies the actual existence of the fact, without a condition or supposition.

SHOULDER, n. [Sax. sculdre, sculdor, sculder; G. schulter.] 1. The joint by which the arm of a human being or the fore leg of a quadruped is connected with the body; or in man, the projection formed by the bones called scapula or shoulder-blades, which extend from the basis of the neck in a horizontal direction.—2. The upper joint of the fore leg of an animal cut for the market; as, a shoulder of mutton.—3. Shoulders, in the plural, the upper part of the back.

Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair.
Dryden.

4. Figuratively, support; sustaining power; or that which elevates and sustains.

For on thy shoulders do I build my seat.
Shak.

5. Among artificers, something like the human shoulder; a horizontal or rectangular projection from the body of a thing.—Shoulder of a tenon, the plane transverse to the length of a piece of timber from which the tenon projects. It does not, however, always lie in the plane here defined, but sometimes lies in different planes.—6. In fort., the angle of a bastion included between the face and flank.—7. SHRIKES, n. The English ornithological name of the butcher-birds, which form the genus Lanius of Linn., and the Laniadae of modern ornithologists. Cuvier arranges them under the dento-rostral division of his order of Passerine birds. Swainson arranges the Laniadae into five sub-families:—1. The Tyranninae, or tyrant-shrikes; 2. the Ceblepyrinae or caterpillar-shrikes; 3. the Dicruvinae, or drongo-shrikes; 4. the Thamnophilinae, or bush-shrikes; and, 5. the Lanianae, or true-shrikes. The Great Grey Shrike (Lanius excubitor).

shrikes are characterized by a strong compressed conical beak, more or less hooked, and emarginate near the point, as in the other dento-rostrals. They live in families, and fly irregularly and precipitately, uttering shrill cries. They build in trees, lay five or six eggs, and take great care of their young. They have a habit of imitating a part of the songs of such birds as live in their vicinity. The larger and stronger birds are predatory, and attack, slay, and devour smaller birds, frogs, mice, lizards, and beetles. They have been called butcher-birds from their habit of suspending their prey, after depriving it of life, upon thorns.

SHRILL, a. [W. grill, a sharp noise; Arn. scrill, a cricket, L. gryllus, Fr. grillon, It. strillare, to scream.] 1. Sharp; acute; piercing; as sound; as, a shrill voice; shrill echoes.—2. Uttering an acute sound; as, the cock's shrill sounding throat; a shrill trumpet.

SHROUD'Y, a. Affording shelter.

SHROVE, } v. i. To join in the festivities of Shrove-tide.

SHROVE-TIDE, } n. [from shrove,
SHROVE-TUESDAY, } pret. of Shrive, to take a confession. See TIDE and TUESDAY.] Confession-time; confession-Tuesday; the Tuesday after Quinquagesima Sunday, or the day immediately preceding the first of Lent, or Ash Wednesday; on which day, all the people of England, when Roman Catholics, were obliged to confess their sins one by one to their parish priests; after which they dined on pancakes or fritters. The latter practice still continues, and it has given this day the vulgar appellation of Pancake Tuesday. The Monday preceding was the vulgar called collop Monday, from the primitive custom of eating eggs on collops or slices of bread.—2. In Scotland, shrove-tide is called Fastern's e'en or Fasten's e'en.

SHROVING, n. The festivity of Shrove-tide.

SHRUB, n. [Sax. scrob, G. schroff, rugged; Ir. sgrabach, rough. See SCRUB.] A low dwarf tree; a woody plant of a size less than a tree; or more strictly, a plant with several permanent woody stems, dividing from the bottom, more slender and lower than in trees. All plants are divided into herbs, shrubs, and trees. A shrub approaches the tree in its duration and consistence, but never attains the height of a tree, and is generally taller than the herb. It varies in height from about four to twelve feet. For practical purposes shrubs are divided into the deciduous and ever-green kinds. The most ornamental flowering shrubs, those belonging to the genera Rosa, Rhododendron, Azalea, Kalmia, Andromeda, Vaccinium, &c. Among the ever-green shrubs, are the holly, the ivy, the jasmine, the box, various heaths, &c.

Gooseberries and currants are shrubs; oaks and cherries are trees.

SHRUB, n. [Ar. shurbon, drink, and from the same source, sirup. The Arabic verb signifies to drink, to imbibe, whence L. sorbeo. See SURBERT and ABSORB.] A liquor composed of acid and sugar, with spirit (chiefly rum) to preserve it; usually the acid of lemons.

SHRUB, v. t. To clear of shrubs.

SHRUB'BERY, n. Shrubs in general.—2. A plantation of shrubs, formed for the purpose of adorning gardens and pleasure grounds.

SHRUB'LESS, a. Having no shrubs.

SHRUFF, } n. [G. schroff, rugged.]
Dross; recrement of metals.

SHRUG, v. t. [This word is probably formed from the root of G. rüchen, the back, D. rug, Sax. hric or hryg, the back, a ridge, W. crug, a heap, crwg, a crook, L. ruga, a wrinkle, Eug. rough.] To draw up; to contract; as, to shrug the shoulders. The word seems to be limited in its use to the shoulders, and to denote a particular motion which raises the shoulders and rounds the back.

SHRUG, v. i. To raise or draw up the shoulders, as in expressing horror, dissatisfaction, aversion, &c.

They grin, they shrug,
They bow, they snarl, they scratch, they hug.

SHRUG, n. A drawing up of the shoulders; a motion usually expressing dislike.

The Spaniards talk in dialogues
Of heads and shoulders, nods, and shrugs.

SHRUG'GING, ppr. Drawing up, as the shoulders.

SHRUNK, pret. and pp. of Shrink.

SHRUNK'EN, pp. of Shrink. [Nearly obsolete.]

SHUD'DER, n. A tremour; a shaking with fear or horror.

SHUD'DERING, ppr. or a. Trembling or shaking with fear or horror; quaking.

SHUD'DERINGLY, adv. With tremour.

SHUF'FLE, v. t. [D. schoffelen, to shove, to shovel, to shuffle; dim. of Shove. See SHOVE and SCUFFLE.] 1. Properly, to shove one way and the other; to push from one to another; as, to shuffle money from hand to hand.—2. To mix by pushing or shoving; to confuse; to throw into disorder; especially, to change the relative positions of cards in the pack.

A man may shuffle cards or rattle dice from noon to midnight, without tracing a new idea in his mind.

3. To remove or introduce by artificial confusion.

It was contrived by your enemies, and shuffled into the papers that were seized.

Dryden.

To shuffle off, to push off; to rid one's self of. When you lay blame to a child, he will attempt to shuffle it off.—To shuffle up, to throw together in haste; to make up or form in confusion or with fraudulent disorder; as, he shuffled up a piece.

SHUF'FLE, v. i. To change the relative position of cards in a pack by little shoves; as, to shuffle and cut.—2. To change the position; to shift ground; to prevaricate; to evade fair questions; to practise shifts to elude detection.

Hiding my honour in my necessity, I am fain to shuffle.

3. To struggle; to shift.

Your life, good master,
Must shuffle for itself.

4. To move with an irregular gait; as, a shuffling nag.—5. To shove the feet; to scrape the floor in dancing. [Vulgar.]—To shuffle off, to move off with low, short, irregular steps; to evade.—6. To evade doing some duty; to prevaricate. [Familiar.]

SHUF'FLE, n. A shoving, pushing, or jostling; the act of mixing and throwing into confusion by change of places.

The unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter.

2. An evasion; a trick; an artifice.—3. In dancing, a rapid scraping movement with the feet; a compound sort of this is the double shuffle.

SHUFFLE-BOARD, the old spelling of Shovel-board.

SHUF'FLE-CAP, n. A play performed by shaking money in a hat or cap.

SHUFFLED, pp. Moved by little shoves; mixed.

SHUF'FLE, n. One that shuffles or prevaricates; one that plays tricks; one that shuffles cards.

SHUF'FLING, ppr. Moving by little shoves one way and the other; changing the places of cards; prevaricating; evading; playing tricks.—2. a. Evasive; as, a shuffling excuse.

SHUF'FLING, n. The act of throwing into confusion, or of changing the relative position of things by shoving or motion.—2. Trick; artifice; evasion.—3. An irregular gait.

It is then said, we shut in such a point, we shut in the land; or one point shuts in another.—To shut out, to preclude from entering; to deny admission to; to exclude; as, to shut out rain by a tight roof. An interesting subject occupying the mind, shuts out all other thoughts.—To shut up, to close; to make fast the entrances into; as, to shut up a house.—2. To obstruct.

Dangerous rocks shut up the passage. Raleigh.

3. To confine; to imprison; to lock or fasten in; as, to shut up a prisoner.—4. To confine by legal or moral restraint.

Before faith came we were kept under the law, shut up to the faith, which should afterward be revealed; Gal. iii.

5. To end; to terminate; to conclude. When the scene of life is shut up, the slave will be above his master, if he has acted better. Collier.

SHUT, v. i. To close itself; to be closed. The door shuts of itself; it shuts hard. Certain flowers shut at night and open in the day.

SHUT, pp. Closed; having the entrance barred.—2. a. Rid; clear; free.

SHUT, n. Close; the act of closing; as, the shut of a door; the shut of evening. [Little used.]—2. A small door or cover. But Shutter is more generally used.

SHUTTER, n. A person that shuts or closes.—2. A door; a cover; something that closes a passage.—3. In arch., shutters are the boards which close the aperture of a window. The shutters of principal windows are usually in two divisions or halves, each subdivided into others, so that they may be received within the boxings or reeds into which the shutters are folded or fall back. The front shutter is of the exact breadth of the boxing, and also flush with it; the others, which are hidden in the boxing, are somewhat less in breadth, and are termed back-folds or backflaps. Shutters may be considered as the doors of window openings, and are formed upon the same principles as doors. [See Boxings of a WINDOW.]

SHUTTING, ppr. Closing; prohibiting entrance; confining.

SHUTTING, n. In anchor-making, the act of joining or welding one piece of iron to another.

SHUTTLE, n. [from the root of shoot; Ice. shutul.] An instrument used by weavers for passing or shooting the thread of the woof in weaving from one side of the cloth to the other, between the threads of the warp. In the middle of the shuttle is a kind of cavity, called its eye or chamber, in which is enclosed the spool, which is part of the thread destined for the woof.—Fly-shuttle, an improved kind of shuttle contrived by John Kay of Lancashire, in 1738, and so named from the rapidity with which it can be wrought. In throwing the common hand shuttle both hands must be used alternately, and the process is consequently slow; but the fly-shuttle, by means of an apparatus connected with it, can be propelled from side to side of the web with great rapidity by one hand only, the other being occupied in managing the lay.

SHUTTLE-COCK, n. [shuttle and cock or cork.] A cork stuck with feathers, made to be struck by a battledore in play; also, the play.

SHWAN'PAN, n. The calculating instrument of the Chinese. It is similar in shape and construction to the Roman abacus, and is used in the same manner.

It belongs to the nat. order Scrophulariaceæ, and consists of small, creeping, rooting, tufted herbs, with small alternate uniform leaves, and axillary, solitary, inconspicuous flowers. S. Europæa is a native of Europe, and is found in Portugal, Spain, and France, and in Devonshire and Cornwall, in England, where it is known by the name of Cornish money-wort.

SIB'YL, n. [from the L.] In pagan antiquity, the Sibyls were certain women said to be endowed with a prophetic spirit. Their number is variously stated; but the opinion of Varro, who states them to have been ten, is generally adopted. These ten Sibyls resided in Persia, Lybia, Delphi, Cumæ in Italy, Erythræa, Samos, Cumæ in Æolia, Marpessa on the Hellespont, Ancyra in Phrygia, and Tiburtis. The most celebrated were the Sibyl of Cumæ, fabled to have been consulted by Æneus, and the prophetess who offered her books to Tarquin the Proud. It is pretended that they wrote certain prophecies on leaves in verse, which are called Sibylline verses, Sibylline oracles, or Sibylline books. They were supposed to contain the fate of the Roman empire, and were held in great authority by the Romans. Sibylline verses are often quoted by Christian writers, as containing prophecies respecting Christianity, but these are spurious, a forgery of the second century.

—2. The state of producing sickness extensively; as, the sickliness of a season.—3. The disposition to generate disease extensively; as, the sickliness of a climate.

SICK'-LIST, n. A list containing the names of the sick.

SICK'LY, a. Not healthy; somewhat affected with disease; or habitually indisposed; as, a sickly person, or a sickly constitution; a sickly plant.—2. Producing disease extensively; marked with sickness; as, a sickly time; a sickly autumn.—3. Tending to produce disease; as, a sickly climate.—4. Faint; weak; languid.

The moon grows sickly at the sight of day. Dryden.

SICK'LY, v. t. To make diseased.

SICK'LY, adv. Not in health; not soundly, faintly, languidly.

SICK'NESS, n. [G. sucht.] 1. A particular state of the stomach which occurs under three forms,—nausea, retching, and vomiting.—2. State of being diseased.

I do lament the sickness of the king.

Shak.

3. Disease; malady; a morbid state of the body of an animal or plant, in which the organs do not perfectly perform their natural functions. [In this sense little used at the present day.]

Trust not too much your now resistless charms;

Those age or sickness soon or late disarms.

Pope

Himself took our infirmities, and bore our sicknesses; Matt. viii.

SID'A, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Malvaceæ. The species are very numerous, and very extensively distributed throughout the warm parts of the world, and are abundant in the peninsula and plains of India. They abound in mucilage like all malvaceous plants, and some of them have tough ligneous fibres, which are employed for the purposes of cordage in different countries; as S. rhomboidea, rhombifolia, periplocifolia, and tiliæfolia. S. indica, astatica, and populifolia, are employed in India as demulcents. The chewed leaves of S. carpinifolia, are applied in Brazil to the stings of wasps and bees. At Rio Janeiro, the straight shoots of S. macrantha are employed as rocket-sticks.

SIDE, n. [Sax. sid, side, sida, a side, also wide, like L. latus; D. zyde, side, flank, page; zid, far; G. seite; Sw. sida; Dan. side, a side; sid or stid, long, trailing; sidst, last; Scot. side, long. These words indicate the radical sense to be to extend, dilate, or draw out.] 1. The broad and long part or surface of a thing, as distinguished from the end, which is of less extent and may be a point; as, the side of a plank; the side of a chest; the side of a house or of a ship. One side of a lens may be concave, the other convex. Side is distinguished from edge; as, the side of a knife or sword.—2. Margin; edge; verge; border; the exterior line of any thing, considered in length; as, the side of a tract of land or a field, as distinct from the end. Hence we say, the side of a river; the side of a road.—3. The part of an animal between the back and the face and belly; the part on which the ribs are situated; as, the right side; the left side. This in quadrupeds is usually the broadest part.—4. The part between the top and bottom; the slope, declivity, or ascent, as of a hill or mountain; as, the side of Mount Etna.—5. One part of a thing, or its superficies, as seen by the eye; as, the side of a ball or sphere.—Side, in geom., is used for any line which forms one of the boundaries of a right-lined figure; as, the side of a triangle, square, &c. Also, any of the bounding surfaces of a solid is termed a side; as, the side of a parallelepiped, prism, &c.—6. Any part considered in respect to its direction or point of compass; as, to whichever side we direct our view. We see difficulties on every side.—7. Party; faction; sect; any man or body of men considered as in opposition to another. One man enlists on the side of the tories; another on the side of the whigs. Some persons change sides for the sake of popularity and office, and sink themselves in public estimation. And sets the passions on the side of truth.

Pope.

8. Interest; favour.

The Lord is on my side; Ps. cxviii

9. Any part being in opposition or contradistinction to another; used of persons or propositions. In that battle, the slaughter was great on both sides. Passion invites on one side; reason restrains on the other.

Open justice bends on neither side.

Dryden.

10. Branch of a family; separate line of descent; as, by the father's side he is descended from a noble family; by the mother's side his birth is respectable.—11. Quarter; region; part; as, from one side of heaven to the other.—To take sides, to embrace the opinions or attach one's self to the interest of a party when in opposition to another.—To choose sides, to select parties for competition in exercises of any kind.

SIDE, a. Lateral; as, a side post; but perhaps it would be better to consider the word as compound.—2. Being on the side, or toward the side; oblique; indirect.

The law hath no side respect to their persons.

Hooker.

One mighty squadron with a side wind sped.

Dryden.

So we say, a side view, a side blow.—

3. † Long; large; extensive.

SIDE, v. i. To lean on one side. [Little used.]

—2. To embrace the opinions of one party or engage in its interest, when opposed to another party; often followed by with; as, to side with the ministerial party.

All side in parties and begin th' attack. Pope.

SIDE, † v. t. To stand at the side of.—

2. † To suit; to pair.

SIDE-BAR, n. In the court of session, the name given to the bar in the outer parliament house, at which the lords ordinary were in use to call their hand-rolls.

SIDEBOARD, n. [side and board.] A piece of furniture or cabinet work consisting of a table or box with drawers or cells placed at the side of a room or in a recess, and used to hold dining utensils, &c.—2. In joinery, the board placed vertically which forms the side of the bench next to the workman. It is pierced with holes ranged at different heights in diagonal directions, so as to admit of pins for holding up one end of the object to be planed, the other end being supported by the bench-screw.

SIDE-BOX, n. [side and box.] A box or inclosed seat on the side of a theatre, distinct from the seats in the pit.

SIDE-CUT, n. A canal branching out from the main one. [American.]

SIDE-CUTTING, n. A term applied in a double sense in engineering. 1. An excavation made along the side of a canal or railroad in order to obtain material to form an embankment.—2. The formation of a road or canal along the side of a slope, where the centre of the work being nearly on the surface, the ground requires to be cut only on the upper side to form one half of the work, while the material thrown down forms the other half in embankment. This is sometimes called side-forming.

SIDE-FLY, n. An insect.

SIDE-HOOK, n. In joinery, a rectangular prismatic piece of wood, with a projecting knob at the ends of its opposite sides. The use of the side-hook is to hold a board fast, its fibres being in the direction of the length of the bench, while the workman is cutting across the fibres with a saw or grooving plane, or in traversing the wood, which is planing it in a direction perpendicular to the fibres.

SIDELONG, a. [side and long.] Lateral; oblique; not directly in front; as, a sidelong glance.

SIDELONG, adv. Laterally; obliquely; in the direction of the side.—2. On the side; as, to lay a thing sidelong.

SIDE-POSTS, n. In arch, a kind of truss-posts placed in pairs, each disposed at the same distance from the middle of the truss, for the purpose of supporting the principal rafters, braces, crown or camber beams, as well as for hanging the tie-beam below. In extended roofs two or three pairs of side-posts are used.

SIDER, † n. One that takes a side or joins a party.

SIDERATED, a. [L. sideratus.] Blast-ed; planet-struck.

SIDERATION, n. [L. sideratio; sidero, to blast, from sidus, a star.] A blasting or blast in plants; a sudden deprivation of sense; an apoplexy; a slight erysipelas. † A sphacelus, or a species of erysipelas, vulgarly called a blast.

SIDERAL, } a. [L. sideralis, from SIDERAL, } sidus, a star.] 1. Pertaining to a star or stars; astral; as, sidereal light.—2. Containing stars;

starry; as, sidereal regions.—Sidereal day, the time in which the earth makes a complete revolution on its axis in respect of the fixed stars; or it is the time which elapses between the instant when a star is in the meridian of a place, and the instant when it arrives at the meridian again. This period is always the same, and is about four minutes less than the mean solar day.

—Sidereal year, in astron., the period in which the fixed stars apparently complete a revolution and come to the same point in the heavens. Or it is the time that elapses between the sun's leaving any fixed star, and his return to the same star. It is equal to 365 d.

6 h. 9 m. 9.6 sec., being 19.9 sec. longer than the tropical year.—Sidereal time is equal to 1.00273791 × mean solar time.—Mean solar time is equal to 0.99726957 × sidereal time.—Sidereal magnetism, according to the believers in animal magnetism, the beneficial influence of the stars upon patients.

SIDERIS'MUS, n. [from sidus, iron.]

The name given by the believers in animal magnetism to the effects produced by bringing metals and other inorganic bodies into a magnetic connection with the human body.

SIDE-RITE, n. [L. sideritis; Gr. id., from sidus, iron.] 1. The loadstone; also, iron-wort, a plant; also, the common ground pine, (Teucrium chama- epitys, Linn.)—2. In min., a phosphate of iron.

SIDERITIS, n. Iron-wort, a genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Lamniaceae. The species are numerous, and are inhabitants of Europe, and the northern parts of Asia; they consist of herbs and shrubs, with small yellowish flowers arranged in whorls.—S.

canariensis, or canary iron-wort, and

S. syriaca, Syrian or sage-leaved iron-wort, are cultivated in gardens. In both species the leaves are clothed with a villous wool on both surfaces.

SIDERO-CAL'CITE, n. The brown spar of Werner.

SIDERO-CLEP'TE, n. A mineral of a yellowish green colour, soft and translucent, occurring in reniform or botryoidal masses.

SIDERODEN'DRON, n. [Gr. sidus, iron, and δενδρον, a tree.] The iron-wood tree. [See SIDEROXYLON.]

SIDEROGRAPH'IC, } a. [See SI-

SIDEROGRAPH'ICAL, } DEROGRA-

PHY.] Pertaining to siderography, or performed by engraved plates of steel;

as, siderographic art; siderographic impressions.

SIDEROGRAPHIST, n. One who en-graves steel plates, or performs work by means of such plates.

SIDEROGR'APHY, n. [Gr. sidus, steel, or iron, and γραφω, to engrave.] The art or practice of engraving on steel, by means of which, impressions may be transferred from a steel plate to a steel cylinder in a rolling press of a particular construction.

SIDE ROMANCY, n. [Gr. sidus, iron, and μαντεια, divination.] A species of divination performed by burning straws, &c., upon red-hot iron. By observing their figures, bendings, sparkling, and burning, prognostics were obtained.

SIDE-ROSCOPE, n. [Gr. sidus, iron, and σκοπω, to view or explore.] An instrument invented in France, for detecting small quantities of iron in any substance, mineral, vegetable, or animal.

SIDEROX'YLON, n. [Gr. sidus, iron, and υλον, wood.] A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Sapotaceae.

The species are natives of Africa,

America, the East Indies, and New

Holland. They are evergreen trees, with axillary and lateral fascicles of flowers. They are remarkable for the hardness and weight of their wood, which sinks in water; and the genus has hence derived the name of ironwood. The S. incense, or smooth ironwood, is a native of the Cape of Good Hope, and has long been cultivated in the green-houses of Europe.

SIDERUM, n. [L. from Gr. sidus, iron.] The name given by Bergman to phosphure of iron.

SIDE-SADDLE, n. [side and saddle.]

A saddle for a woman's seat on horse-

SIDE-SADDLE-FLOWER, n. A species of Sarracenia, or Sarrazinia.

SIDE-SCRIPTION, n. In Scots law, before the introduction of the present system of writing deeds "bookwise," the sheets were pasted together at length, and in order to authenticate them, the party was required to sign his name at each junction, half on the one sheet and half on the other. This was called side-scription.

SIDESMAN, n. [side and man.] An asstant to the churchwarden.—2. A party man.

SIDE-TABLE, n. A table placed either against the wall, or aside from the principal table.

SIDETAKING, n. A taking sides, or engaging in a party.

SIDEWAYS, } adv. [side and way; but

SIDEWISE, } sidewise is the proper combination.] 1. Toward one side; inclining; as, to hold the head sidewise.

—2. Laterally; on one side; as, the refraction of light sidewise.

SIDING, ppr. Joining one side or party.

SIDING, n. The attaching of one's self to a party.—2. In engineering, a short additional line of rails laid at the side of a main line, and so joined to it at each end that a carriage may either pass into the siding or continue its course along the line. [See RAILWAY.]
SIDLE, v. i. To go or move side foremost; as, to sidle through a crowd.—2. To lie on the side.

SIDLING, adv. [from sidle; D. zydelings.] 1. Sidewise; with the side foremost; as, to go siddling through a crowd. It may be used as a participle; as, I saw him siddling through the crowd.—2. Sloping.

SIEGE, n. [Fr. siège, a seat, a siege, the see of a bishop; Norm. sage, a seat; Arm. sich, sicha, sich enn. The radical sense is to set, to fall or to throw down; Sax. sgan, to fall, set, or rush down. These words seem to be connected with sink, and with the root of seal, L. sigillum.] 1. The setting of an army around or before a fortified place for the purpose of compelling the garrison to surrender; or the surrounding or investing of a place by an army, and approaching it by passages and advanced works, which cover the besiegers from the enemy's fire. A siege differs from a blockade, as in a siege the investing army approaches the fortified place to attack and reduce it by force; but in a blockade, the army secures all the avenues to the place to intercept all supplies, and waits till famine compels the garrison to surrender.—2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.

Love stood the siege, and would not yield his breast. Dryden.

3 † Seat; throne.—4. † Rank; place; class.—5. † Stool.—6. The bench or other support on which a mason places his stone to be hewn. A banker or mason's bench.

SIEGE, v. i. To besiege.

SIENITE, } n. A compound granular SYENITE, } rock composed of quartz, hornblende, and feldspar, of a grayish colour; so called, because there are many ancient monuments consisting of this rock, brought from Syene, in Upper Egypt. Sienite often bears the general aspect of a granite, but it is the presence of hornblende as a constituent part which distinguishes this rock from certain granites that accidentally contain hornblende. It frequently contains mica, and occasionally talc, and epidote. The structure of sienite is commonly granular, but the grains are sometimes coarse, and sometimes very fine.

SIENITIC, a. Containing sienite; resembling sienite or possessing some of its properties.—Sienitic granite contains hornblende; sienitic porphyry is fine-grained sienite containing large crystals of feldspar.

SIER'RA, a. [Sp.] A word, meaning saw, introduced by the Spaniards into geography, to designate a mass of mountains with jagged ridges.

SIES'TA, n. [Sp.] The name given to the practice indulged in by the Spaniards, and the inhabitants of hot countries generally, of resting two or three hours in the middle of the day or after dinner, when the heat is too oppressive to admit of their going from home.

SIEUR, n. [Fr.] A title of respect used by the French.

SIEVE, n. (siv.) [Sax. sife, syfe; G. sieb; D. zeef, zift; the sifter. See SIFT.] An instrument for separating the smaller particles of substances from the grosser; as flour from bran. Sieves are made of various forms and sizes, to suit the article to be sifted; but in its most usual form, a sieve consists of a hoop from two to six inches in depth, forming a flat cylinder, and having its bottom, which is stretched tightly over the hoop, constituted of basket-work, coarse or fine hair, gut, skin perforated with small holes, canvas, muslin, lawn, net-work, or wire, according to the use intended. In agriculture, sieves are used for separating corn or other seed from dust, or other extraneous matter.—Drum-sieve, a kind of sieve in extensive use amongst druggists, dyers, salters, and confectioners, so named from its form. It is used for sifting very fine powders, and consists of three parts or sections, the top and bottom sections being covered with parchment or leather, and made to fit over and under a sieve of the usual form, which is placed between them. The substance to be sifted being thus closed in, the operator is not annoyed by the clouds of powder which would otherwise be produced by the agitation, and the material under operation is at the same time saved from waste.

SIFT, v. t. [Sax. siftan; G. sieben.] 1. To separate by a sieve, as the fine part of a substance from the coarse; as, to sift meal; to sift powder; to sift sand or lime.—2. To separate; to part.—3. To examine minutely or critically; to scrutinize. Let the principles of the party be thoroughly sifted.

We have sifted your objections. Hooker.

SIFTED, pp. Separated by a sieve; purified from the coarser parts; critically examined.

SIFTER, n. One that sifts; that which sifts; a sieve.

SIFTING, ppr. Separating the finer from the coarser part by a sieve; critically examining.

SIG, a Saxon word signifying victory, is used in names, as in Sigbert, bright victory. It answers to the Greek $\nu\iota\kappa$ in Nicander, and the L. vic, in Victorinus.
SIGH, v. i. [Sax. sican, to sigh; D. zugt, a sigh; zugten, to sigh; allied perhaps to suck, a drawing in of the breath.] To inhale and respire audibly, as from grief; to suffer a deep single respiration.

He sighed deeply in his spirit; Mark viii.

SIGH, v. t. To lament; to mourn.

Ages to come and men unborn
 Shall bless her name and sigh her fate. Prior.

2. To express by sighs.

The gentle swain sighs back her grief. Hoole.

SIGH, n. A single deep respiration; a long breath; the inhaling of a larger quantity of air than usual; and the sudden emission of it. This is an effort of nature to dilate the lungs and give vigour to the circulation of the blood, when the action of the heart and arteries is languid from grief, depression of spirits, weakness, or want of exercise. Hence, sighs are indications of grief or debility.

SIGHER, n. One that sighs.

SIGHING, ppr. Suffering a deep respiration; taking a long breath.

SIGHING, n. The act of suffering a deep respiration, or taking a long breath.

SIGHTINGLY, adv. With sighing.

SIGHT, n. [Sax. gesiht, with a prefix; D. geziht; G. sicht; Sw. sicht, from the root of see.] 1. The act of seeing; perception of objects by the eye; view; as, to gain sight of land; to have a sight of a landscape; to lose sight of a ship at sea.

A cloud received him out of their sight; Acts i.

2. The faculty of vision, or of perceiving objects by the instrumentality of the eyes. It has been doubted whether moles have sight. Milton lost his sight. The sight usually fails at or before fifty years of age.

O loss of sight, of thee I most complain.

Milton.

3. Open view; the state of admitting unobstructed vision; a being within the limits of vision. The harbour is in sight of the town; a mountain is or is not within sight; an engagement at sea is within sight of land.—4. Notice from seeing; knowledge; as, a letter intended for the sight of one person only.—5. Eye; the instrument of seeing. From the depth of hell they lift their sight.

Dryden.

6. A small aperture through which objects are to be seen; as, the sight of a quadrant.—7. That which is beheld; a spectacle; a show; particularly, something novel and remarkable; something wonderful.

They never saw a sight so fair. Spenser.
 Moses said, I will now turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush is not burned; Exod. iii.

Fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven; Luke xxi.

8. A small piece of metal fixed on the muzzle of a musket, &c., to aid the eye in taking aim.—At sight, in mercantile affairs, when presented; as, a bill of exchange payable at sight.—To take sight, to take aim; to look for the purpose of directing a piece of artillery, &c.—To take a sight of, to take a look at; to view; to examine. [Familiar.]
SIGHT, v. t. In navigators' language, to come in sight or view of; as, we sighted Madeira, but did not touch at it.

SIGHTED, a. In composition only, having sight, or seeing in a particular manner; as, long-sighted, seeing at a great distance; short-sighted, able to see only at a small distance; quich-sighted, readily seeing, discerning, or understanding; sharp-sighted, having a keen eye or acute discernment.

SIGHTFULNESS, † n. Clearness of sight.

SIGHTLESS, a. Wanting sight; blind. Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar.

Pope.

2. Offensive or unpleasing to the eye; as, sightless stains. [Not well authorized.]—3. † Not appearing to sight; invisible.
SIGHTLESSLY, adv. In a sightless manner.

SIGHTLESSNESS, n. Want of sight.

SIGHTLINESS, n. Comeliness; an appearance pleasing to the sight.

SIGHTLY, a. Pleasing to the eye; striking to the view.

Many brave sightly horses. L'Estrange.

2. Open to the view; that may be seen from a distance. We say, a house stands in a sightly place.

SIGHTS'MAN, n. Among musicians, one who reads music readily at first sight.

SIG'IL, n. [L. sigillum.] A seal; signature.

SIGILLARIA, n. [L. sigillum, a seal.] The name given by M. Brongniart, to certain large, and, in modern vegetation, unknown forms of plants, discovered in the coal formation. They were so named from the peculiar impressions on the stems. The stems are of various sizes, from a few inches to upwards of three feet in circumference, and of great length. They are supposed to have been allied to ferns; and the roots seem to be the plant known by the name stigmara.

Stigmara in a coal mine near Liverpool.

SIGILLATIVE, a. [Fr. sigillatif; L. sigillum.] Fit to seal; belonging to a seal; composed of wax.

SIGMA, n. The name of the Greek Σ , σ . The Greeks originally used for this letter the form of the English C, and the Romans adopted this form for their tables. The most honourable places at the table were the extremities.

SIGMOID, or SIGMOIDAL, a. [Gr. σῆμα and σῆμα.] Curved like the Greek Σ sigma.—2. In anat., a term applied to several parts, as the valves of the heart, the cartilages of the trachea, the semilunar cavities of the bones, and the flexure of the colon. The sigmoid flexure is the last curve of the colon, before it terminates in the rectum.

SIGN, n. (sine.) [Fr. signe; L. signum; Sax. segen; Arm. sygn, syn; Ir. signin; G. zeichen; Sans. zaga. From the last three words it appears that n is not radical; the elements being Sg. If so, and the G. zeichen is of this family, then we learn that sign is only a dialectical orthography of token, for zeichen is the D. techen, Dan. tegn, Sw. techen, coinciding perhaps with Greek τεκεναι.] 1. A token; something by which another thing is shown or represented; any visible thing, any motion, appearance, or event which indicates the existence or approach of something else. Thus we speak of signs of fair weather or of a storm, and of external marks which are signs of a good constitution.—2. A motion, action, nod, or gesture indicating a wish or command.

They made signs to his father, how he would have him called; Luke i.

3. A wonder; a miracle; a prodigy; a remarkable transaction, event, or phenomenon.

Through mighty signs and wonders; Rom. xv.

4. Some visible transaction, event, or appearance intended as proof or evidence of something else; hence, proof; evidence by sight.

Show me a sign that thou talkest with me; Judges vi.

5. Something hung or set near a house or over a door, to give notice of the tenant's occupation, or what is made or sold within; as, a trader's sign; a tailor's sign; the sign of the eagle.—

6. A memorial or monument; something to preserve the memory of a thing.

What time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men, and they became a sign; Num. xxvi.

7. Visible mark or representation; as, an outward sign of an inward and spiritual grace.—8. A mark of distinction.—9. Typical representation; symbol.

The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative. Brewerwood.

10. In astron., the twelfth part of the ecliptic. The signs are reckoned from the point of intersection of the ecliptic and equator at the vernal equinox, and are counted onwards, proceeding from west to east, according to the annual course of the sun, all round the ecliptic. In printing, they are represented by the following marks, which are attached to their respective names:—Aries Υ , Taurus \mathcal{T} , Gemini Π , Cancer $\var�$, Leo \mathcal{L} , Virgo \mathcal{M} , Libra \mathcal{L} , Scorpio \mathcal{M} , Sagittarius \mathcal{T} , Capricornus \mathcal{W} , Aquarius \mathcal{A} , Pisces \mathcal{X} .

The first six signs, commencing with Aries, are called northern signs, because they lie on the north side of the equator; and the other six, commencing with Libra, are called southern signs, because they lie on the south side of the equator. The six beginning with Capricornus are called ascending signs, because the sun passes through them while advancing from the winter to the summer solstice, and is consequently acquiring altitude with respect to inhabitants of the northern hemisphere. The other six, beginning with Cancer, are called descending signs, because the sun in passing through them diminishes his altitude with respect to inhabitants of the northern hemisphere. [See ECLIP- TIC.] These names are borrowed from the constellations of the zodiac of the same denomination, which were respectively comprehended within the foregoing equal divisions of the ecliptic, at the time when those divisions were first made; but on account of the precession of the equinoxes, the positions of these constellations in the heavens no longer correspond with the divisions of the ecliptic of the same name, but are considerably in advance of them.

Thus the constellation Aries is now in that part of the ecliptic called Taurus.—11. In alge., a character indicating the relation of quantities, or an operation performed by them; as the sign + [plus] prefixed to a quantity, indicates that the quantity is to be added; the sign — [minus] denotes that the quantity to which it is prefixed is to be subtracted. The former is prefixed to quantities called affirmative or positive; the latter to quantities called negative. The sign \times [into] stands for multiplication, \div [divided by] for division, $\sqrt{\quad}$ for the square root, $\sqrt[3]{\quad}$ for the cube root, $\sqrt[n]{\quad}$ for the *n*th root, &c. The signs denoting a relation are, = equal to, > greater than,

< less than, &c.—12. The subscription of one's name; signature; as, a sign manual. Sign manual is a term particularly applied to the royal signature superscribed at the top of bills of grants or letters-patent.—13. Among physicians, an appearance or symptom in the human body, which indicates its condition as to health or disease.—14. In music, any character, as a flat, sharp, dot, &c.—Sign manual, one's own name written by himself. [See No. 12.]—Sign, or sign of the cross, a ceremonial observance much in use among Roman Catholics and in the Greek church.

He dies, and makes no sign. Shak.

SIGN, v. t. (sine.) To mark with characters or one's name. To sign a paper, note, deed, &c., is to write one's name at the foot, or underneath the declaration, promise, covenant, grant, &c., by which the person makes it his own act. To sign one's name is to write or subscribe it on paper. Signing does not now include sealing.—2. \dagger To signify; to represent typically.—3. To mark.—4. To signify by the hand; to move the hand for intimating something to another. To sign with the cross, is to perform a common Roman Catholic and Greek Catholic ceremonial observance.

SIGN, \dagger v. i. To be a sign or omen.

SIGNAL, n. [Fr. signal; from L. signum.] A sign that gives or is intended to give notice; or the notice given. Signals are used to communicate notice, information, orders, and the like, to persons at a distance, and by any persons and for any purpose. A signal may be a motion of the hand, the raising of a flag, the fring of a gun, or any thing which being understood by persons at a distance, may communicate notice. Signals are particularly useful in the navigation of fleets and in naval engagements. There are day-signals, which are usually made by the sails, by flags and pendants, or guns; night-signals, which are lanterns, disposed in certain figures, or false fires, rockets, or the firing of guns; fog-signals, which are made by sounds, as firing of guns, beating of drums, ringing of bells, &c. There are signals of evolution, addressed to a whole fleet, to a division, or to a squadron; signals of movements to particular ships; and signals of service, general or particular. Signals used in an army are mostly made by a particular beat of the drum, or by the bugle.

SIGNAL, a. Eminent; remarkable; memorable; distinguished from what is ordinary; as, a signal exploit; a signal service; a signal act of benevolence. It is generally but not always used in a good sense.

SIGNALFIRE, n. A fire intended for a signal.

SIGNALITY, \dagger n. Quality of being signal or remarkable.

SIGNALIZE, v. t. [from signal.] To make remarkable or eminent; to render distinguished from what is common. The soldier who signalizes himself in battle, merits his country's gratitude. Men may signalize themselves, their valour, or their talents.

SIGNALIZED, pp. Made eminent.

SIGNALIZING, ppr. Making remarkable.

SIGNALLY, adv. Eminently; remarkably; memorably; in a distinguished manner.

SIGNATION, \dagger n. Sign given; act of betokening.

SIGNATORY, a. Relating to a seal; used in sealing.

SIGNATURE, n. [Fr. from L. signo, to sign.] 1. A sign, stamp, or mark impressed.

The brain being well furnished with various traces, signatures and images.

The natural and indelible signature of God, stamped on the human soul.

Bentley.

2. In old medical writers, an external mark or character on a plant, which was supposed to indicate its suitability to cure particular disease, or diseases of particular parts. Thus plants with yellow flowers were supposed to be adapted to the cure of jaundice, &c.

Some plants bear a very evident signature of their nature and use. More.

3. A mark for proof, or proof from marks.—4. Sign manual; the name of a person written or subscribed by himself.—5. Among printers, a letter or figure at the bottom of the first page of a sheet or half sheet, by which the sheets are distinguished and their order designated, as a direction to the binder. Every successive sheet has a different letter or figure, and if the sheets are more numerous than the letters of the alphabet, then a small letter is added to the capital one; thus A a, B b. In large volumes, the signatures are sometimes composed of letters and figures; thus 5 A, 5 B. But some printers now use figures only for signatures.—6. In physiognomy, an external mark or feature by which some persons pretend to discover the nature and qualities of a thing, particularly the temper and genius of persons.—7. In music, the flats and sharps placed after the clef at the beginning of the staff, which affect throughout the movement all notes of the same letter.—8. In Scots law, a writing prepared and presented by a writer to the signet to the Baron of Exchequer, as the ground of a Royal grant to the person in whose name it is presented; which having, in the case of an original charter the sign-mannual of the sovereign, and in other cases the cachet, appointed by the act of union for Scotland, attached to it, becomes the warrant of a conveyance under one or other of the seals, according to the nature of the subject, or the object in view.

SIGNATURE, † v. t. To mark; to distinguish.

SIGNATORIST, n. One who holds to the doctrine of signatures impressed upon objects, indicative of character or qualities. [Little used.]

SIGN-BOARD, n. A board on which a man sets a notice of his occupation or of articles for sale.

SIGNED, pp. Marked; subscribed.

SIGNER, n. One that signs or subscribes his name; as, a memorial with a hundred signers.

SIGNET, n. A seal; particularly in Great Britain; the seal used by the king in sealing his private letters, and grants that pass by bill under his majesty's hand. It is in the custody of the secretary of state for the home department. The signet in Scotland is the seal by which the king's letters and writs for the purpose of justice are now authenticated. Hence the title of clerks to the signet, or writers to the signet, whose business is nearly the same with that of attorneys in England. Their duty is to prepare the warrants of all charters of lands flowing from the crown; to sign all summonses for citing parties to appear in the court of session, and almost all diligences of the law for affecting the person or estate of a debtor, or for compelling implement of the decrees of the supreme court. They have further the privilege of acting as agents or attorneys in conducting causes before the court of session.—Clerk of the signet, an officer in England continually in attendance upon the principal secretary of state, who has the custody of the privy signet.

SIGNIFICANCE, } n. [from L. significans, } ficans. See SIGNIF-SIGNIFICANCY, }
FR.] 1. Meaning; import; that which is intended to be expressed; as, the significance of a nod, or of a motion of the hand, or of a word or expression.—2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind; as, a duty enjoined with particular significance.—3. Importance; moment; weight; consequence.

Many a circumstance of less significancy has been construed into an overt act of high treason. Addim.

SIGNIFICANT, a. [L. significans.]
1. Expressive of something beyond the external mark.—2. Bearing a meaning; expressing or containing signification or sense; as, a significant word or sound; a significant look.—3. Betokening something; standing as a sign of something.

It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant, but not efficient.

Rolegh.

4. Expressive or representative of some fact or event. The passover among the Jews was significant of the escape of the Israelites from the destruction which fell on the Egyptians. The bread and wine in the sacrament are significant of the body and blood of Christ. 5. † Important; momentous.

SIGNIFICANTLY, adv. With meaning.—2. With force of expression.

SIGNIFICATION, n. [Fr. from L. significatio. See SIGNIFY.] 1. The act of making known, or of communicating ideas to another by signs or by words, by any thing that is understood, particularly by words.

All speaking or signification of one's mind, implies an act or address of one man to another. South.

2. Meaning; that which is understood to be intended by a sign, character, mark, or word; that idea or sense of a sign, mark, word, or expression which the person using it intends to convey, or that which men in general who use it, understand it to convey. The signification of words was originally arbitrary, and is dependent on usage. But when custom has annexed a certain sense to a letter or sound, or to a combination of letters or sounds, this sense is always to be considered the signification which the person using the word intends to communicate. So by custom certain signs or gestures have a determined signification. Such is the fact also with figures, algebraic characters, &c.

SIGNIFICATIVE, a. [Fr. significatif.]
1. Betokening or representing by an external sign; as, the significative symbols of the eucharist.—2. Having signification or meaning; strongly expressive; expressive of a certain idea or thing.

Neither in the degrees of kindred were they destitute of significative words. Camden.

SIGNIFICATIVELY, adv. So as to represent or express by an external sign.

SIGNIFICATIVENESS, n. The quality of being significative.

SIGNIFICATOR, n. That which signifies.

SIGNIFICATORY, a. That betokens.

SIGNIFYATORY, n. That which betokens, signifies, or represents.

SIGNIFIED, pp. Made known by signs or words.

SIGNIFY, v. t. [Fr. signifier; L. significo; signum, a sign, and facio, to make.] 1. To make known something, either by signs or words; to express or communicate to another any idea, thought, wish, purpose, or command, either by words, by a nod, wink, gesture, signal, or other sign. A man signifies his mind by his voice or by written characters; he may signify his mind by a nod or other motion, provided the person to whom he directs it, understands what is intended by it. A general or an admiral signifies his commands by signals to officers at a distance.—2. To mean; to have or contain a certain sense. The word sabbath signifies rest. Less, in composition, as in faithless, signifies destitution or want. The prefix re, in recommend, seldom signifies any thing.—3. To import; to weigh; to have consequence; used in particular phrases; as, it signifies much or little; it signifies nothing. What does it signify? What signify the splendours of a court? Confession of sin without reformation of life, can signify nothing in the view of God.—4. To make known; to declare.

The government should signify to the Protestants of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied. Swift.

SIGNIFY, v. i. To express meaning with force. [Little used.]

SIGNIFYING, ppr. Making known by signs or words.

SIGNING, ppr. Marking; subscribing; signifying by the hand.

SIGN'OR, } n. (see 'nyur.) A title of SIGN'OR, } respect among the Italians, equivalent to the English Lord, Sir, or Mr., the French Monsieur, and the German Herr. [See SIGNOR.]

SIGNIORIZE, v. i. (see 'nyurize.) To exercise dominion; or to have dominion. [Little used.]

SIGNIORY, n. (see 'nyury.) A different, but less common spelling of seignory,—which see. It signifies lordship, dominion, and in Shakspeare, seniority.

SIGN-POST, n. [sign and post.] A post on which a sign hangs, or on which papers are placed to give public notice of any thing.

SIK, } † a. Such.

SIKE, }
SIKER, } † a. or adv. Sure; surely. [See SICKER.]

SIK'ERNNESS, † n. Sureness; safety.
SIKHS, or SEIKS, n. A religious sect in Hindostan, (founded about A. D. 1500), which professes the purest Deism, and is chiefly distinguished from the Hindoos by worshipping one only invisible God. The name Sikhs, or lions, was given to the sect, on account of the heroic manner in which they resisted their Mohamedan oppressors, against whom they long fought with varying success. They ultimately subdued Lahore, and established for themselves a country which includes the Punjab, a part of Mooltan, &c.

SILE, † n. A sieve; a strainer.

SILE, v. t. To strain, as fresh milk from the cow. [Local.]

SILED, pp. Strained.

SILENA'CEÆ, n. A natural order of plants belonging to the syncarpous group of the polypetalous sub-class of Exogens. It is a part of the larger order caryophylleæ of Jussieu, and was originally separated by De Candolle. It differs from the remaining portion of the order Caryophyllæ, (now called Alsiniacæ), in the possession of a tubular calyx, and petals with claws. The plants of this order are natives principally of the temperate and frigid parts of the world, where they inhabit mountains, hedges, rocks, and waste places. The Dianthus and Lychnis are handsome flowers, but the greater part are mere weeds.

SILENCE, n. [Fr. from L. silentium, from sileo, to be still. The sense is to stop or hold; but this may proceed from setting, throwing down. See SILL.] 1. In a general sense, stillness, or entire absence of sound or noise; as, the silence of midnight.—2. In animals, the state of holding the peace; forbearance of speech in man, or of noise in other animals.

I was dumb with silence; I held my peace, even from good; Ps. xxxix.

3. Habitual taciturnity; opposed to loquacity.—4. Secrecy. These things were transacted in silence.—5. Stillness; calmness; quiet; cessation of rage, agitation, or tumult; as, the elements reduced to silence.—6. Absence of mention; oblivion.

Eternal silence be their doom. Milton.
And what most merits fame, in silence hid.

7. Silence! is used elliptically for let there be silence, an injunction to keep silence.

SILENCE, v. t. To oblige to hold the peace; to restrain from noise or speaking.—2. To still; to quiet; to restrain; to appease.

This would silence all further opposition.

These would have silenced their scruples. Clarendon.
Rogers.

3. To stop; as, to silence complaints or clamour.—4. To still; to cause to cease firing; as, to silence guns or a battery.—5. In the United States, to restrain from preaching by revoking a license to preach; as, to silence a minister of the gospel.—6. To put an end to; to cause to cease.

The question between agriculture and commerce has received a decision which has silenced the rivalships between them.

Hamilton.
SILENCED, pp. Stilled; hushed.
SILENCING, ppr. Stilling.

SILENE, n. An extensive genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Silenacæ. The species are in general herbaceous; the stems are leafy, jointed, branched, and frequently glutinous below each joint. The greatest proportion are inhabitants of the South of Europe, and north of Africa. Ten species are enumerated by British botanists, which are known by the names of campion and catch-fly. Several are cultivated in gardens as ornamental flowers. S. compacta or close-flowered catch-fly, is one of the most beautiful of the genus. S. inflata, or bladder-catch-fly, possesses edible properties. The young shoots, boiled, are a good substitute for green peas or asparagus. SILENT, a. Not speaking; mute; Ps. xxii.—2. Habitually taciturn; speaking little; not inclined to much talking; not loquacious.

Ulysses, he adds, was the most eloquent and the most silent of men. Broomer.

3. Still; having no noise; as, the silent watches of the night; the silent groves; all was silent.—4. Not operative; wanting efficacy.—5. Not mentioning; not proclaiming.

This new created world, of which in hell Fame is not silent. Milton.

6. Calm; as, the winds were silent.—7. Not acting; not transacting business in person; as, a silent partner in a commercial house.—8. Not pronounced; having no sound; as, e is silent in fable.

SILENTIARY, n. One appointed to keep silence and order in court; one sworn not to divulge secrets of state. SILENTLY, adv. Without speech or words.

Each silently
Demands thy grace, and seems to watch thy eye. Dryden.

2. Without noise; as, to march silently.—3. Without mention. He mentioned other difficulties, but this he silently passed over.

SILENTNESS, n. State of being silent; stillness; silence.

SILENT SYSTEM. Abstinence from all communication by words, and even looks, enforced in some penitentiaries.

We prefer the silent system to the solitary system. Prison Inspectors' Reports.

SILENUS, n. (σίληνος). A Grecian divinity, the foster-father and attendant of Bacchus, and likewise leader of the satyrs. He was represented as a robust old man in a state of intoxication, and riding on an ass with a can in his hand.

SILESIA, n. (sile'zha.) A duchy or country now chiefly belonging to Prussia; hence, a species of linen cloth so called; thin coarse linen.

SILESIA, a. (sile'zhan.) Pertaining to Silesia; made in Silesia; as, Silesian linen.

SILEX, } n. [L. silex, flint.] Silicic SILICA, } acid, generally impure, as it is found in nature. This important substance constitutes the characteristic ingredient of a great variety of minerals; among which rock-crystal, quartz, chalcedony, and flint may be considered as silica nearly pure. It also predominates in many of the rocky masses which constitute the crust of our globe, such as granite, the varieties of sandstone, and quartz rock. It is the chief substance of which glass is made; also an ingredient, in a pulverized state, in the manufacture of stoneware, and it is essential in the preparation of tenacious mortar. Silix, when pure, is a fine powder, hard, insipid, and inodorous; rough to the touch, scratches and wears away glass. It combines in definite proportions with many salifiable bases, and its various compounds have been termed silicates. Plate glass and window glass, or, as it is commonly called, crown glass, are silicates of soda or potassa, and flint glass is a similar compound, with a large addition of silicate of lead. Recent experiments prove silica to be a compound substance, the base of which is a metal called silicium or silicon. Silica then is an oxide of silicium. [See SILICIC ACID.]

SILHOUETTE, n. (sil'ooet.) In the fine arts, a name given to the representation of an object filled in of a black colour, and in which the inner parts are sometimes indicated by lines of a lighter colour, and shadows or extreme depths by the aid of a heightening of gum or other shining medium. This sort of drawing derives its name from its inventor Etienne de Silhouette, the French minister of finance, in 1759.

SILICATE, n. A salt composed of silicic acid and a base. Silicates formed by the union of silicic acid, or silica, with the bases alumina, lime, magnesia, potassa, soda, &c., constitute the greater number by far of the hard minerals which encrust the globe. The silicates of potash and soda, when heated to redness, form glass.

SILICATED, a. Coated or mixed with flint.

SILICIC ACID, n. A name given to silica, because although it has none of the ordinary, or more obvious properties of an acid, it combines with many salifiable bases, and expels carbonic acid when fused with the carbonated alkalies. According to Thomson, it is composed of one equivalent of silicium or silicon, and one of oxygen; or, according to Berzelius, one of silicium, or silicon, and three of oxygen. SILICICALCAREOUS, a. [silex and calcareous.] Consisting of silex and calcareous matter.

SILICICALCE, n. [L. silex or silica and calx.] A mineral of the silicious kind, occurring in amorphous masses; its colour is gray or brown. It is a mixture of flint and carbonate of lime. SILICIFEROUS, a. [L. silex and fero, to produce.] Producing silex; or united with a portion of silex.

SILICIFICATION, n. Petrification; the conversion of any substance into stone by silicious matter.

SILICIFICÆ, n. Substances petrified or mineralized by silicious earth.

SILICIFIED, pp. Petrified by flint.

SILICIFY, v. t. [L. silex, flint, and facio, to make.] To convert into silex, or petrify by flint.

The specimens...found near Philadelphia, are completely silicified. Say.

SILICIFY, v. i. To become siliceous.

SILICIFYING, ppr. Petrifying by silex.

SILICIMURITE, n. [silex and muria, brine.] An earth composed of silex and magnesia.

SILICIOUS, a. Pertaining to silex, or partaking of its nature and qualities, as silicious limestone; silicious slate; silicious nodules, &c. Silicious waters, such as contain silica in solution; as the boiling springs of the Geyser in Iceland.—Silicious earth, silica,—which see.

SILICITED, a. Impregnated with silex.

SILICIUM, } n. [L. silex, flint.] The SILICON, } base of silica, a dark, nut-brown elementary substance, destitute of a metallic lustre. It is probably not metallic, as has been supposed. It bears a greater analogy to boron than any known principle. It is a non-conductor of electricity, incombustible in air and oxygen, infusible by the blow pipe, and not acted upon by any single acid; but it is readily soluble in a mixture of the nitric and hydrofluoric acids. Its external characters are much altered after exposure to a high temperature.

SILICLE, } n. [L. silicula.] In bot.,
SILICULA, } a kind of fruit. In its structure it resembles the siliqua, and differs in nothing but its figure, which is rounded and much shorter, and in the number of its seeds. It is never more than four times as long as broad, and often much shorter. Examples of it may be seen in the whitlow-grass, in the shepherd's purse, and in the horse radish. [See SILIQUA.]

SILICLE.

SILICO-FLUORIC ACID, n. When silicic acid is dissolved by hydrofluoric acid a gas is produced which is colourless, fuming strongly in the air. It is absorbed by water, and hydrated silicic acid is deposited, while an acid is found in the water, which is termed silico-fluoric acid. With bases this acid forms salts called silico-fluorides, which are nearly all insoluble.

SILICULO'SA, n. One of the two orders into which Linnæus divided his class Tetradynamia. It comprehends those plants which have a silicle. [See SILICLE.]

SILIC'ULOUS, } a. Having silicles, or SILIC'ULOSE, } pertaining to them.

SILIG'INOUS, } a. [L. siligo.] Made

SILIG'INOSE, } of fine wheat.

SILING, ppr. Straining.

SIL'NG-DISH, } n. [Dan. siler, to strain.] A colander.

SIL'QUA, n. [L.] With gold finers, a carat, six of which made a scruple.

SIL'QUA, } n. [L. siliqua.] In bot., a SIL'QUE, } species of fruit. It is characterized by having one or two cells, with many seeds, dehiscing by two valves, which separate from a central portion called the replum. It is linear in form, and is always superior to the calyx and corolla.

The seeds are attached to two placentæ, which adhere to the replum, and are opposite to the lobes of the stigma.

This kind of seed-vessel is possessed by a large number of plants belonging to the order Cruciferae, and examples may be seen in the stock or wall-flower, in the ladies' smock, and in the cabbage, turnip, and mustard.

SILIQUA'RIA, n. A genus of marine univalves found both fossil and recent. The shell is tabular, spiral at its beginning, continued in the middle of a ditch, to defend it when it is too wide.

SIL'LY, a. [The Sax. asealecan signifies to be dull, inert, lazy. This corresponds with the Ar. hasela, to be stupid, Heb. בבב, casal. This may be radically the same word with a prefix.] 1. Ori-Tetradynamia, the other being Silenosa. It comprehends those plants which have a silique, as the cabbage, turnip, and mustard.

SIL'IQUOSE, } a. [L. siliquosus.] Hav-

SIL'IQUOUS, } ing that species of pericarp called siliqua; as, siliquose plants.

SILK, n. [Sax. seole; Sw. silke; Russ. schilk; properly any thread, from Ar. salaka, to send or thrust in, to insert, to pass or go.] 1. The fine, soft thread produced by the larva of the insect called silkworm or Bombyx Mori.

That which we ordinarily call silkworm, is a thread composed of several finer threads, which the worm draws from its bowels, like the web of a spider, and with which the silkworm envelopes itself, forming what is called a cocoon. Raw silk is produced by the operation of winding off, at the same time, several of the balls or cocoons (which are immersed in hot water to soften the natural gum on the filament) on a common reel, thereby forming one smooth even thread. Before it is fit for weaving it is converted into one of three forms.—viz., singles, tram, or organzine. Singles (a collective noun) is formed of one of the reeled threads, being twisted in order to give it strength and firmness. Tram is formed of two or more threads twisted together. In this state it is commonly used in weaving, as the shoot or west. Thrown silk is formed of one, two, three, or more singles, according to the substance required, twisted together in a contrary direction to that in which the singles of which it is composed are twisted. This process is termed organzine, and the silk so twisted organzine.—2. Cloth made of silk. In this sense, the word has a plural, silks, denoting different sorts and varieties, as black silk, white silk, coloured silks.—Virginia silk, a plant of the genus Periploca, which climbs and winds about other plants, trees, &c.

SILK, a. Pertaining to silk; consisting of silk.

SILK COTTON-TREE, n. A tree of the genus Bombax, the B. ceita, Linn., growing to an immense size; a native of both the Indies. It is so called because the seed capsule contains a downy substance like silk, which is employed for stuffing mattresses and cushions in India. This tree is cultivated in the Mauritius, where there are two varieties. In the West Indies the wood is used in the construction of canoes, and is formed into laths for roofs, and other domestic purposes.

SILKEN, a. (silk'n.) [Sax. seolcen.]

1. Made of silk; as, silken cloth; a silken veil.—2. Like silk; soft to the touch.—3. Soft; delicate; tender; smooth; as, mild and silken language.—4. Dressed in silk; as, a silken wanton.

SILKEN, v. t. (silk'n.) To render soft or smooth.

SILKENED, pp. Rendered soft or smooth.

SILK-GRASS, n. A filamentous plant, of the genus Yucca.

SILK'INESS, n. [from silky.] The qualities of silk; softness and smoothness to the feel.—2. Softness; effeminacy; pusillanimity. [Little used.]

SILK'MAN, n. [silkworm and man.] A dealer in silks.

SILK'-MERCER, n. [silk and mercator.] A dealer in silks.

SILK'-MILL, n. A factory for reeling, spinning, and manufacturing silk.

SILK'-THROWER, } n. One who SILK'-THROWSTER, } winds, twists, spins, or throws silk, to prepare it for weaving.

SILK'-WEAVER, n. [silk and weaver.] One whose occupation is to weave silk stuffs.

SILK'-WEED, n. A plant of the genus Asclepias (also called wild cotton), whose seed-vessels contain a long silky down.

SILK'-WORM, n. [silk and worm.] The worm which produces silk, the larva of a lepidopterous insect called the Bombyx Mori. [See BOMBYX.] Silk-worms are said to have been first introduced into the Roman empire from China, in the reign of Justinian.

SILK'-WORM-GUT, n. A substance prepared from the entrails of silkworms, used in making lines for angling.

SILK'Y, a. Made of silk; consisting of silk.—2. Like silk; soft and smooth to the touch.—3. Pliant; yielding.—In bot., the surface of a plant is said to be silky when it is covered with long, very slender, close-pressed, glistening hairs.

SILL, or CILL, n. [Sax. syl, syle, syll; Fr. seuil; G. schwelle; W. sail, syl, or seiler; foundation; seiliaw, to found; L. solum; allied to solid. The primary sense is probably to lay, set, or throw down.] 1. Properly, the basis or foundation of a thing; appropriately, a piece of timber on which a building rests; the lowest timber of any structure; as, the sills of a house, of a bridge, of a loom, and the like.—2. In arch, the horizontal piece of timber or stone at the bottom of a framed case; such as that of a door or window.—Ground sills, are the timbers on the ground which support the posts and superstructure of a timber building. The word sill is also used to denote the bottom pieces which support quarter and truss partitions.—Sills of the ports, or portsills, in ship-building, pieces of oak-timber let in horizontally between the frames, to form the upper and lower sides of the ports.—3. The shaft or thill of a carriage. [Local.]

SIL'LABUB, n. A liquor made by mixing wine or cider with milk, and thus forming a soft curd.

SIL'LLY, adv. [from silly.] In a silly manner; foolishly; without the exercise of good sense or judgment.

SIL'LIManITE, n. A mineral found in Saybrook in Connecticut, so named in honour of Professor Silliman of Yale College. It occurs in long, slender, rhombic prisms, engaged in gneiss. Its colour is dark grey and hair brown; lustre shining upon the external planes, but brilliant and pseudo-metallic upon those produced by cleavage in a direction parallel with the longer diagonal of the prism. Hardness about the same with quartz. Specific gravity, 3.410.

SIL'LINESS, n. Weakness of understanding; want of sound sense or judgment; simplicity; harmless folly.

SIL'LOCK, n. The name given in the Orkney islands to the fry of the coal-fish, a congener of the cod; also spelled sillok, sillik, and selloh.

SIL'LOn, n. [Fr.] In fort, a work raised in the middle of a ditch, to defend it when it is too wide.

SIL'LY, a. [The Sax. asealecan signifies to be dull, inert, lazy. This corresponds with the Ar. hasela, to be stupid, Heb. בבב, casal. This may be radically the same word with a prefix.] 1. Originally, harmless, simple, guileless; innocent.—2. Weak in intellect; foolish; witless; destitute of ordinary strength of mind; simple; as, a silly man; a silly child.—3. Proceeding from want of understanding or common judgment; characterized by weakness or folly; unwise; as, silly thoughts; silly actions; a silly scheme; writings stupid or silly.—4. Weak; helpless.

SILQUA.

SILquaria anguina.

After long storms...

With which my silly bark was toss'd.†

Spenser.

SIL'LYHOW, † n. [Sax. sælig, happy, prosperous, and houwe, a hood.] The membrane that covers the head of the fetus.—In Scotland, a film or membrane stretched over the heads of children new-born is called a sillyhow, that is, a holy or fortunate cap or hood.

SIL'PHA, n. A genus of coleopterous insects known in English as the carrion-beetle.

SIL'PHIDÆ, n. The name given by Leach to a family of coleopterous insects, belonging to the section Pentamera, and subsection Necrophaga, having five distinct joints in all the tarsi, and the mandibles terminated in an entire point, and not notched. It comprehends the genera Necrophorus, Necrodes, Oiceoptoma, Silpha, Phosphuga, &c. These insects subsist upon carcasses, bones, and other putrifying substances. The most interesting genus is Necrophorus, which contains sexton-beetles or burying-beetles. The carrion-beetle belongs to the genus Silpha. [See NECROPHORUS.]

SILT, n. [Sw. sylta, to pickle.] 1. Saltiness, or salt marsh or mud.—2. A deposit of mud or fine earth, from running or standing water.

SILT, v. t. To choke, fill, or obstruct with silt or mud. Sometimes silt up is the term used.

SILT'ING, ppr. Choking, filling, or obstructing with silt or mud.

SILURE, } n. The sheat-fish; also, a SILUR'US, } name of the sturgeon.
SILURIAN ROCKS or STRATA.

The name given by Murchison to a series of rocks forming the upper subdivision of the sedimentary strata found below the old red sandstone, and formerly designated the greywacke series. These strata are well developed in that part of England and Wales formerly included in the ancient British kingdom of the Silures.

SILURIDÆ, n. A family of fishes of the order Malacopterygii, placed by Cuvier between the Escoidæ or pike-tribe, and the Salmonidæ or family of bony plates; the foremost ray of the dorsal and pectoral fins almost always consists of a strong bony ray, often serrated either in front or behind, or on both sides. The mouth is almost always provided with barbules. The only known European species of Silurus is the Silurus glanis, Linn., a fish of a very large size, which is found in the lakes of Switzerland, in the Danube, the Elbe, and all the rivers of Hungary. It takes its prey by lying in wait for it. The flesh, which is fat, is used in some places for the same purposes as lard.

SILURIDANS, n. plur. The Siluridæ; the family of fishes of which the Silurus is the type.

SIL'VA, n. [L.] A collection of poems, written also Sylva.—2. The natural history of the forest trees of a country.

SIL'VAN, a. [L. silva, a wood or grove. It is also written sylvan.] 1. Pertaining to a wood or grove; inhabiting woods.—2. Woody; abounding with woods. Betwixt two rows of rocks, a sylvan scene. Dryden.

[See SYLVAN.]

SIL'VAN, n. Another name of tellurium.

SILVA'NUS, n. An Italian rural deity, so called from Lat. sylva, a wood. He is usually represented with a sickle in his right hand, and a bough in his left. He is described as the protector of herds and trees from wolves and lightning, the god of agriculture, or the defender of boundaries.

SIL'VER, n. [Sax. seolfer, siluer; G. silber; Sw. silfver. Qu. Russ. serebro; r for l.] 1. A metal of a white colour and lively brilliancy. It has neither taste nor smell; its specific gravity is 10.552, according to Bergman, but according to Kirwan it is less. A cubic foot weighs about 660 lbs. Its ductility is little inferior to that of gold. It is harder and more elastic than tin or gold, but less so than copper, platinum, or iron. It is superior to gold in lustre, but inferior to it in malleability; it is, however, so malleable that it may be beaten into leaves not exceeding the 100,000th part of an inch in thickness. It is not altered by air or moisture, but is blackened or tarnished by sulphuretted hydrogen. The only pure acids which act upon silver are the nitric and sulphuric. It is found native in thin plates or leaves, or in fine threads, or it is found mineralized by various substances; it is also found in the state of sulphuret, constituting the varieties of black and vitreous silver ore. It likewise occurs in combination with several other metals, and more especially with the sulphurets of lead. Great quantities of this metal are furnished by the mines of South America, and it is found in small quantities in Norway, Germany, Spain, the United States, &c. The numerous uses and applications of silver are well known. In its pure state it is too soft for coin, plate, and most ornamental purposes, and is therefore in such cases alloyed with copper, by which, in proper proportion, its colour is not materially impaired, and it is considerably hardened. The standard silver of our coin is an alloy of 11 oz. 2 dwts. of pure silver, and 19 dwts. of copper to the pound Troy, and this weight is coined into 66 shillings.—German silver, an alloy of copper, zinc, and nickel, which is now extensively used as a substitute for silver for ornamental purposes.—2.

Money; coin made of silver.—3. Any thing of soft splendour. Pallas...piteous of her plaintive cries, In slumber clos'd her silver-streaming eyes. Pope.

SIL'VER, a. Made of silver; as, a silver cup.—2. White like silver; as, silver hair.

Others on silver lakes and rivers bath'd Their downy breast. Milton.

3. White or pale; of a pale lustre; as, the silver moon.—4. Soft; as, a silver voice or sound. [Italian, suono argentino.]

SIL'VER, v. t. To cover superficially with a coat of silver; as, to silver a pin or a dial-plate.—2. To foliate; to cover with tinfoil amalgamated with quick-silver; as, to silver glass.—3. To adorn with mild lustre; to make smooth and bright.

And smiling calmness silver'd o'er the deep. Pope.

4. To make hoary.

His head was silver'd o'er with age. Gay.

SIL'VER-BEATER, n. [silver and beater.] One that foliates silver or forms it into a leaf.

SIL'VER-BUSH, n. A plant, a species of Anthyllis, the A. barba jovis, Linn.

SIL'VER-BUSKINED, a. Wearing buskins made of, or adorned with, silver.

SIL'VERED, pp. Covered with a thin coat of silver; rendered smooth and lustrous; made white or hoary.

SIL'VER-FIR, n. A species of fir, the Abies picea, Linn. It is a native of the mountains of the middle and south of Europe. Planks of indifferent quality, on account of their softness, are sawn from its trunk, which also yields Burgundy pitch, and Strasburg turpentine.

SIL'VER-FISH, n. A fish of the size of a small carp, having a white colour, striped with silvery lines. It is a variety of the Cyprinus auratus, Linn., or gold-fish.

SIL'VER-GLANCE, n. A mineral, a sulphuret of silver.

SIL'VER-GRAIN, n. The name given by persons who work on wood to the medullary rays.

SIL'VER-HAIRED, a. Having hair of the colour of silver.

SIL'VERING, ppr. Covering the surface with a thin coat of silver; foliating; rendering mildly lustrous; rendering white.

SIL'VERING, n. The art, operation, or practice of covering the surface of any thing with silver; as, the silvering of copper or brass.—2. The silvering thus laid on.

SIL'VER-LEAF, n. Silver foliated or beaten out into a thin leaf.

SIL'VERLING, n. A silver coin; Is. vii.

SIL'VERLY, adv. With the appearance of silver.

SIL'VERSMITH, n. [silver and smith.] One whose occupation is to work in silver, or in manufactures of which the precious metals form a part.

SIL'VER-THISTLE, } n. [silver and SIL'VERY-THISTLE, } thistle.] A plant, Carduus argentatus.

SIL'VER-TREE, n. A plant of the genus Protea, the P. argentea, Linn., so called from the appearance of the leaves, which are lanceolate and silky. It is a large evergreen shrub with handsome foliage, a native of the Cape of Good Hope.

SIL'VER-WEED, n. A plant of the genus Potentilla, the P. anserina, Linn., called also goose-grass, and wild tansy. [See POTENTILLA.]

Sly Silurus (Silurus glanis).

the salmons. The family Siluridæ constitutes a very extensive section of fishes, the species of which are, for the most part, confined to the fresh waters of warm climates. They present great diversity of form, but their most obvious external characters are the want of true scales: the skin is generally naked, but in parts protected by large SIL'VERY, a. [from silver.] Like silver; having the appearance of silver; white; of a mild lustre.

Of all the enamel'd race whose silvery wing Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring.
Pope.

2. Besprinkled or covered with silver.
SIM'AR. In arch., another name for Cyma. [See CYMATIUM.]
SIM'AGRÉE, f. n. [Fr. simagrée.] Grimace.

SIM'AR, † n. [Fr. simarre.] A woman's robe.

SIMAR'UBA, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Simarubaceæ. The bark of the root of S. officinalis, a tall tree, a native of Guyana, and of Jamaica, is also called simaruba. It is a tough, fibrous, bitter bark; the infusion is occasionally used in medicine as a tonic.

SIMARUBA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of arborescent or shrubby exogens, inhabiting the tropics. The plants of this order are all intensely bitter. The wood of Quassia is well known. The Simaruba versicolor is so bitter that no insects will attack it.

SIM'IA, n. [L. simus, flat-nosed.] The generic name applied by Linnæus to all the quadrumanous mammals (monkeys), except the lemurs. The Linnæan Simiæ are divided into numerous subgenera, to none of which the name Simia is now applied, except by some modern naturalists to the orang-outan, (Simia satyrus) and S. moris.

SIM'IADEÆ, n. A quadrumanous family of mammals, including apes, atele, baboons, cheiro-poda, chimpanzee, hylobates, lagothrix mycetes, nasalis, orang-outan, sakis, sapajous, semnopithecus, &c.

SIM'ILAR, a. [Fr. similaire; L. similis; W. heval, hevalyz; from mal, like, Gr. ἴσως.] The Welsh mal signifies small, light, ground, bruised, smooth, allied to mill, W. matu, to grind. But we are not confident that these words are of one family.] Like; resembling; having a like form or appearance. Similar may signify exactly alike, or having a general likeness, a likeness in the principal points. Things perfectly similar in their nature, must be of the same essence, or homogeneous; but we generally understand similar to denote a likeness that is not perfect. In geom., similar rectilinear figures are such as have their several angles equal each to each, and the sides about the equal angles proportional. Such figures are to one another as the squares of their homologous sides.—Similar segments of circles, are those which contain equal angles.—Similar curves, are curves whose equations are of the same form, and the ratio of the constants in those equations equal.—Similar arches of circles, are those which contain the same number of degrees and parts of a degree, or which are the same parts of their respective circles.—Similar solids, are such as are contained by the same number of similar planes, similarly situated, and having like inclinations to one another. Such solids are to one another as the cubes of their homologous sides.

SIMILAR'ITY, n. Likeness; resemblance; as, a similarity of features. There is a great similarity in the features of the Laplanders and Sanoïedes, but little similarity between the features of Europeans and the woolly-haired Africans.

SIM'ILARLY, adv. In like manner; with resemblance.

SIM'ILE, n. (sim'ily.) [L.] In rhet., similitude; a comparison of two things which, however different in other respects, have some strong point or points of resemblance; by which comparison, the character or qualities of a thing are illustrated or presented in an impressive light. Thus, the eloquence of Demosthenes was like a rapid torrent; that of Cicero, like a large stream that glides smoothly along with majestic tranquillity.

SIMIL'ITER, adv. [L. in like manner.] In law, the technical designation of the form by which either party, in pleading, accepts the issue tendered by his opponent.

SIMIL'ITUDE, n. [Fr. from L. similitudo.] 1. Likeness; resemblance; likeness in nature, qualities, or appearance; as, similitude of substance.

Let us make man in our image, man In our similitude. Milton.
Fate some future bard shall join In sad similitude of griefs to mine. Pope.

2. Comparison; simile. [See SIMILE.] Tasso, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods. Dryden.

3. In geom., the relation of figures that are similar to each other.

SIMILITU'DINARY, a. Denoting resemblance or comparison.

SIM'TLOR, n. A name given to an alloy of red copper and zinc, made in the best proportions to imitate silver and gold.

SIM'IOUS, a. [L. simia.] Pertaining to or like the monkey.

SIMITAR. See SCIMITAR.

SIM'MER, v. i. [Qu. Gr. ζυμω, ζυμωσι, to ferment.] To boil gently, or with a gentle hissing. Simmering is incipient ebullition, when little bubbles are formed on the edge of the liquor next to the vessel. These are occasioned by the escape of heat and vapour.

SIM'MERING, ppr. Boiling gently.

SIM'NEL, n. [Dan. simle; Sw. simla; G. semmel.] A kind of sweet cake; a bun.

SIMO'NIAC, n. [Fr. simoniaque. See SIMONY.] One who buys or sells preferment in the church.

SIMONI'ACAL, a. Guilty of simony.

—2. Consisting in simony, or the crime of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment; as, a simoniacal presentation.
SIMONI'ACALLY, adv. With the guilt or offence of simony.

SIMO'NIANS, n. plur. In eccles. hist., the followers of Simon Magus.

SIMO'NIANS, ST. See SAIN'T SIMONIANS.

SIMO'NIOUS, a. Partaking of simony; given to simony.

SIM'ONY, n. [from Simon Magus, who wished to purchase the power of conferring the Holy Spirit; Acts viii.] The crime of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment; or the corrupt presentation of any one to an ecclesiastical benefice for money or reward. By stat. 31 Elizabeth, c. vi., severe penalties are enacted against this crime. In the church of Scotland, simoniacal practices afford a ground for deposing a clergyman who has been guilty of them, or for depriving a probationer of his license.

SIMOOM, n. A hot, suffocating wind, that blows occasionally in Africa and Arabia, generated by the extreme heat of the parched deserts or sandy plains.

Its approach is indicated by a redness in the air, and its fatal effects are only to be avoided by falling on the face and holding the breath.

SIM'OUS, a. [L. simo, one with a flat nose, Gr. συσος.] 1. Having a very flat or snub nose, with the end turned up.—2. Concave; as the simous part of the liver.

SIM'ETER, v. i. To smile in a silly manner.

SIM'ETER, n. A smile with an air of silliness.

SIM'PERING, ppr. Smiling foolishly.
SIM'PERING, n. The act of smiling with an air of silliness.

SIM'PERINGLY, adv. With a silly smile.

SIM'PLE, a. [Fr. from L. simplex; sine, without, and plex, plica, doubling, fold.] 1. Single; consisting of one thing; uncompounded; unmingled; uncombined with any thing else; as, a simple substance; a simple idea; a simple sound.—2. Plain; artless; not given to design, stratagem, or duplicity; undeigning; sincere; harmless.

A simple husbandman in garments grey. Hubbard.

3. Artless; unaffected; unconstrained; inartificial; plain.

In simple manners all the secret lies. Young.

4. Unadorned; plain; as, a simple style or narration; a simple dress.—5. Not complex or complicated; as, a machine of simple construction.—6. Weak in intellect; not wise or sagacious; silly.

The simple believeth every word; but the prudent looketh well to his going; Prov. xiv.

7. In bot., only one, as a root, stem, or spike; divided on a petiole, as, a simple leaf; only one on a peduncle, as a simple flower; having only one set of rays, as an umbel; having only one series of leaflets, as, a simple calyx; not plumose or feathered, as a pappus.—A simple body, in chem., is one that has not been decomposed, or separated into two or more bodies. [See ELEMENTARY SUBSTANCES.]—Simple equation, in alge, an equation in which only the first power of the unknown quantity or quantities enter; as $7ax = b$; $3x + ax = b$. [See EQUATION.]—Simple quantity, that which consists but of one term; as ab, 3ax, &c.—Simple contract. In Eng. law, a debt by simple contract, is where the contract is ascertained, neither by matter of record, nor by deed or special instrument, but by mere oral evidence, or notes unsealed.

SIM'PLE, n. Something not mixed or compounded. In the materia medica, the general denomination of an herb or plant, as each vegetable is supposed to possess its particular virtue, and therefore to constitute a simple remedy. Simple, when applied to minerals and rocks, has reference to their homogeneity, and not to the number of elements which enter into their composition.

SIM'PLE, v. i. To gather simples or plants.

As simpling on the flowery hills he stray'd. Garth.

SIM'PLE-HEARTED, a. Having a simple heart.

SIM'PLE-MINDED, a. Artless; undeigning; unsuspecting.

SIM'PLE-MINDEDNESS, n. Artlessness.

SIM'PLE MINERAL, n. A mineral composed of a single substance. Rocks are generally aggregates of several simple minerals cemented together.

SIMPLENESS, n. The state or quality of being simple, single, or uncompounded; as, the simplicity of the elements.—2. Artlessness; simplicity.—3. Weakness of intellect.

SIMPLER, n. One that collects simples; an herbalist; a simplist.

SIMPLESS, for Simplicity or Silliness, is not in use.

SIMPLETON, n. A silly person; a person of weak intellect; a trifler; a foolish person.

SIMPLI'CIAN, n. An artless, unskilled, or undesigning person.

SIMPLICITY, n. [L. simplicitas; Fr. simplicité.] 1. Singleness; the state of being unmixed or uncompounded; as, the simplicity of metals or of earths.—2. The state of being not complex, or of consisting of few parts; as, the simplicity of a machine.—3. Artlessness of mind; freedom from a propensity to cunning or stratagem; freedom from duplicity; sincerity.

Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity neither misliked nor much regarded. Huyward.

4. Plainness; freedom from artificial ornament; as, the simplicity of a dress, of style, of language, &c. Simplicity in writing is the first of excellences.—

5. Plainness; freedom from subtlety or abstruseness; as, the simplicity of Scriptural doctrines or truth.—6. Weakness of intellect; silliness.—Simplicity, in the fine arts, is that quality in works of art, through which the elements whereof it is composed are arranged in the most natural order; and in which the ideas and images are presented to us, so that the principal objects are not eclipsed by the accessories, and the details are in due subordination to the whole.—Godly simplicity, in Script., is a fair, open profession and practice of evangelical truth, with a single view to obedience and to the glory of God.

SIMPLIFICATION, n. [See SIMPLIFY.] The act of making simple; the act of reducing to simplicity, or to a state not complex.

SIMPLIFIED, pp. Made simple or not complex.

SIMPLIFY, v. t. [L. simplex, simple, and facio, to make; Fr. simplifier.] To make simple; to reduce what is complex to greater simplicity; to make plain or easy.

The collection of duties is drawn to a point, and so far simplified. Hamilton.

It is important in scientific pursuits, to be cautious in simplifying our deductions. Nicholson.

This is the true way to simplify the study of science. Lavoisier, Trans.

SIMPLIFYING, pp. Making simple; rendering less complex.

SIMPLIST, n. One skilled in simples or medicinal plants.

SIMPLOCE. See SYMPLOCE.

SIMPLY, adv. Without art; without subtlety; artlessly; plainly.

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise By simply meek. Milton.

2. Of itself; without addition; alone.

They make that good or evil, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one nor the other. Hooker.

3. Merely; solely.
Simply the thing I am Shak.

4. Weakly; foolishly.

SIMULACHRE, n. [L. simulacrum.] An image.

SIMULAR, n. [See SIMULATE.] One who simulates or counterfeits something.

SIMULATE, v. t. [L. simulo, from similis, like.] To feign; to counterfeit; to assume the mere appearance of something, without the reality. The wicked often simulate the virtuous and good.

SIMULATE, a. [L. simulatus.] Feigned; pretended.

SIMULATED, pp. or a. Feigned; pretended; assumed; artificially.

SIMULATING, pp. Feigning; pretending; assuming the appearance of what is not real.

SIMULATION, n. [Fr. from L. simulatio.] The act of feigning to be that which one is not; the assumption of a deceitful appearance or character. Simulation differs from dissimulation. The former denotes the assuming of a false character; the latter denotes the concealment of the true character. Both are comprehended in the word hypocrisy.

SIMULTANEOUS, a. [Fr. simultanée; from L. simul, at the same time.] Existing or happening at the same time; as, simultaneous events. The exchange of ratifications may be simultaneous.

SIMULTANEOUSLY, adv. At the same time.

SIMULTANEOUSNESS, n. The state or quality of being or happening at the same time; as, the simultaneousness of transactions in two different places.

SIMULTY, n. [L. simultas.] Private grudge or quarrel.

SIN, n. [Sax. sin and syn; G. sünde; Lapponic, Finnish, sindia; allied perhaps to Ir. sainim, to alter, to vary, to sunder. The primary sense is probably to depart, to wander.] 1. The voluntary departure of a moral agent from a known rule of rectitude or duty, prescribed by God; any voluntary transgression of the divine law, or violation of a divine command; a wicked act; iniquity. Sin is either a positive act in which a known divine law is violated, or it is the voluntary neglect to obey a positive divine command, or a rule of duty clearly implied in such command. Sin comprehends not actions only, but neglect of known duty, all evil thoughts, purposes, words, and desires, whatever is contrary to God's commands or law; 1 John iii.; Matt. xv.; James iv.

Sinners neither enjoy the pleasures of sin, nor the peace of piety. Rob. Hall.

Among divines, sin is original or actual. Actual sin, above defined, is the act of a moral agent in violating a known rule of duty. Original sin, as generally understood, is native depravity of heart; that want of conformity of heart to the divine will, that corruption of nature or deterioration of the moral character of man, which is supposed to be the effect of Adam's apostasy; and which manifests itself in moral agents by positive acts of disobedience to the divine will, or by the voluntary neglect to comply with the express commands of God, which require that we should love God with all our heart and soul and strength and mind, and our neighbour as ourselves. This native depravity or alienation of affections from God and his law, is supposed to be what the apostle calls the carnal mind or mindedness, which is enmity against God, and is therefore denominated sin or sinfulness.—Unpardonable sin, or blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, is supposed to be a malicious and obstinate rejection of Christ and the gospel plan of salvation, or a contemptuous resistance made to the influences and convictions of the Holy Spirit; Matt. xii.—2. A sin-offering; an offering made to atone for sin.

He hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; 2 Cor. v.

3. † A man enormously wicked. [Sin differs from crime, not in nature, but in application. That which is a crime against society, is sin against God.]

SIN, v. t. [Sax. singian, synqian.] 1. To depart voluntarily from the path of duty prescribed by God to man; to violate the divine law in any particular, by actual transgression, or by the neglect or non-observance, of its injunctions; to violate any known rule of duty.

All have sinned and come short of the glory of God; Rom. iii.

It is followed by against.

Against thee, thee only, have I sinned; Ps. li.

2. To offend against right, against men or society; to trespass.

I am a man
More sinn'd against than sinning. Shak.
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against th' eternal Cause. Pope.

SIN, for Since, [Scot. syne,] obsolete or vulgar.

SINAITIC, a. [from Sinai, the mountain.] Pertaining to Mount Sinai; given or made at Sinai.

SINAP'IS, n. Mustard, a genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Crucifereæ. [See MUSTARD.]

SINAP'ISINE, n. A white crystallizable substance extracted from mustard seed (sinapis alba). It is inodorous, and has a bitter taste, accompanied by the flavour of mustard.

SIN'APISM, n. [L. sinapis, sinape, mustard, G. senf, Sax. senep.] In phar., a cataplasm or poultice, which is a mixture of mustard and vinegar, applied to various parts of the body, and intended to supersede the use of a blister.

SINAP'OLINE, n. A new base obtained by depriving oil of mustard of its sulphur by the action of baryta, or of oxide of lead. It is soluble in hot water and alcohol, and crystallizes in shining, fatty, fusible scales. It combines with acids, and is separated from them by ammonia. It is a compound of 14 equivalents of carbon, 12 of hydrogen, 2 of nitrogen, and 2 of oxygen.

SIN'BORN, a. Derived from sin.

SINCE, prep. or adv. [Sw. sedan; D. sint; supposed to be contracted from Sax. sithian, which is from sithian, to pass, to go; and sithian may be the participle, and denote past, gone, and hence after, afterward. Sith in Saxon, has a like sense. Our early writers used sith, sithen, sithence; the latter is evidently a corruption of sithian. It may be doubted whether Sw. sen, Dan. seen, slow, late, is a contraction of this word; more probably it is not.] 1. After; from the time that. The proper signification of since is after, and its appropriate sense includes the whole period between an event and the present time. I have not seen my brother since January.

The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming; Gen. xxx.

Holy prophets, who have been since the world began; Luke i.; John ix.

Since then denotes, during the whole time after an event; or at any particular time during that period.—2. Ago; past; before this. "About two years since, an event happened," that is, two years having passed.—3. Because that; this being the fact that.

Since truth and constancy are vain,

Since neither love nor sense of pain,

Nor force of reason can persuade,

Then let example be obey'd. Glanville.

Since, when it precedes a noun, is called a preposition, but when it precedes a sentence it is called an adverb. The truth is, the character of the word is the same in both cases. It is probably an obsolete participle, and according to the usual classification of words, may be properly ranked with the prepositions. In strictness, the last clause of the passage above cited is the case absolute. "The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming," that is, my arrival being past. So, since the world began, is strictly, past the world began, the beginning of the world being past. In the first case, since, considered as a preposition, has coming, a noun, for its object, and in the latter case, the clause of a sentence. So we say, against your arrival, or against you come.—Since is considered by many grammarians as a conjunction when taken to signify because that, seeing, or seeing that.

SINCERE, a. [Fr. from L. sincerus, which is said to be composed of sine, without, and cera, wax; as if applied originally to pure honey.] 1. Pure; unmixed.

As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word; 1 Pet. ii.

A joy which never was sincere till now.

Dryden.

There is no sincere acid in any animal juice.

Arbutnot.

I would have all gallicisms avoided, that our tongue may be sincere.

Fellon.

[This sense is for the most part obsolete. We use the phrases, sincere joy, sincere pleasure, but we mean by them, unfeigned, real joy or pleasure.]

2. Unhurt; uninjured.

Th' inviolable body stood sincere.

Dryden.

3. Being in reality what it appears to be; not feigned; not simulated; not assumed or said for the sake of appearance; real; undissembling; honest; uncorrupt; not hypocritical or pretended. [This is the present use of the word.] Let your intentions be pure and your declarations sincere. Let love and friendship be sincere. No prayer can avail with a heart-searching God, unless it is sincere.

SINCERELY, adv. Honestly; with real purity of heart; without simulation or disguise; unfeignedly; as, to speak one's mind sincerely; to love virtue sincerely.

SINCERENESS, n. Sincerity.

SIP, v. i. To drink a small quantity; to take a fluid with the lips.

SIP, n. The taking of a liquor with the lips; or a small draught taken with the lips.

One sip of this

Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
Beyond the bliss of dreams. Milton.

SIPPE, } v. i. To ooze; to issue slowly;
SEEP, } as, a fluid. [Scotch.]

SIPHILIS, n. The venereal disease. [See SYPHILIS.]

from the root of sip.] 1. A bent pipe or tube whose legs are of unequal length, used for drawing liquor out of a vessel by causing it to rise over the rim or top. For this purpose, the shorter leg is inserted in the liquor, and the air is exhausted by being drawn through the longer leg. (See fig. 1.) The liquor then rises by the weight of the atmosphere to supply the vacuum, till it reaches the top of the vessel, and then descends in the longer leg of the siphon, and continues to flow till the vessel is emptied. The action of the siphon depends on the difference between the lengths of the two legs, estimated in a perpendicular direction, the shorter leg being always inserted in the liquid. Sometimes an exhausting tube is placed on the longer leg for exhausting the air by suction, (see fig. 2.) and causing the flow to commence, but the more general method is to fill the tube in the first place with the liquid, and then stopping the mouth of the longer leg, to insert the shorter leg in the vessel; upon removing the stop the liquid will immediately begin to flow. The limits within which the siphon can act, are determined by the specific gravity of the fluid. Water cannot be raised by the siphon to a greater height than 34 feet, nor mercury to a greater height than 30 inches.—Württemberg siphon, (so called from its having been first used at that place), a siphon with both legs equal, and turned up at the extremities; in which case, so long as the extremities are kept on the same level, it will continue always full and ready for use.

SIPHON, } n. In zool., the name
SIPHUNCLE, } of the membranous, and calcareous tubes which traverse the septa, and the interior of Polythalamous shells. Also applied to the tubular prolongation of the mantle in certain univalve and bivalve molluscs; and by Latreille to the mouth of certain suctorious, crustaceans, and apterous insects.

SIPHONAPTERANS, n. A name given by Latreille to an order of insects including those apterous species which have a mouth in the form of a siphon.

SIPHONIA, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Euphorbiaceae, consisting of two species. S. elastica, which yields the true caoutchouc, is a tree from 50 to 60 feet in height, common in the forests of Guiana and Brazil, and which has been introduced into the West Indies. Caoutchouc is the milky juice of the tree which exudes on incisions being made, and solidifies on exposure to the air. This tree was named Jatropha elastica by the younger Linnaeus.

SIPHONIC, a. Pertaining to a siphon.

SIPHONIFERA, n. M. D'Orbigny's name for an order of testaceous molluscs, including all those species which have a siphon contained within a polythalamous shell.

SIPHONBRANCHIATE, a. In malacology, provided with a siphon or tube, by which the water to be inhaled is carried to the gills, as in the siphonobranchiata. The molluscs which have no siphons are called asiphonobranchiate.

SIPHONBRANCHIATES, n. (σιφων, and βραγχια, gills.) The name of an order of gastropods, including those in which the branchial cavity terminates in a tube or siphon more or less prolonged, by which the respiratory current of water is received and expelled.

SIPHONOTOMES, n. (σιφων, and τομος, a mouth.) The name of a family of crustaceans, comprehending those which have a siphon-shaped mouth for suction.

SIPHUNCLE. See SIPHON.

SIPHUNCULAR, a. Pertaining to a siphuncle.

An outline or general delineation of any thing; a first rough or incomplete draught of a plan or any design; as, the sketch of a building; the sketch of an essay.—2. In painting, the first delineated idea of the artist's conception of a subject, in which are usually distinguishable the fire and enthusiasm with which the subject is expressed and felt. Sketches are made either with carbon, with the pen, or the pencil; in general, that method is preferred which seems to present the greatest promptitude and facility.

SKETCH, v. t. To draw the outline or general figure of a thing; to make a rough draught.—2. To plan by giving the principal points or ideas.

SKETCH'ED, ppr. Having the outline drawn.

SKETCH'INESS, n. State of being sketchy.

SKETCH'ING, ppr. Drawing the outline.

SKEW, adv. [G. schief; Dan. skiev.] Awry; obliquely. [See ASKEW.]

SKEW, † v. t. [Dan. skiev, to twist or distort.] 1. To look obliquely upon; to notice slightly.—2. † To shape or form in an oblique way.

SKEW, v. i. To walk obliquely. [Local.]

SKEW, a. Distorted; oblique; as, a skew bridge.

SKEW, n. A term used in the north for the coping of a gable.

SKEW'-BACK, n. In arch, that part of a straight or curved arch which recedes on the springing from the vertical line of the opening. In bridges, it is the course of masonry forming the abutment for the voussoirs of a segmental arch, and in iron bridges for the ribs.

SKEW BRIDGE, n. A bridge in which the passages over and under the arch intersect each other obliquely. In conducting a road or railway through a district in which there are many natural or artificial water-courses, or in making a canal through a country in which roads are frequent, such intersections very often occur. Before the introduction of the

of railways skew bridges were seldom erected, it being more usual to build the bridge at right angles, and to divert the course of the road or the stream to accommodate it. But in a railway, and sometimes in a canal, such a deviation from the straight line of direction is inadmissible, and it therefore becomes necessary to build the bridge obliquely.—Skew arch, an oblique arch.—which see.

SKEW-CORBEL, } n. A stone built SKEW-PUT, } into the bottom of a gable to support the coping above.

Skew-Corbels.

SKEWER, n. A pin of wood or iron for fastening meat to a spit, or for keeping it in form while roasting.

SKEWER, v. t. To fasten with skewers.

SKEWERING, ppr. Fastening with skewers.

SKEW-FILLET, n. A fillet nailed on a roof along the gable coping, to raise the slates there and throw the water away from the joining.

SKEW-WHEEL, n. In mech., skew-wheels are a species of bevel wheels having the teeth formed obliquely on the rim. Their purpose is to transfer motion between shafts whose axes do not admit of being united in a point. Such wheels being difficult of construction are only employed in cases of absolute necessity.

SKID, n. A curving timber to preserve a ship's side from injury by heavy bodies hoisted or lowered against it; a slider.—2. A shoe or drag used for preventing the wheels of a waggon or carriage from revolving when descending a steep hill.

SKIFF, n. [Fr. esquif; It. schifo; L. scapha; G. schiff; from the same root as ship.] A small light boat resembling a yawl. Also, a wherry, without masts or sails, usually employed to pass a river.

SKIFF, v. t. To pass over in a light boat.

SKILFUL, a. Knowing; well versed in any art; hence, dextrous; able in management; able to perform nicely any manual operation in the arts or professions; as, a skilful mechanic; a skilful operator in surgery.—2. Well versed in practice; as, a skilful physician. It is followed by at or in; as, skilful at the organ; skilful in drawing.

SKILFULLY, adv. With skill; with nice art; dextrously; as, a machine skilfully made; a ship skilfully managed.

SKILFULNESS, n. The quality of possessing skill; dextrousness; ability to perform well in any part or business, or to manage affairs with judgment and exactness, or according to good taste or just rules; knowledge and ability derived from experience.

SKILL, n. [Sax. scylan, to separate, to distinguish; Ice. and Sw. skiltia, Dan. skiller, to divide, sever, part; whence shield, that which separates, and hence that which protects or defends; D. scheelen, to differ; schillen, to peel or pare. Scale is from the root of these words, as in shell, Sax. scyl, sceal. In Heb. שכל, sahal, is foolish, perverse, and as a verb, to pervert, to be foolish or perverse; in Ch. to understand or consider, to look, to regard, to cause to know, whence knowledge, knowing, wise, wisdom, understanding; Rab. to be ignorant or foolish; Syr. to be foolish, to wander in mind, also to cause to understand, to know, to perceive, to discern, also to err, to do wrong, to sin, to fail in duty; whence foolish, folly, ignorance, error, sin, and understanding; Sam. to be wont or accustomed, to look or behold. The same verb with ש, Heb. שכל, sahal, signifies to understand, to be wise, whence wisdom, understanding, also to waste, to scatter or destroy, to bereave, also to prosper; Ch. to understand; שכלל, shahel, to complete, to perfect; שכלל, halal, with a prefix. This signifies also to found, to lay a foundation; Syr. to found, also to finish, complete, adorn, from the same root; Ar. shakala, to bind or tie, whence Eng. shackles; also to be dark, obscure, intricate, difficult, to form, to make like, to be of a beautiful form, to know, to be ignorant, to agree, suit, or become. These verbs appear to be formed on the root כל, hal, כיל, kul, to hold or restrain, which coincides in signification with the Ch. and Eth. כהל, hehal, to be able, L. calleo, that is, to strain, stretch, reach, and with כלל, kalal, to perfect, that is, to make sound, or to reach the utmost limit. The sense of folly, error, sin, perverseness, is from wandering, deviation, Gr. αποδρα: the sense of skill and understanding is from separation, discernment, or from taking, holding, or reaching to, for strength and knowledge are allied, and often from tension. The sense of ignorance and error is from wandering or deviation, or perhaps it proceeds from a negative sense given to the primary verb by the prefix, like ex in Latin, and s in Italian. The Arabic sense of binding and shackles is from straining. The Eng. shall and should belong to this family.]

1. The familiar knowledge of any art or science, united with readiness and dexterity in execution or performance, or in the application of the art or science to practical purposes. Thus we speak of the skill of a mathematician, of a surveyor, of a physician or surgeon, of a mechanic or seaman. So we speak of skill in management or negotiation.—2.† Any particular art.

SKILL,† v. t. To know; to understand.
SKILL,† v. i. To be knowing in; to be dextrous in performance.—2.† To differ; to make difference; to matter or be of interest. [This is the Teutonic and Gothic sense of the word.]

SKIMMED, pp. Taken from the surface; having the thick matter taken from the surface; brushed along.

SKIMMER, n. An utensil in the form of a scoop; used for skimming liquors.—2. One that skims over a subject.

[Little used.].—3. The Rynchops or Rhynchops of Linn., a genus of aquatic palmipede birds, so called because they skim over the surface of the water. These birds resemble the terns in their small feet, long wings, and forked tail; but are distinguished from all birds by their extraordinary bill, the upper mandible of which is shorter than the under, both being flattened so as to form simple blades, which meet without clasping. Their only mode of feeding is by skimming their aliment from the surface of the water with the lower mandible, which they effect while on the wing. Only one species is known, R. nigra, or black skimmer, called also cutwater and shearwater. It is found in the tropical and temperate parts of America. It is scarcely so large as a pigeon.

Skimmer (Rynchops nigra).

SKIM-MILK, } n. Milk from SKIM-MED-MILK, } which the cream has been taken.

SKIMMING, ppr. Taking from the surface, as cream from milk.—2. Gliding lightly along near the surface.

SKIMMINGS, n. plur. Matter skimmed from the surface of liquors.

SKIN, n. [Sax. scin; Sw. skinn; Dan. shind, a skin; G. schinden, to flay; Ir. scann, a membrane; W. ysgin, a robe made of skin, a pelisse, said to be from cin, a spread or covering. But in Welsh, cen is skin, peel, or rind. This may signify a covering, or a peel, from stripping.] 1. The natural covering of animal bodies. It consists of three layers; 1st. the epidermis, or scarf-skin, or cuticle, an albuminous membrane; 2d. the rete mucosum (mucous network), a thin layer of soft or pulpy matter, which performs the secretions, and is the seat of colour; 3d. the cutis vera, or true skin, a gelatinous texture of which leather is made, and which, when boiled in water, is converted into glue. The skin, besides its use as a covering, performs the functions of perspiration and absorption. The epidermis protects the terminations of the nerves, whose sensibilities would otherwise soon become blunted.—2. A hide; a pelt; the skin of an animal separated from the body, whether green, dry, or tanned. In commercial lan., the term is applied to the skins of those animals, as calves, deer, goats, lambs, &c., which, when prepared, are used in the lighter works of bookbinding, the manufacture of gloves, parchment, &c.; while the term hides is applied to the skins of the ox, horse, &c., which, when tanned, are used in the manufacture of shoes, harness, and other heavy and strong articles.—3. The body; the person; in ludicrous language.—4. The bark or husk of a plant; the exterior coat of fruits and plants.

SKIN, v. t. To strip off the skin or hide; to flay; to peel.—2. To cover with skin.—3. To cover superficially.—To skin up a sail in the bunt, in nautical lan., to make that part of the canvas which covers the sail when furled, smooth and neat, by turning the sail well up on the yards.

SLAVE, n. [D. slaaf; G. sclave; Dan. slave, sclave; Fr. esclave. Low Lat. sclavus, whence the schiaivo of the Italians, whose custom it once was to buy Slavonians for serfs. Vossius derives the word from old G. slaef or slave, now Skhlave, one of the Slavonic tribes reduced to bondage by Charlemagne.] 1. A person who is wholly subject to the will of another; one who has no will of his own, but whose person and services are wholly under the control of another. In the early state of the world, and to this day, among some barbarous nations, prisoners of war are considered and treated as slaves. The slaves of modern times are more generally purchased, like horses and oxen.—2. One who has lost the power of resistance; or one who surrenders himself to any power whatever; as, a slave to passion, to lust, to ambition.—3. A mean person; one in the lowest state of life.—4. A drudge; one who labours like a slave.

SLÄVERINGLY, adv. With slaver or drivel.

SLÄVERY, n. [See SLAVE.] Bondage; the state of entire subjection of one person to the will of another. Slavery is the obligation to labour for the benefit of the master, without the contract or consent of the servant; or it is the establishment of a right which gives one person such a power over another, as to make him absolute master of his life and property. But the condition of a slave is susceptible of innumerable modifications, and there are few nations, whether of ancient or modern times, among whom slavery has been long established, that have not enacted certain laws for limiting the power of a master over his slave. Slavery may proceed from crimes, from captivity, or from debt. Slavery is also voluntary or involuntary; voluntary, when a person sells or yields his own person to the absolute command of another; involuntary, when he is placed under the absolute power of another without his own consent. Slavery no longer exists in Great Britain, nor in any of her colonies, nor in the northern states of America.—2. The offices of a slave; drudgery.

SLÄVE-TRADE, n. [slave and trade.] The barbarous and wicked business of purchasing men and women, transporting them to a distant country, and selling them for slaves. The slave-trade was generally carried on by European nations between the western coasts of Africa and the American settlements. It was abolished as far as Great Britain was concerned in 1808, and the whole of the European nations have now agreed to put a stop to this abominable traffic.

SLÄVISH, a. Pertaining to slaves; servile; mean; base; such as becomes a slave; as, a slavish dependence on the great.—2. Servile; laborious; consisting in drudgery; as, a slavish life.

SLÄVISHNESS, n. The state or quality of being slavish; servility; meanness.

SLAVONIC, a. Pertaining to the Slavonians, or ancient inhabitants of Russia. [See SCYLVONIAN.]

SLAVONIC, n. The Slavonic language.

SLÄY, v. t. pret. Slew; pp. Slain. [Sax. slægan, slagan; Goth. slahan; G. schlagen; Dan. slaaer, to strike, to kill. The proper sense is to strike, and as beating was an early mode of killing, this word, like smite, came to signify to kill. It seems to be formed on the root of lay; as we say, to lay on.] 1. To kill; to put to death by a weapon or by violence. We say, he slew a man with a sword, with a stone, or with a club, or with other arms; but we never say, the sheriff slays a malefactor with a halter, or a man is slain on the gallows or by poison. So that slay retains something of its primitive sense of striking or beating. It is particularly applied to killing in battle, but is properly applied also to the killing of an individual, man or beast.—2. To destroy.

SLÄYER, n. One that slays; a killer; a murderer; an assassin; a destroyer of life.

SLÄYING, ppr. Killing; destroying life.

SLEAVE, n. [Ice. stefu.] The knotted or entangled part of silk or thread; silk or thread untwisted.

vehicle moved on runners or on low wheels, or without wheels, for the conveyance of heavy weights, as huge stones, &c. In Scotland and America it is called a sled. Sledges, or carriages without wheels, are much used in Russia and the northern countries of Europe during winter, instead of wheel-carriages.—3. In husbandry, a carriage without wheels, but shod with iron, on which ploughs and other implements are drawn from place to place. SLEEK, a. [D. lekken, to leak, to smooth, or sleek; geleht, made smooth; G. schlicht; allied to lich, or G. gleich, even, equal, like. See LIKE.] 1. Smooth; having an even, smooth surface; whence glossy; as, sleek hair.

Russian Sledge.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make. Dryden.

2. Not rough or harsh.

Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek. Milton.

SLEEK, † n. That which makes smooth; varnish.

SLEEK, v. t. To make even and smooth: as, to sleek the hair.—2. To render smooth, soft, and glossy.

Gentle, my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks. Shak.

SLEEK'IT, a. [Suio-Goth. sliha, to creep, or sleha, to lick; Ger. schleichen to insinuate one's self.] Parasitical in manner and design; flattering; deceitful.

SLEEKLY, adv. Smoothly; nicely.

SLEEKNESS, n. Smoothness of surface.

SLEEKSTONE, n. A smoothing stone.

SLEEKY, † a. Of a sleek or smooth appearance.

SLEEP, v. i. pret. and pp. Slept. [Sax. slepan, slæpan; G. schlafen. This word seems to be allied to words which signify to rest or to relax; G. schlaff.] 1. To take rest by a suspension of the voluntary exercise of the powers of the body and mind. The proper time to sleep is during the darkness of night.—2. To rest; to be unemployed; to be inactive or motionless; as, the sword sleeps in its sheath.—3. To rest; to lie or be still; not to be noticed or agitated. The question sleeps for the present.—4. To live thoughtlessly.

We sleep over our happiness. Atterbury.

5. To be dead; to rest in the grave for a time; 1 Thess. iv.—6. To be careless, inattentive, or unconcerned; not to be vigilant.

SLEEP, n. A natural and healthy, but temporary and periodical suspension of the functions of the hemispheres of the cerebrum, or in other words, of the intellectual powers. Sleep may be complete or incomplete. That state of an animal in which the voluntary exertion of his mental and corporeal powers is suspended, and he rests unconscious of what passes around him, and not affected by the ordinary impressions of external objects. Sleep is generally attended with a relaxation of the muscles, but the involuntary motions, as respiration and the circulation of the blood, are continued. The mind is often very active in imperfect sleep, but its powers not being under the control of reason, its exercises are very irregular. Sleep is the natural rest or repose intended by the Creator to restore the powers of the body and mind, when exhausted or fatigued. The quantity of sleep required by different individuals is various, from six to nine hours being the average proportion, but persons of very active dispositions and abstemious habits will be satisfied with four or five hours.—2. Slumber; rest; repose.—3. Death; rest in the grave.—Sleep of plants, a state of plants at night when their flowers close, the leaves become more erect, and fold themselves together, while vitality seems to retire from the periphery. This is chiefly owing to the withdrawal of the stimulus of light to which they are subjected during the day. With the approach of night, too, an important change takes place in the functions of plants, for instead of exhaling oxygen and absorbing carbon from the atmosphere, as, during the day, their action at night is directly the reverse. There are also plants, which, like certain animals, sleep through the day and are awake at night; and it has been ascertained that the leaves of plants kept constantly in the dark, open and close at regular intervals, as during sleep; so that there must be some cause of the sleep of plants, more intimately connected with their organization, than the mere withdrawal of light.

SLEEP-CHARGED, a. Heavy with sleep.

SLEEPER, n. A person that sleeps; also, a drone or lazy person.—2. † That which lies dormant, as a law not executed.—3. An animal that lies dormant in winter, as the bear, the marmot, &c.—4. In arch., a piece of timber on which are laid the ground joists of a floor, and also the ground joists themselves.—Sleepers are also pieces of timber, now rarely used, in foundations crossed by planks, &c., and at right angles to them, where the soil is bad.

Formerly the term was used to denote the valley rafters of a roof.—In railways, sleepers are beams of wood or blocks of stone firmly embedded in the ground to sustain the rails, which are usually fixed to the sleepers by means of cast-iron supports called chairs.—In Suffolk, the root stocks, when left in the soil, of such trees as are sawed off level with the surface, are called sleepers.—5. In ship-building, a thick piece of timber placed longitudinally in a ship's hold, opposite the several scarfs of the timbers, for strengthening the bows and stern-frame, particularly in the Greenland ships; or a piece of long compass-timber fayed and bolted diagonally upon the transoms.—6. In the glass trade, a large iron bar crossing the smaller ones, hindering the passage of coals, but leaving room for the ashes.—7. A platform.—8. A fish, Erucætus.

SLEEPFUL, a. Strongly inclined to sleep. [Little used.]

SLEEPFULNESS, n. Strong inclination to sleep. [Little used.]

SLEEPILY, adv. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.—2. Dully; in a lazy manner; heavily.—3. Stupidly.

SLEEPINESS, n. Drowsiness; inclination to sleep.

SLEEPING, ppr. or a. Resting; reposing in sleep.—Sleeping partners, in Scots law, partners of a company not proclaimed or known as such. They are otherwise called dormant partners: they differ in no respect from ordinary partners; and are equally liable for the debts of the company.—Sleeping of process, in the judicial procedure of the court of session, a process in the outer house is said to be asleep, when a year and a day have elapsed without any judicial order or interlocutor having been pronounced therein. SLIDE REST, n. In mech., an appendage to the turning lathe for facilitating and insuring accuracy in the motion of the cutting tool. The slide rest imparts motion to the cutting tool in two directions, the one being parallel and the other at right angles to the axis of the lathe.

SLIDE VALVE, n. In mech., a contrivance extensively employed in modern practice to supersede the use of cocks in regulating the admission or escape of steam or water. A familiar example of the slide valve is found in the ordinary steam valve of a steam engine. [See D-VALVE.]

SLIDING, ppr. Moving along the surface by slipping; gliding; passing smoothly, easily, or imperceptibly.

SLIDING, n. Lapse; falling; used in backsliding.—2. In mech., the motion of a body along a plane, when the same face, or surface of the moving body keeps in contact with the surface of the plane; and is thus distinguished from rolling, in which the several parts of the moving body come successively in contact with the plane on which it rolls.

SLIDING KEEL, n. A narrow oblong frame or platform let down vertically through the bottom of a small vessel, like the deepening of a keel throughout a portion of her length. Its use is like that of the leeboard, to sustain the vessel against the lateral force of the wind.

SLIDING-RULE, n. A mathematical instrument or scale, consisting of two parts, one of which slides along the other, and each having certain sets of numbers engraved on it, so arranged that when a given number on the one scale is brought to coincide with a given number on the other, the product or some other function of the two numbers is obtained by inspection. The numbers may be adapted to answer various purposes, but the instrument is chiefly used in gauging and for the mensuration of timber, to determine measure or quantity without compasses, by sliding the parts one by another.

SLIDING-SCALE, n. In British legislation, a device for regulating the prices of grain, by means of a variable tax upon it. The first sliding scale act was passed July 15, 1828; the second, April 29, 1842. Both have been abolished.

SLIGHT, a. [D. slegt; G. schlecht, plain, simple, mean; D. slegten, to level; G. schlechen, to lick. It seems that slight belongs to the family of sleeb, smooth. Qu. SLI'NESS, n. [from sly.] Dextrous artifice to conceal any thing; artful secrecy. [Often written Slyness.]

SLING, n. [D. slinger.] 1. An instrument for throwing stones, consisting of a strap and two strings which are attached to it. The stone is lodged in the strap, and the ends of the strings being held in the hand, the sling, with the stone in it, is whirled rapidly round in a circle, and the stone is thrown by letting go one of the strings. By means of a sling, a stone or other missile is projected with much greater velocity than could be given to it by the hand without such assistance. The velocity with which the projectile is discharged, is the same as that with which it is whirled round in a circle, having the string for its radius. The sling was a very general instrument of war among the ancients. With a sling and a stone David killed Goliath.—2. A throw; a stroke.—3. A kind of hanging bandage put round the neck, in which a wounded limb is sustained.—4. In nautical affairs, a rope fitted to encircle a cask, Franklin.

3. The popular name of a genus (Bradypus) of tardigrade edentate mammals,—a genus which comprises only two species, viz. Bradypus tridactylus or AI, about the size of a common cat, and Bradypus didactylus or Unau, about half the size of the former, both of South America. These animals are so called from the slowness of their motions on the ground, which is the necessary consequence of their disproportioned structure. They live on trees, and never remove from the one they are on until they have stripped it of every leaf. The sloths are exceedingly helpless when on the ground, and move with great difficulty; and hence the accounts of their slowness have been greatly exaggerated. They seem at home only when upon trees, resting or moving suspended beneath their branches, and are sometimes observed to travel from tree to tree, and along branches, with considerable celerity. The female produces but a single young one at a birth; which she carries on her back.

Two-toed Sloth (Bradypus didactylus).

SLOTHFUL, a. Inactive; sluggish; lazy; indolent; idle.

He that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster; Prov. xviii.

SLOTHFULLY, adv. Lazily; sluggishly; idly.

SLÜICE, n. [D. sluis, a sluice, a lock; G. schleuse, a floodgate, and schloss, a lock, from schliessen, to shut; Fr. echuse; It. chiusa, an inclosure.] 1. In a limited sense, this term is almost confined to the sliding gates commonly used in mill-streams, ponds, sewers, &c., to retain the water when necessary, or to allow it to escape in any required quantity, such gates being usually raised and lowered by means of a rack and pinion attached to the upper parts of the frame in which they slide. In a more extended application of the term, it embraces all kinds of floodgates, flaps, and other apparatus, used to stop, collect, or to retain water, and to let it off as occasion requires. According to this use of the word, a canal-lock may be considered as a double sluice. Sluices are extensively used in most hydraulic works, and exhibit great variety in their construction, according to the purposes which they are intended to serve. In mill-streams, they serve to keep back the water when the mill is at rest, and to regulate the supply, when the mill is going. They also act as wastes to allow the surplus water of a pond or reservoir to escape. Various self-acting sluices have been contrived for mill-streams, &c., to avoid the inconvenience and danger which might result from neglect, as well as to save the expense of a sluice-keeper.—2. An opening; a source of supply; that through which anything flows.

Each sluice of affluent fortune open'd soon. Harte.

SLÜICE, v. t. To emit by flood gates. [Little used.]

SMĒARED, pp. Overspread with soft or oily matter; soiled.

SMĒARING, ppr. Overspreading with any thing soft and oleaginous; soiling. SMĒARY, a. That smears or soils; adhesive. [Little used.]

SMĒATH, n. A sea fowl.

SMĒE'TITE, n. [Gr. σμεματις, deterring.] An argillaceous earth; so called from its property of taking grease out of cloth, &c.

SMĒED'DUM, n. [Sax. smedema, pollen, meal, fine flour.] The powder or finest part of ground malt; powder of whatever kind; sagacity, quickness of apprehension; spirit; mettle; liveliness. [Scotch.]

SMĒETH, † v. t. To smoke.

SMĒGMATIC, a. [Gr. σμεγματις, soap.]

Being of the nature of soap; soapy; cleansing; detersive.

SMELL, v. t. pret. and pp. Smelled, Smelt. [Etymol. uncertain.] To perceive by the nose, or by the olfactory nerves; to have a sensation excited in certain organs of the nose by particular qualities of a body, which are transmitted in fine particles, often from a distance; as, to smell a rose; to smell perfumes. To smell out, is a low phrase signifying to find out by sagacity. To smell a rat, is a low phrase signifying to suspect strongly.

SMELL, v. i. To affect the olfactory nerves; to have an odour or particular scent; followed by of; as, to smell of smoke; to smell of musk.—2. To have a particular tincture or smack of any quality; as, a report smells of calumny. [Not elegant.].—3. To practise smelling; Exod. xxx.—4. To exercise sagacity.

SMELL, n. The sense or faculty by which certain qualities of bodies are perceived through the instrumentality of the olfactory nerves; or the faculty of perceiving by the organs of the nose; one of the five senses. The essential part of the organ of smell consists of the expansion of the olfactory nerves, the first or most anterior of the nerves from the brain, whose minutest branches are distributed just beneath the mucous part of the nose. The air, passing through the nose, brings the effluvia or odiferous particles of bodies into contact with the olfactory nerves, the nerves transmit the impression to the brain, by means of which it is perceived by the mind. The human organ of smell is less developed than that of other mammalia, or even of birds. In different animals the sense of smell is adapted chiefly to that class of substances on which they feed. In the choice of food, which is the main object of the sense of smell, man generally, though almost unconsciously, and animals always, exercise the precaution of smelling, and they instinctively form a judgment according to the impression received. In eating also, much of that which is commonly attributed to the sense of taste, depends upon the odour of the food carried from the mouth to the nose. In some species of beasts, the smell is remarkably acute, particularly in the canine species.—2. Scent; odour; the quality of bodies which affects the olfactory organs; as, the smell of mint; the smell of geranium.

The sweetest smell in the air is that of the white double violet. Bacon.

SMELL'ED, } pret. and pp. of Smell.

SMELT, n. [Sax.] A small but delicious European fish of the genus Osmerus, the O. eperlanus, allied to the salmon, inhabiting the salt water about the months of rivers. The American smelt is the Osmerus viridescens, which inhabits the coasts of New England.

Smelt (Osmerus eperianus).

SMELT, v. t. [D. smelten; G. schmetzen; Sw. smälta, to melt. This is melt, with s. prefixed.] To melt, or fuse, as ore, for the purpose of separating the metal from extraneous substances.

SMELT'ED, pp. Melted for the extraction of the metal.

SMELT'ER, n. One that melts ore.

SMELT'ERY, n. A house or place for smelting ores.

SMELT'ING, ppr. Melting, as ore.

SMELT'ING, n. The operation by which the ores of iron, copper, lead, &c., are reduced to the metallic state by fusion. This operation requires to be conducted differently according to the different metallic ores. In regard to iron, the ore, after having been roasted or calcined in a kiln, in order to drive off the water, sulphur, and arsenic, with which it is more or less combined in its native state, is subjected to the heat of a blast furnace, along with certain proportions of coke and limestone, which latter serves as a flux. The furnace is charged with the materials from the top, and these being set fire to at the bottom, are allowed to burn, the combustion being afterwards accelerated by a blast from a blowing machine, the blast pipes of which are made to enter near the bottom of the furnace. The ore, coke, and limestone in the body of the furnace are acted upon by the heat, just as they would be in a close vessel, the oxygen of the ore combining with the carbon of the coke, and forming carbonic oxide, and thus gradually reducing the ore to the metallic state. The liquid metal, as it is thus formed, falls down to that part of the bottom of the furnace called the hearth, where there is an opening in the wall, at the mouth of which a stone is placed called the dam stone. Beyond this, an opening is made in the side of the outer wall, in order to run off the metal, when collected in sufficient quantity. On opening this hole, the metal is allowed to run off into a channel made in a kind of sand. From this channel, called the sow, numerous side channels are led, called pigs, and as the melted metal flows along the sow, it is frequently checked by the workmen, and made to flow into the side channels, and thus the masses of iron called pig iron are formed, the masses formed in the main channel being termed sow iron.

SMERK. See SMIRK.

SMER'KY, † a. Nice; smart; janty.

SMEW, n. A small species of the Merganserine family, Mergus Albellus, intermediate between the duck tribe, and the fish-eating divers. It is otherwise called the white nun. The hooded smew (Mergus cucullatus) is a beautiful species peculiar to America, and is usually found along the lakes and fresh water rivers, rather than near the sea. It is only accidentally found in Europe.

Smew (Mergus albellus).

SMICK'ER, v. i. [Sw. smickra, to flatter, Dan. smigrer.] To smirk; to look amorously or wantonly.

SMICK'ERING, ppr. Smirking; smiling affectedly.

SMICK'ERING, n. An affected smile or amorous look.

SMICK'ET, † n. dim. of Smock.

SMID'DY, n. [Sax. smiththa.] A smithy or smith's workshop. [Scotch.]

SMIFT, n. In mining, a match of paper, or other light combustible substance, for firing a charge of powder, as in a mine; a fuse.

SMIGHT, for Smite, in Spenser.

SMILA'CEÆ, n. [From Smilax one of the genera.] A small nat. order of plants, belonging to Lindley's retose group of monocotyledons. Lindley has placed two genera in this order, Smilax and Kipogonum. They are mostly herbaceous plants, with a woody stem and a tendency to climb. They are found in small quantities in most parts of the world, especially in Asia and North America, and are best known for the diuretic and demulcent powers of Smilax sarsaparilla, which also exist in other species of the same genus. Their leaves are usually reticulated in venation, thus differing from those of monocotyledons in general. The vascular bundles in the root are arranged in wedges, whereas those of the stem are arranged as in other endogens.

SMIL'ACINE, n. [Gr. σμιλαξ; L. smilax, the modern name of a genus of plants.] A white crystallizable compound, considered to be the active principle of the official species of smilax, or sarsaparilla. It is tasteless when solid, but bitter in solution. It is now ascertained to be an acid, and is called parillinic acid.

SMYLAX, n. A genus of plants, type of the nat. order Smilacæ. The species form evergreen climbing shrubs, of which a few are found in temperate, but the majority in warm and tropical regions of both hemispheres. Though the original species (S. aspera), is an inhabitant of the South of Europe, those now most celebrated for yielding the different kinds of sarsaparilla are natives of South America. But S. aspera still continues to be employed for medicinal purposes in the South of Europe, where it is called Sarsaparilla Italica. [See SARSAPARILLA.]

SMILE, v. i. [Sw. smila; Dan. smiler.]

1. To contract the features of the face in such a manner as to express pleasure, moderate joy, or love and kindness, the contrary to frown. The smiling infant in his hand shall take The crested basilisk and speckled snake.

Pope.

She smiled to see the doughty hero slain.

Pope.

2. To express slight contempt by a smiling look, implying sarcasm or pity; to sneer.

'Twas what I said to Craggs and Child,

Who prais'd my modesty and smiled. Pope.

3. To look gay and joyous; or to have an appearance to excite joy; as, smiling spring; smiling plenty.

The desert smiled,

And paradise was open'd in the wild.

Pope.

4. To be propitious or favourable; to favour; to countenance. May heaven smile on our labours.

SMILE, v. t. To awe with a contemptuous smile.

SMILE, n. A peculiar contraction of the features of the face, which naturally expresses pleasure, moderate joy, approbation, or kindness; opposed to frown.

Sweet intercourse of looks and smiles.

Milton.

2. Gay or joyous appearance; as, the smiles of spring.—3. Favour; countenance; propitiousness; as, the smiles of Providence.—4. An expression of countenance resembling a smile, but indicative of opposite feelings, as, contempt, scorn, &c.; as, a scornful or derisive smile.

SMIRK, v. i. (smerk). [Sax. smercian.] To smile affectedly or wantonly.—2. To look affectedly soft or kind; as, a smirking countenance; a smirking grace.

SMIRK, n. An affected smile.

SMIRK, a. Nice; smart; janty.

So smirk, so smooth he prick'd his ears.

Spenser.

SMIT, sometimes used for Smitten.

[See SMITE.]

SMITE, v. t. pret. Smote; pp. Smitten.

SMIT. [Sax. smitan, to strike; smitan ofer or on, to put or place, that is, to throw; D. smyten, to smite, to cast, or throw; G. schmeissen, to smite, to fling, to kick, to cast or throw, to fall down, that is, to throw one's self down; Sw. smida, to hammer or forge; Dan. smider, to forge, to strike, to coin, to invent, devise, counterfeit; D. smeeden, to forge; G. schmieden, to coin, forge, invent, fabricate. The latter verb seems to be formed on the noun schmied, a smith, or schmiede, a forge, which is from the root of smite. This verb is the L. mitto, Fr. mettre, with s prefixed. It is no longer in common use, though not entirely obsolete.] 1. To strike; to throw, drive or force against, as the fist or hand, a stone or a weapon; to reach with a blow or a weapon; as, to smite one with the fist; to smite with a rod or with a stone.

SMOKE, n. [Sax. smoca, smec, smic; G. schmauch; W. ysmwg, from mog, smoke; Ir. much; allied to muggy, and possibly allied to the Gr. σμυξω, to consume slowly, to waste.] 1. The exhalation, visible vapour, or substance that escapes or is expelled in combustion from the substance burning. It is particularly applied to the volatile matter expelled from vegetable matter, or wood, coal, peat, &c. The matter expelled from metallic substances is more generally called fume, fumes. In its more extended sense, the word smoke is applied to all the volatile products of combustion, which consist of gaseous exhalations charged with minute portions of carbonaceous matter, or soot; but, as often used in reference to what are called smoke-consuming furnaces, the term is frequently employed to express merely the carbonaceous matter which is held in suspension by the gases. Various methods have been devised for the removal of smoke or for the cure of smoky chimneys, and also for the consumption and purification of smoke. The methods employed for the latter purpose all merge into one common principle; namely, that of mixing air with the combustible vapours and gases generated by the action of heat on pit coal, so that they may be made to burn with flame, and become entirely converted into incombustible and transparent invisible vapours and gases.—2. Vapour; watery exhalations.

SMOKE, v. i. [Sax. smocian, smecan, smocan; G. schmauchen.] 1. To emit smoke; to throw off volatile matter in the form of vapour or exhalation. Wood and other fuel smokes when burning; and smokes most when there is the least flame.—2. To burn; to be kindled; to rage; in Scripture.

The anger of the Lord and his jealousy shall smoke against that man; Deut. xxix.

3. To raise a dust or smoke by rapid motion.

D. smet, a spot or stain; Sw. smitta, to taint; D. smoddig, dirty; smoddere, to smut; G. schmutz.] 1. A spot made with soot or coal; or the foul matter itself.—2. A disease also called dust-brand, incidental to cultivated corn, by which the farina of the grain, together with its proper integuments, and even part of the husk, is converted into a black soot-like powder. This disease does not affect the whole body of the crop, but the smutted ears are sometimes very numerous dispersed throughout it. Some attribute the smut to the richness of the soil, and others consider it as a hereditary disease, transmitted by one generation to another through the seed. Willdenow and Mirbel regard it as a small fungus, the Uredo segetum; but Bauer believes it to be a proper disease, indicated by a morbid swelling of the ear. Various schemes have been tried for the prevention of smut, but the safest mode for the farmer to pursue, is never to sow grain from a field in which the smut has prevailed.—Smut balls, or Pepper brand, a disease analogous to smut. It consists of a black powdery matter, having a disagreeable odour, occupying the interior of the grain of wheat. This powdery matter consists of minute balls filled with spores, and is caused by the attack of Uredo caries or fetida.—3. Obscene

SNAIL, n. [Sax. snægel, snægel; G. schnecke; dim. from the root of snake, sneak.] 1. The English name for those slimy, slow-creeping molluscs, also called slugs (Limax, Linn.) and shell-snails (Helix, Linn.). The shell-snails have a shell composed of carbonate of lime, combined with coagulated albumen, secreted by the skin of the insect, the mouth of the shell being extended by layers of the substance to the margin. The head is furnished with four horns or tentacula; and on the superior pair, at the extremity, the eyes are placed. Both the upper and lower tentacula are retractile, and can be completely inverted so as to be drawn into the interior of the body. Some snails are terrestrial, others are aquatic, but are compelled to visit the surface of the water from time to time for the purpose of respiring. Cuvier arranges snails under Pulmonæa, his first order of gastropodous molluscs. [See SLUG.]—2. A drone; a slow-moving person.

SNÖW, n. [a contracted word; Sax. snaw; Goth. snaiwes; G. schnee; Ir. sneacht; Fr. neige; L. nix, nivis. The Latin Eng. nivis, is contracted from nigis, like Eng. bov, from Sax. bugan. The prefix s is common in the other languages.] 1. Frozen vapour; watery particles congealed into white crystals in the air, and falling to the earth.

Snow is formed in the air, when the temperature of the atmosphere sinks below the freezing point. The particles of moisture contained in the atmosphere are then frozen, and form flakes, which descend to the earth. These have great diversities of density, and display innumerable varieties of the most beautiful forms. Generally speaking, when examined by the microscope, they present modifications of stelliform and hexagonal crystals; and frequently they consist of a star of six rays, formed of prisms united at angles of 60°, from which other prisms shoot at similar angles, giving the whole an appearance of exquisite beauty and great regularity. Sometimes, however, snow presents no traces of crystallization, but falls in a fine powder; and in this case it is supposed to have been formed near the surface of the earth. The bulk of new-fallen snow is about ten or twelve times greater than that of the water obtained by melting it. Snow answers many valuable purposes in the economy of nature. Accumulated upon high regions, it serves to feed, by its gradual melting, streams of running water, which a sudden increase of water, in the form of rain, would convert into destructive torrents or standing pools; and in many countries it tempers the burning heats of summer by cooling the breezes which pass over it. In severer climates it serves as a defence against the rigours of winter, by protecting vegetation from the frost, and by affording a shelter to animals which bury themselves under it. Even in more temperate climates it is found that vegetation suffers more from an open winter than when the fields, during that season, lie hid beneath a snowy covering; for as snow is a slow conductor of heat, a coating of it prevents the earth from parting quickly with its warmth, and at the same time protects it from the cold of the atmosphere.—Red snow, snow of a red tint, which appears to be met with in all parts of the world. The colouring matter of this substance is not clearly ascertained, some considering it to proceed from a species of red algæ, Protococcus nivalis, and others referring it to the presence of an animalcule, Philodina roseola, and others again refer it to both of these causes. [See HAIL.]—2. A vessel equipped with two masts, resembling the main and fore masts of a ship, and a third small mast just abaft the main-mast, carrying a try-sail.

SNOW, v. i. [Sax. snawan.] To fall in snow; as, it snows; it snowed yesterday.

SNOW, v. t. To scatter like snow.

SNOW-BALL, n. [snow and ball.] A round mass of snow, pressed or rolled together.

SNOW-BALL TREE, n. A flowering shrub of the genus Viburnum, the V. opulus, or quelder rose. [See GUELDER ROSE, VIBURNUM.]

SNOW-BIRD, } n. Popular names

SNOW-BUNTING, } of Emberiza nivalis, or Plectrophanes nivalis, a gregarious bird which is a native of the arctic regions. In winter it visits Britain and other temperate regions, and is supposed to be the harbinger of severe weather. On its first arrival in this country it is very lean, but quickly grows fat, and is then excellent eating. It sings very sweetly, sitting on the ground; and does not perch, but runs about like the lark. Several other birds which make their appearance in winter are popularly called snow-birds; as, the Fringilla nivalis of Europe and the Fringilla hiemalis of America.

SNOW-BROTH, n. [snow and broth.]

Snow and water mixed; very cold liquor.

SNOW-CAPPED, or SNOW-CAPT, a. Capped or crowned with snow.

SNOW-CROWNED, a. [snow and crown.] Crowned or having the top covered with snow.

SNOW-DEEP, n. [snow and deep.] A plant.

SNOW-DRIFT, n. [snow and drift.] A bank of snow driven together by the wind.

SNOW-DROP, n. [snow and drop.] A well-known garden plant of the genus Galanthus, the G. nivalis, nat. order Amaryllidaceæ. It bears solitary, drooping, and elegant flowers, which appear in February. It is a native of Britain, and found in woods, orchards, meadows, pastures, &c.

SNOW-FED, a. Originated or augmented by melted snow; as, a snow-fed stream.

SNOW-FLAKE, n. A small mass of falling snow.

SNOW-FLAKE, n. A British plant, of the genus Lencoum, the L. æstivum, with a bulbous root, and white drooping flowers, which appear in May. It grows in moist meadows. [See LEUCOCUM.]

SNOW-FLECK, n. The snow-bunting.

SNOW-FLOOD, n. A flood from melted snow.

SNOWLESS, a. Destitute of snow.

SNOWLIKE, a. Resembling snow.

SNOW-LINE, n. The limit of perpetual snow, or the elevation at which mountains are covered with perpetual snow. As the temperature of the atmosphere continually diminishes, as we ascend, from the lower into the higher strata, there must be in every latitude a certain limit of elevation at which the temperature of the air is reduced to the freezing point. This limit is called the snow line, or line of perpetual congelation, and the mountains which rise above it are always covered with snow. The snow line varies according to latitude, being highest near the equator and lowest near the poles. Local circumstances also affect it, as the configuration of the country, the quantity of snow falling annually, &c. From these circumstances, the snow line is at different heights in the same latitude, and the fact of a mountain being perpetually covered with snow is no sure indication of its height.

SNOW-PLOUGH, n. A simple machine, operating like a plough, but upon a much larger scale, for clearing away the snow from roads. It usually consists of boards framed together, so as to form an acute angle in front, and spread out behind to any required distance. The angular point or edge is made to enter the snow, and the machine being propelled by horses harnessed to the centre framework, the snow is thrown off by the boards to the sides of the road, and thus a free passage is opened up for wheel-carriages, &c. The same name is given to an instrument or machine to be driven before a locomotive, for throwing snow from a railway and clearing the rails.

SNOW-SHOE, n. [snow and shoe.] A shoe or racket worn by men travelling on snow, to prevent their feet from sinking into the snow.

SNOW-SLIP, n. [snow and slip.] A large mass of snow which slips down the side of a mountain, and sometimes buries houses.

SNOW-STORM, n. A storm with falling snow.

SNOW-WATER, n. Water produced from the melting of snow. It is found to contain more oxygen than rain or river water; and, hence, it causes iron to rust more rapidly.

SNOW-WHITE, a. [snow and white.] White as snow; very white.

SNOW-WREATH, n. A deposit of snow.

SNOWY, a. White like snow.—2. Abounding with snow; covered with snow.

The snowy top of cold Olympus. Milton.

3. White; pure; unblemished.

SNUB, † n. [D. sneb; a different orthography of snip, sneap, neb, nib, nip.] A knot or protuberance in wood; a snag.

SNUB, v. t. [supra.] To nip; to clip or break off the end. Hence,—2. To check; to reprimand; to check, stop, or rebuke with a tart sarcastic reply or remark. [This is the same word radically as sneap, sneb, and is the word chiefly used.]

SNUB, v. t. To snub a cable or rope, in sea lan, is to check it suddenly in running out.

SNUB, † v. i. [G. schnauben, to snub, to snort, to pant for, to puff.] To sob with convulsions.

SNUB'BING, n. Among seamen, a term used to denote the method of checking the sudden jerk of the cable or hawser, after the anchor is let go, or otherwise.

SNUB-NOSE, n. A short or flat nose.

SNUB-NOSED, a. Having a short, flat nose.

SNUDGE, v. i. [Dan. sniger. See SNUG.] To lie close; to snug. [Not in use or vulgar.]

SNUDGE, † n. A miser, or a sneaking fellow.

SNUFF, n. [D. snuff, whence snuffen, to snuff, to scent; G. schnuppe; allied to snub, neb, nib.] 1. The burning part of a candle wick, or that which has been charred by the flame, whether burning or not.—2. A candle almost burnt out.—3. Pulverized tobacco and various other powders, taken or prepared to be taken into the nose. Tobacco is the usual basis of snuff; but small quantities of other articles are frequently added to it, to vary its pungency, flavour, scent, &c. In fact the varieties and names of snuff are innumerable and are perpetually changing. There are, however, three principal sorts, the first, granulated; the second, an impalpable powder; and the third, the bran or coarse part remaining after sifting the second sort. Snuff for medicinal purposes, constituting a sternutatory, has been made from Asarum Europæum.—4. Resentment; huff; expressed by a snuffing of the nose.—To take a thing in snuff, is to be angry at it.

SNUFF, v. t. [D. snuffen; G. schnuffen, to take snuff; schnuppen, to snuff a candle.] 1. To draw in with the breath; to inhale; as, to snuff the wind.—2. To scent; to smell; to perceive by the nose.—3. To crop the snuff, as of a candle; to take off the end of the snuff.

SNUFF, v. i. To snort; to inhale air with violence or with noise; as dogs and horses.—2. To turn up the nose and inhale air in contempt; Mal. ii.—3. To take offence.

SNUFF'BOX, n. A box for carrying snuff about the person. Snuff boxes are made of every variety of pattern, and of an endless variety of materials.

SNUFF'ERS, n. plur. An instrument for cropping the snuff of a candle.

SNUFF'ING, ppr. Drawing in with the breath; scenting.—2. Cropping the snuff, as of a candle.

SNUFF'ING, n. The act of snuffing.

SNUF'FLE, v. i. [D. snuffelen; G. nüffeln and schnuffeln; Dan. snüveler, to snuffle, to give a crabbed answer, to snub.] To speak through the nose; to breathe hard through the nose when obstructed.

Some senseless Phillis, in a broken note, Snuffing at nose. Dryden.

SNUF'FLER, n. One that snuffles or speaks through the nose when obstructed.

SNUF'FLES, n. Obstruction of the nose by mucus.—2. A malady of dogs.

SNUF'FLING, n. A speaking through the nose.

SNUFF'TAKER, n. One that takes snuff, or inhales it into the nose.

SNUFF'TAKING, n. The act of taking or inhaling powdered tobacco.

SNUFF'Y, a. Soiled with snuff. [Familiar.]

SNUG, v. i. [Dan. sniger, to sneak; Sax. snican, to creep; probably allied to nigh, close. See SNAKE.] To lie close; as, a child snugs to its mother or nurse.

SNUG, a. [Sw. snugg, neat.] 1. Lying close; closely pressed; as, an infant lies snug.—2. Close; concealed; not exposed to notice.

At Will's

Lie snug, and hear what critics say. Swift.

3. Being in good order; all convenient; neat; as, a snug little farm.—4. Close; neat; convenient; as, a snug house.—5. Silly or insidiously close.

When you lay snug, to snap young Damon's goat. Dryden.

SNUG'GERY, n. A snug, warm habitation. [Familiar.]

SNUG'GLE, v. i. [from snug.] To move one way and the other to get a close place; to lie close for convenience or warmth.

SNUG'LY, adv. Closely; safely.

SNUG'NESS, n. Closeness; the state of being neat or convenient.

SNYING, n. Among ship-carpenters, a term for a circular plank, placed edge-wise, to work in the bows of a ship.

SO, v. t. Stand still; a word used in the imperative only, by milkmaids. [See the next word.]

SO, adv. [Goth. swa; Sax. swa; G. so; perhaps L. sic, contracted, or Heb. shavah, to compose, to set. In Ir. so is this or that. It is the same in Scots. It is from some root signifying to set, to still, and this sense is retained in the use of the word by milkmaids, who say to cows, so, so, that is, stand still, remain as you are; and in this use the word may be the original verb.] 1. In like manner, answering to as, and noting comparison or resemblance; as with the people, so with the priest.—2. In such a degree; to that degree.

Why is his chariot so long in coming? Judges v.

3. In such a manner; sometimes repeated so and so; as, certain colours, mingled so and so.—4. It is followed by as.

There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so as it is a hard calumny upon our soil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

But in like phrases, we now use that; "so that it is a hard calumny;" and this may be considered as the established usage.—5. In the same manner.

Use your tutor with great respect, and cause all your family to do so too.

6. Thus; in this manner; as, New York, so called from the Duke of York. I know not why it is, but so it is.

It concerns every man, with the greatest seriousness, to inquire whether these things are so or not. Tillotson.

7. Therefore; thus; for this reason; in consequence of this or that.

It leaves instruction, and so instructors, to the sobriety of the settled articles of the church. Holyday.

God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion. Locke.

This statute made the clipping of coin high treason, which it was not at common law; so that this was an enlarging statute. Blackstone.

8. On these terms, noting a conditional petition.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness, So may the guilt of all my broken vows, My perjuries to thee be all forgotten. Rowe. So here might be expressed by thus, that is, in this manner, by this mutual forgiveness.—9. Provided that; on condition that. [L. modo.]

So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying... though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking and reasoning, it may be overlooked. Atterbury.

I care not who furnishes the means, so they are furnished. Anon.

10. In like manner, noting the concession of one proposition or fact and the assumption of another; answering to as.

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it. Swift.

11. So often expresses the sense of a word or sentence going before. In this case it prevents a repetition, and may be considered as a substitute for the word or phrase. "France is highly cultivated, but England is more so," that is, more highly cultivated.

To make men happy, and to keep them so. Creech.

12. Thus; thus it is; this is the state. How sorrow shakes him!

So now the tempest tears him up by 't roots. Dryden.

13. Well; the fact being such. And so the work is done, is it?—14. It is sometimes used to express a certain degree, implying comparison, and yet without the corresponding word as, to render the degree definite.

An astringent is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passages is necessary. Arbutnot.

That is, not perfectly proper, or not so proper as something else not specified.

—15. It is sometimes equivalent to be it so, let it be so, let it be as it is, or in that manner.

There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. Shak.

16. It expresses a wish, desire, or petition.

Ready are the appellant and defendant... So please your highness, to behold the fight. Shak.

17. So much as, however much. Instead of so, we now generally use as; as much as, that much; whatever the quantity may be.—18. So so, or so repeated, used as a kind of exclamation; equivalent to well, well; or it is so, the thing is done.

So, so, it works; now, mistress, sit you fast. Dryden.

19. So so, much as it was; indifferently; not well nor much amiss.

His leg is but so so. Shak.

20. So then, thus then it is; therefore; the consequence is.

So then the Volscians stand; but as at first Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road

Upon's again. Shak.

21. So forth, more of the like kind; as, he complained much of the pressure of the times, the difficulty he had of procuring a subsistence, and so forth.

Note.—So, when it signifies, in like manner; in such manner; in this way; therefore; for this reason; provided that, is usually classed by grammarians among conjunctions.

SOAK, v. t. [Sax. socian; W. swgław, to soak, and sugaw, to suck. To soak is to suck in; G. saugen, Ar. sakai, to imbibe, that is, to draw; Ir. sughthach, soaking. Heb. Ch. and Syr. קָסַה, shakah.] 1. To steep; to cause or suffer to lie in a fluid till the substance has imbibed what it can contain; to macerate in water or other fluid; as, to soak cloth; to soak bread.—2. SOAP, n. [Sax. sape; G. seife; Fr. savon; L. sapo; Gr. σαπων: W. sebon; Hindoo, sabon, savin; Pers. sabun; Ar. sabunon.] A compound of fatty substances or of one or more of the oil-acids, more especially with the metallic alkalies potassa or soda, but also with some other salifiable bases. The most common soaps are either margarates or oleates of potassa or soda, made by boiling some common oil with the ley of wood-ashes; used in washing and cleansing, in medicine, &c. There are many different kinds of soaps, but those commonly employed may be divided into three classes; 1. Fine white soaps, scented soaps, &c.; 2. Coarse household soaps; 3. Soft soaps. White soaps are generally combinations of olive oil and carbonate of soda. Perfumes are occasionally added; or various colouring matters stirred in while the soap is semifluid. Common household soaps are made chiefly of soda and tallow. Yellow soap is composed of tallow, resin, and soda, to which some palm oil is occasionally added. Soft soaps are generally made with potash instead of soda, and fish-oil with the addition of a little tallow. Excellent soaps are made from palm-oil and soda. Soap is soluble in pure water and in alcohol; the latter solution jellies when concentrated; and is known in medicine under the name of opodeldoc, and when evaporated to dryness, it forms what is called transparent soap. The earths and common metallic oxides form insoluble soaps, which possess no detergent power.

SOAP, v. t. [Sax. sapan; G. seifen.] To rub or wash over with soap.

SOAPBERRY-TREE, n. A tree of the genus Sapindus, the S. saponaria. [See SAPINDUS.]

SOBOLIFEROUS, a. [Lat. soboles, a young shoot, and fero, to bear.] In bot., producing young plants from a creeping stem or soboles underground.

SOBRIETY, n. [Fr. sobriété; L. sobrietas, from sobrius.] 1. Habitual sobriety or temperance in the use of spirituous liquors; as when we say, a man of sobriety.—2. Freedom from intoxication.

Public sobriety is a relative duty. Blackstone.

3. Habitual freedom from enthusiasm, inordinate passion, or overheated imagination; calmness; coolness; as, the sobriety of riper years; the sobriety of age.—4. Seriousness; gravity without sadness or melancholy.

Mirth makes them not mad, Nor sobriety sad. Denham.

SOBRIQUET', n. [Fr.] A nickname or a burlesque appellation for a by-name. [Often erroneously printed soubriquet.]

SOC, or SOKE, n. [Sax. soc, from socan, secan, to seek, to follow, L. sequor.]

1. Properly, the sequela, secta, or suit, or the body of suitors; hence, the power or privilege of holding a court in a district, as in a manor; jurisdiction of causes, and the limits of that jurisdiction.—2. Liberty or privilege of tenants excused from customary burdens.—3. An exclusive privilege claimed by millers of grinding all the corn used within the manor in which the mill stands, or of being paid for the same as if actually ground. [Provincial.]

SOC'AGE, n. [from soc, supra, a privilege.] In English law, a tenure of lands and tenements by a certain or determinate service; a tenure distinct from chivalry or knight's service, in which the render was uncertain. The service must be certain, in order to be denominated socage; as to hold by fealty and twenty shillings rent. So-rage is of two kinds; free socage, where the services are not only certain, but honourable; and villain socage, where the services, though certain, are of a baser nature.

SOC'AGER, n. A tenant by socage; a socman.

SO'-CALLED, a. So named.

SOC'COTRINE ALOES, n. The best kind of aloes, which are obtained from the leaves of the aloe soccotrina, Linn., a native of the Cape of Good Hope, and the Island of Soccotora, but now commonly cultivated in the West Indies. [See ALOES.]

SOCIABILITY, n. [Fr. sociabilité.] Sociableness; disposition to associate and converse with others; or the practice of familiar converse.

SO'CIABLE, a. [Fr. sociable; L. sociabilis, from socius, a companion, probably from sequor, to follow. See SEEK.] 1. That may be conjoined; fit to be united in one body or company; as, sociable parts united in one body.—2. Ready or disposed to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild, and sociable to man. Addison.

3. Ready and inclined to join in company or society; or frequently meeting for conversation; as, sociable neighbours.—4. Inclined to converse when in company; disposed to freedom in conversation; opposed to reserved and taciturn.—5. Free in conversation; conversing much or familiarly. The guests were very sociable.

SO'CIABLE, n. An open carriage with seats facing each other, and thus convenient for conversation; hence the name.

SO'CIABLENESS, n. Disposition to associate; inclination to company and converse; or actual frequent union in society or free converse. This word may signify either the disposition to associate, or the disposition to enter into familiar conversation, or the actual practice of associating and conversing.

Withers, adieu! yet not with thee remove Thy martial spirit or thy social love. Pope.

3. Friendly; consisting in union or mutual converse.—4. Disposed to unite in society. Man is a social being.—Social statics, that branch of sociology which treats of the conditions of the stability or equilibrium of the different parts of society, or the theory of the mutual action and reaction of contemporaneous social phenomena on each other, giving rise to what is called social order.—Social dynamics, that branch of sociology which treats of the conditions of the progress of society from one epoch to another. [See SOCIOLOGY.]

SO'CIALISM, n. A social state in which there is a community of property among all the individuals composing it, a state of things in which there are no individual or separate rights in property. It is otherwise termed agrarianism and communism.

SOC'IALIST, n. One who advocates a community of property among all the citizens of a state. Some of this sect contend also for a community of females, or a promiscuous intercourse of the sexes; and they have likewise been accused of holding various other heterodox principles. They are also called Owenites from Robert Owen, one of the first promulgators of the social tenets in this country. In France, parties holding similar opinions are called Fourierists and St. Simonians, from Fourier and St. Simon, two noted socialist leaders. They are also called communists.

SOCIALITY, n. Socialness; the quality of being social.

SOC'IALIZE, v. t. To render social.—2. To form or regulate according to socialism.

SOC'IALLY, adv. In a social manner or way.

SOC'IALNESS, n. The quality of being social.

SOC'CIATE, † v. i. To associate.

SOCIETY, n. [Fr. société; L. societas, from socius, a companion. See SOCIABLE.] 1. The union of a number of rational beings; or a number of persons united, either for a temporary or permanent purpose. Thus the inhabitants of a state or of a city constitute a society, having common interests; and hence it is called a community. In a more enlarged sense, the whole race or family of man is a society, and called human society.

The true and natural foundations of society, are the wants and fears of individuals. Blackstone.

2. Any number of persons associated for a particular purpose, whether incorporated by law, or only united by articles of agreement; a fraternity. Thus we have bible societies, missionary societies, and charitable societies for various objects; societies of mechanics and learned societies; societies for encouraging arts, &c. Some kinds of societies are called clubs. [See CLUB, No. 4.]—3. Company; a temporary association of persons for profit or pleasure; for commercial purposes, for carrying on public enterprises, &c. In this sense, company is more generally used.—4. Company; fellowship. We frequent the society of those we love and esteem.—5. Partnership; fellowship; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society can sort?

Milton.

Heaven's greatness no society can bear.

Dryden.

6. Persons living in the same neighbourhood, who frequently meet in company and have fellowship. Literary society renders a place interesting and agreeable.—7. In Connecticut, a number of families united and incorporated for the purpose of supporting public worship, is called an ecclesiastical society. In Massachusetts, such an incorporation is called a parish.

SOCIN'IAN, a. [from Socinus, a native of Sienna, in Tuscany, the founder of the sect of Socinians in the 16th century.] Pertaining to Socinus, or his religious creed.

SOCIN'IAN, n. One of the followers of Socinus. [See UNITARIAN.]

SOCIN'IANISM, n. The tenets or doctrines of Socinus, who held Christ to have been a mere man inspired, denied his divinity and atonement, and the doctrine of original depravity.

SOCIN'IANIZE, v. t. To conform or adapt to Socinianism.

SOCIOL'OGY, n. [L. socius, a companion, and Gr. λογος, discourse.] Social science, or the science of society, according to the Positive Philosophy of M. Comte. It treats of the general structure of human society, the laws of its development, and the progress of actual civilization. Sociology is the most complex of all the sciences, and consists of derivative truths, verified by experience from psychology and the laws of ethology, or the science of the formation of character. The laws of social phenomena are nothing but the laws of the thoughts, feelings, and actions of men united together in the social state; and these laws are approximate generalizations obtained from the past history and present observation of all stages of civilization. And as men's thoughts, feelings, and actions are subject to fixed laws, that is, uniform sequences, so must also the phenomena of society, that is, of aggregates of men. The fundamental problem of society is to discover the laws by which any state of society produces the state which follows it, and takes its place, and to show by deduction that these laws are derivative from those of human nature. The subject matter of the sciences of man, and of society, is peculiar in varying from age to age, and in being progressive. The laws of human nature, and of the external circumstances in which men are placed, form their characters, and men themselves in turn mould and shape circumstances for themselves and their posterity. The institutions of a people are the results of their ideas, and as society advances, mental qualities tend more and more to prevail over bodily, and aggregates of men over individuals. The elements of permanent social union are education through life, which is always a restraining discipline, the feeling of allegiance or loyalty to something fixed and permanent, and a strong and active principle of nationality or union for common interest. Such are some of the leading principles of sociology; but to understand the science aright, it is necessary to have recourse to M. Comte's great work entitled "Cours de Philosophie Positive," and the last book of Mill's System of Logic.

SOC'CIUS CRIMINIS, [L.] A term in Scots law, signifying an accomplice or associate in the commission of a crime.

SOCK, n. [Sax. socc; L. soccus; G. soche; Fr. socque. Qu. L. siccio, to dry, Gr. σακος, a bag.] 1. The shoe of the ancient actors of comedy. Hence the word is used for comedy, and opposed to bushin or tragedy.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskin here, Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear.

Dryden.

2. A garment for the foot, like the foot of a stocking; a short stocking.—3. A ploughshare.

SOCKET, n. [Ir. soicead.] 1. The little hollow tube or place in which a candle is fixed in the candlestick.

And in the sockets oily bubbles dance.

Dryden.

2. Any hollow thing or place which receives and holds something else; as the sockets of the teeth or of the eyes.

His eyeballs in their hollow sockets sink.

Dryden

Gomphosis is the connection of a tooth to its socket.

Wiseman

SOCKET-CHISEL, n. A chisel made with a socket; a stronger sort of chisel, used by carpenters for mortising, and worked with a mallet.

SOCK'LESS, a. Destitute of socks or shoes.

SOC'CLE, n. [See SOCK.] In arch., a flat square member of less height than its horizontal dimension, serving to raise pedestals, or to support vases, or other ornaments. It differs from a pedestal in being without base or pedestal. A continued socle is one continued round a building.

SOE'MAN, n. [See SOCAGE.] One who holds lands or tenements by socage.

SOE'MANRY, † n. Tenure by socage.

SOE'OME, † n. A custom of tenants to grind corn at the lord's mill.

SOE'OTRINE, a. Socotrine aloes, a kind of aloes from Socotra, an isle in the Indian ocean. [See SOCOTRINE.]

SOERAT'IC, } a. Pertaining to SOERAT'ICAL, } crates the Grecian sage, or to his language or manner of teaching and philosophizing. The Socratic method of reasoning and instruction was by interrogatories. Instead of laying down a proposition authoritatively, this method led the antagonist or disciple to acknowledge it himself by dint of a series of questions put to him. It was not the object of Socrates to establish any perfectly evolved system of doctrine, so much as to awaken by his discourses a new and more comprehensive pursuit of science, which should direct itself to all that is knowable. To him is ascribed two of the very first principles of science, namely, the inductive method and the definition of ideas.

SOERAT'ICALLY, adv. In the Socratic method.

SOERATISM, n. The doctrines or philosophy of Socrates.

SOE'RATIST, n. A disciple of Socrates.

SOD, n. [D. soode; G. sode; W. sodi, to set.] Turf; sward; that stratum of earth on the surface which is filled with the roots of grass, or any portion of that surface. It differs from clod, which may be a compact mass of earth without roots; but sod is formed by earth held together with roots.

SOD, a. Made or consisting of sod.

SOD, v. t. To cover with sod; to turf.

SOD, pret. of Seethe; also the passive participle. [See SODDEN.]

SODA, n [G. soda; Sp. soda or sosa, glasswort, barilla.] 1. The protoxide of the metal sodium, formerly called, though not appropriately, mineral alkali. It has likewise been called a fixed alkali, in contradistinction from ammonia, which is a volatile alkali. Soda, or protoxide of sodium, is formed when sodium is burned in dry air or oxygen. It is a white powder, which attracts moisture and carbonic acid from the air. It consists of one equivalent of sodium, and one of oxygen. When this protoxide is dissolved in water, there is formed the true alkali, or hydrate of soda, called also caustic alkali. It is a white brittle mass of a fibrous texture, having a specific gravity of 1.536. It has a most corrosive taste and action upon animal substances, dissolving readily both in water and alcohol, attracting carbonic acid from the atmosphere, and falling thereby into an efflorescent carbonate. It forms soaps with tallow, oils, wax, rosin; dissolves wool, hair, silk, horn, alumina, silica, sulphur, and some metallic sulphurets. It consists of 77.66 soda and 22.34 water. With acids, soda forms salts which are soluble in water, and many of which crystallize. The carbonate of soda is the soda of commerce in various states, either crystallized, in lumps, or in a crude powder called soda-ash. The soda of commerce is supplied chiefly from two sources, the burning of marine vegetables, such as common seaweed, and the salsola soda, which furnish the impure alkalies called help and barilla; and the decomposition of common salt, or rather, perhaps, the sulphate of soda, obtained by the decomposition of salt, by sulphuric acid. The chief uses of soda are in the manufacture of glass, and of hard soap. The carbonate of soda is used in washing, and is a powerful detergent, although milder than carbonate of potash. It is also used in medicine. Sulphate of soda is glauca salts. [See SODIUM.]

SO'DA-ASH, n. Impure carbonate of soda.

SO'DALITE, n. A mineral; so called from the large portion of mineral alkali which enters into its composition. It is of a bluish green colour, and found crystallized or in masses.

SODALITY, n. [L. sodalitas, from sodalis, a companion.] A fellowship or fraternity.

SO'DA POWDERS, n. A substitute for soda-water. They are usually put up in blue and white papers, the former containing half a drachm of carbonate of soda and the latter 25 grains of tartaric acid. These are separately dissolved in water, and the solutions mixed and drunk while effervescing. The mixture, however, forms a tartrate of soda, and not a carbonate, as in the case of soda-water.

SO'DA-WATER, n. A refreshing drink formed by dissolving carbonate of soda in water, and supersaturating it with carbonic acid under pressure. It is useful in cases of debility of the stomach, accompanied with acidity.

SOD'DED, pp. Covered with sod; turfed.

SOD'DEN, pp. of Seethe. Boiled; seethed.

SOD'DY, a. [from sod.] Turfy; consisting of sod; covered with sod.

SO'DIUM, n. The metallic base of soda, discovered by Davy in 1807. He obtained it by a process exactly similar to that by which he procured potassium, which it strongly resembles in many properties. Gay-Lussac and Thénard soon afterwards procured it in greater quantity by decomposing soda by means of iron. Sodium is a silver-white metal, having a very high lustre. It has not the bluish tinge of potassium, but, if any, rather a very slight yellowish tint, so that it resembles silver, while potassium resembles mercury. Its specific gravity is 0.9348; it melts at 200°, being rather less fusible than potassium, but it is on the other hand somewhat more volatile. It rapidly attracts oxygen from the air, and must therefore be kept under naphtha. It decomposes water instantly, but does not spontaneously take fire when thrown on water, as potassium does. When heated in air or oxygen it takes fire and burns with a very pure and intense yellow flame. It is perhaps more abundant in our globe than any other metal, for it constitutes $\frac{3}{4}$ of all the sea salt existing in sea-water, in the water of springs, rivers, and lakes, in almost all soils, and in the form of rock-salt. Sea-salt is a compound of chlorine with sodium. Sodium also occurs as oxide of sodium or soda, in a good many minerals; and more especially in the form of carbonate, nitrate, and borate of soda. Soda is contained in sea plants, and in land plants growing near the sea. It occurs also in most animal fluids. The only important oxide of sodium is the protoxide. [See SODA.]

SOD'OMITE, n. An inhabitant of Sodom.—2. One guilty of sodomy.

SODOMIT'ICAL, a. Relating to sodomy.

SOD'OMY, n. A crime against nature.

SOË, n. [Fr. seau.] A large wooden vessel for holding water; a cowl. [Local.]

SOË/FUL, n. As much as a soe will hold.

SOËVER, so and ever, found in compounds, as in whosoever, whatsoever, wheresoever. See these words. It is sometimes used separate from the pronoun; as, in what things soever you undertake, use diligence and fidelity.

SO'FA, n. [probably an Oriental word. Qu. Sw. söfa, to lull to sleep.] An elegant long seat, usually with a stuffed bottom, and raised stuffed back and ends. Sofas are variously made. The sofa of the Orientals is a kind of alcove raised half a foot above the floor, where visitors of distinction are received. It is also a seat by the side of the room covered with a carpet.

SO'FETT, n. A small sofa.

SO'FIT, n. [Fr. soffite; It. soffitta.] In arch., the under side of an opening; the lower surface of a vault or arch. It also denotes the under horizontal surface of an architrave between columns, and the under surface of the corona of a cornice.

SO'FL, n. A Persian word employed to designate religious persons, otherwise termed dervishes.

SO'FISM, or SU'FISM, n. The mystical doctrines of the class of Mahometan religionists called sofis.

SOFT, a. [Sax. softe, softa. The D. has zagt, Sw. sachta, D. sagte, and the G. sanft, in a like sense, but whether allied to soft, may be questioned.]

1. Easily yielding to pressure; the contrary of hard, as, a soft bed; a soft peach; soft earth.—2. Not hard; easily separated by an edged instrument; as, soft wood. The chestnut is a soft wood, but more durable than hickory, which is a very hard wood. So we say, a soft stone, when it breaks or is hewed with ease.—3. Easily worked; malleable; as, soft iron.—4. Not rough, rugged, or harsh; smooth to the touch; delicate; as, soft silk; soft raiment; a soft skin.—5. Delicate; feminine; as, the softer sex.—6. Easily yielding to persuasion or motives; flexible; susceptible of influence or passion. In both these senses, soft is applied to females, and sometimes to males; as, a divine of a soft and servile temper. One king is too soft and easy. L'Étrange.

7. Tender; timorous. However soft within themselves they are, To you they will be valiant by despair.

Dryden

8. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe or unfeeling; as, a person of a soft nature.—9. Civil; complaisant; courteous; as, a person of soft manners. He has a soft way of asking favours.—10. Placid; still; easy.

On her soft axle while she paces even, She bears thee soft with the smooth air along.

Milton

11. Effeminate; viciously nice.

An idle soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures.

Broome

12. Delicate; elegantly tender.

Her form more soft and feminine.

Milton

13. Weak; impressive.

The deceiver soon found this soft place of Adam's. [Not elegant.]

Glennville

14. Gentle; smooth or melodious to the ear; not loud, rough, or harsh; as, a soft voice or not; a soft sound; soft accents; soft whispers.—15. Smooth; flowing; not rough or vehement.

The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays.

Milton

Soft were my numbers, who could take offence?

Pope

16. Easy; quiet; undisturbed; as, soft slumbers.—17. Mild to the eye; not strong or glaring; as, soft colours; the soft colouring of a picture.

The sun shining on the upper part of the clouds, made the softest lights imaginable.

Brown

18. Mild; warm; pleasant to the feelings; as, soft air.—19. Not tinged with an acid; not hard; not astringent; as, soft water is the best for washing.—20. Mild; gentle; not rough, rude, or irritating.

A soft answer turneth away wrath; Prov. xv.

21. Weak; foolish. [Familiar.]

SOFT, adv. Softly; gently; quietly.

SOFT, exclam. for be soft, hold; stop; not so fast.

But, soft, my muse, the world is wide.

Suckling

SOFTEN, v. t. (sof'n.) To make soft or more soft; to make less hard.

Their arrows' point they soften in the flame.

Gay

2. To mollify; to make less fierce or intractable; to make more susceptible of humane or fine feelings; as, to soften a hard heart; to soften savage natures. The heart is softened by pity.

Diffidence conciliates the proud and softens the severe.

Rambler

3. To make less harsh or severe; as, to soften an expression.—4. To palliate; to represent as less enormous; as, to soften a fault.—5. To make easy; to compose; to mitigate; to alleviate. Music can soften pain to ease.

Pope

6. To make calm and placid.

Bid her be all that cheers or softens life.

Pope

7. To make less harsh, less rude, less offensive or violent.

But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke.

Dryden

8. To make less glaring; as, to soften the colouring of a picture.—9. To make tender; to make effeminate; to enervate; as, troops softened by luxury.—10. To make less harsh or grating; as, to soften the voice.

SOFTEN, v. i. (sof'n.) To become less hard; to become more pliable and yielding to pressure; as, iron or wax softens in heat; fruits soften as they ripen.—2. To become less rude, harsh, or cruel; as, savage natures soften by civilization.—3. To become less obstinate or obdurate; to become more susceptible of humane feelings and tenderness; to relent. The heart softens at the sight of woe.—4. To become more mild; as, the air softens.—5. To become less harsh, severe, or rigorous.

SOFTENED, pp. Made less hard or less harsh; made less obdurate or cruel, or less glaring.

SOFTENER, n. He or that which softens or palliates.—2. One that palliates; also written softner.

SOFTENING, ppr. Making more soft; making less rough or cruel, &c.

SOFTENING, n. The act of making less hard, less cruel or obdurate, less violent, less glaring, &c.—In painting, the blending of colours into each other.

SOFT-GRASS, n. The common name of two British species of plants of the genus Holcus, H. mollis and H. lanatus. [See HOLCUS.]

SOFT-HEADED, a. Of weak intellect. [Familiar.]

SOFT-HEARTED, a. Having tenderness of heart; susceptible of pity or other kindly affection; gentle; meek.

SOFTISH, a. Somewhat soft.

SOFTLING, † n. A sybarite.

SOFTLY, adv. Without hardness.—2. Not with force or violence; gently; as, he softly pressed my hand.—3. Not loudly; without noise; as, speak softly; walk softly.

In this dark silence softly leave the town. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.

She softly lays him on a flowery bed. Dryden.

5. Mildly; tenderly.

The king must die;
Though pity softly pleads within my soul. Dryden.

SOFT'NER. See SOFTENER.

SOFTNESS, n. The quality of bodies which renders them capable of yielding to pressure, or of easily receiving impressions from other bodies; opposed to hardness.—2. Susceptibility of feeling or passion; as, the softness of the heart or of our natures.—3. Mildness; kindness; as, softness of words or expressions.—4. Mildness; civility; gentleness; as, softness of manners.—5. Effeminacy; vicious delicacy.

He was not delighted with the softness of the court. Clarendon.

6. Timorousness; pusillanimity; excessive susceptibility of fear or alarm.

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness. Bacon.

7. Smoothness to the ear; as, the softness of sound, which is distinct from exility or fineness.—8. Facility; gentleness; candour; easiness to be affected; as, softness of spirit.—9. Gentleness, as contrary to vehemence.

With strength and softness, energy and ease. Harte.

10. Mildness of temper; meekness. For contemplation he and valour form'd, For softness she, and sweet attractive grace. Milton.

11. Weakness; simplicity.—12. Mild temperature; as, the softness of a climate.

SOFT'-STEM, n. In bot., a stem which is unable to support itself in an erect position, and falls to the ground.

SOFT'-VOICED, a. Having a soft voice.

SOG'GY, a. [allied probably to soak,—which see; W. soeg, and soegi, to steep.] 1. Wet; filled with water; soft with moisture; as, soggy land. Timber that has imbibed water is said to be soggy.—2. Steaming with damp. SO'H'O, exclam. A word used in calling from a distant place; and a sportsman's halloo.

Soi disant, (swa desaun.) [Fr.] Calling himself; self-styled; pretended; would be.

SOIL, v. t. [Sax. selan, sylian; Fr. salir, souiller; Ir. salaighim.] 1. To make dirty on the surface; to foul; to dirt; to stain; to defile; to tarnish; to sully; as, to soil a garment with dust. Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.

2. To cover or tinge with any thing extraneous; as, to soil the earth with blood.—3. To dung; to manure.—To soil a horse, is to purge him by giving him fresh grass.—To soil cattle, in husbandry, is to feed them with grass daily mowed for them, instead of pasturing them.

SOIL, n. [G. silē. See the VERB.]

1. Dirt; any foul matter upon another substance; foulness; spot.—2. Stain; tarnish.

A lady's honour...will not bear a soil. Dryden.

3. [Lat. solum, W. swl.] The upper stratum of the earth; the mould, or that compound substance which furnishes nutriment to plants, or which is particularly adapted to support and nourish them. Wherever the surface of the earth is not covered with water, or is not naked rock, there is a layer of earth more or less mixed with the remains of animal and vegetable substances in a state of decomposition, which is commonly called the soil. Soils may generally be distinguished from mere masses of earth by their friable nature and dark colour, and by the presence of some vegetable fibre or carbonaceous matter. In uncultivated grounds, soils generally occupy only a few inches in depth on the surface; and in cultivated grounds their depth is generally the same as that to which the implements used in cultivation have penetrated. The stratum which lies immediately under the soil is called the subsoil, which is comparatively without organized matter. Soil is composed of certain mixtures or combinations of the following substances: The earths, silex, alumina, lime, magnesia; the alkalis, potassa, soda, and ammonia, oxide of iron and small portions of other metallic oxides, a considerable proportion of aqueous moisture, and several gases, as oxygen, hydrogen, carbonic acid. Besides these every soil contains vegetable and animal matters, either partially or wholly decomposed. The analyzing of soils, in order to ascertain their component parts, and qualities, and their adaptation to the growth of various vegetable productions, as well as the methods of improving them by means of chemical manures, form the subject of agricultural chemistry. [See NUTRITION.]—4 Land; country. We love our native soil.—5. Dung; compost.

Improve land by dung and other sort of soils. Mortimer.

To take soil, to run into the water, as a deer when pursued.

SOILED, pp. Fouled; stained; tarnished; manured; fed with grass.

SOIL'INESS, n. Stain; foulness. [Little used.]

SOIL'ING, ppr. Defiling; fouling; tarnishing; feeding with fresh grass; manuring.

SOIL'ING, n. The act or practice of feeding cattle or horses in the stable or yards, with food brought to them as it is cut in the meadows or fields. The great advantage of soiling horses and cattle is the increase of manure of the best quality, which is thereby produced.

SOIL'LESS, a. Destitute of soil.

SOILS, n. Among builders, a provincial term for the principal rafters of a roof.

SOIL'URE, † n. [Fr. souillure.] Stain; pollution.

SOIREE, n. (swar'ai.) [Fr.] Originally an evening party held for the sake of conversation only; but the word has since been introduced into all the languages of modern Europe, and is now applied to designate most descriptions of evening parties, in which ladies and gentlemen are intermixed, whatever be the amusements introduced. In this country it is frequently applied to the public meetings of certain societies, held for the advancement of their respective objects, at which tea, coffee, and other refreshments are introduced during the intervals of business.

SO'JA HISPIDA, n. The Dolichos soja, Linn., a leguminous plant, native of Japan and the Moluccas, and abundant in the peninsula of India. The seeds resemble those of the French or kidney bean, and are used by the Chinese to form a favourite dish called ten-hu, or tau-hu.

SOJOURN, v. i. (so'jurn.) [Fr. séjourner; It. soggiornare, which seems to be formed from the noun soggiorno; sub and giorno, a day. Sojourn, in all its forms, is antiquated.] To dwell for a time; to dwell or live in a place as a temporary resident, or as a stranger, not considering the place as his permanent habitation. So Abram sojourned in Egypt; Gen. xii.

The soldiers assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourned three days. Hayward.

SO'JOURN, n. A temporary residence, as that of a traveller in a foreign land.

SO'JOURNER, n. A temporary resident; a stranger or traveller who dwells in a place for a time.

We are strangers before thee and sojourners, as all our fathers were; 1 Chron. xxix.

SO'JOURNING, ppr. Dwelling for a time.

SO'JOURNING, n. The act of dwelling in a place for a time; also, the time of abode; Exod. xii.

SOJOURNMENT, n. Temporary residence, as that of a stranger or traveller.

SOKE, n. A district in which a particular privilege or power is exercised. [See SOC, SOCAGE.]

SOKE'MAN, n. In old Eng. law, one who held land (says Blackstone) by no servile tenure, but paid rent as a soke, or sign of freedom.

SOKE'MANRY, n. The tenure of socage.

SOKE'-REEVE, n. A rent-gatherer in a lord's soke.

SOL, n. [Lat.] The sun. In her., a term implying or or gold, in blazoning the arms of emperors, kings, and princes by planets, instead of metal and colour.

SOL, n. [Norm. soulze, soulds, souz, from L. solidus.] 1. In France, a small copper coin; a halfpenny; usually solu or sous.—2. A copper coin and money of account in Switzerland.

SOL, n. [It.] The name of a note in music, the fifth of the scale, called G by the Germans and English.

SOLA or SHOLA, n. A plant of the genus Æschynomene; the Æ. lagenaria, common in moist places, and in the rainy season, in many parts of the plains of India. These plants seem to be composed almost entirely of pith, and the stems are applied to a variety of uses, as for making some kinds of toys, floats of fishermen's nets, hats, &c. They have also been employed for lining drawers of natural history.

SOL'ACE, v. i. [It. sollazzare, from L. solatium; solor, to comfort, assuage, relieve. See CONSOLE.] 1. To cheer in grief or under calamity; to comfort; to relieve in affliction; to console; applied to persons; as, to solace one's self with the hope of future reward.—2. To allay; to assuage; as, to solace grief.

SOL'ACE, † v. i. To take comfort; to be cheered or relieved in grief.

SOL'ACE, n. [It. sollazzo; L. solatium.] Comfort in grief; alleviation of grief or anxiety; also, that which relieves in distress; recreation.

The proper solaces of age are not music and compliments, but wisdom and devotion.

Rambler.

SOL'ACED, pp. Comforted; cheered in affliction.

SOL'ACEMENT, n. Act of comforting; state of being solaced.

SOL'ACING, ppr. Relieving grief; cheering in affliction.

SOLA'CIOUS, † a. Affording comfort or amusement.

SOLAND'ER, n. [Fr. soulandres.] A disease in horses.

SOLAN-GOOSE, n. The gannet, (Pelecanus bassanus) an aquatic fowl of the family Pelecanidæ or pelicans. It is nearly of the size of the domestic goose. The colour is chiefly white, with the tips of the wings black, and it feeds on various small fishes, especially different species of herring. Great numbers of these birds frequent the Hebrides, St. Kilda, the Craig of Ailsa, and the Bass Rock. Many of the old birds are annually taken in St. Kilda as well as the Bass Rock, on account of the feathers and down, and the young for the flesh, which was formerly much esteemed when roasted. It also occurs on the eastern coasts of North America and Labrador.

SOLANA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of monopetalous exogenous plants, composed of herbs or shrubs, rarely of arborescent plants. The species are natives of most parts of the world, without the arctic and antarctic circles, and especially within the tropics. The night-shade, potato, capsicum, tomato, egg-plant, and tobacco, are all found in this order. The general property of the order is narcotic. This prevails to a greater or less degree in all the plants of the order, although certain parts of the plants, when cultivated, are used for food.

SOLAN'IA, n. The active principle of solanum dulcamara, or deadly nightshade. [See the next word.]

SOLAN'INA, n. [L. solanum, night-SOL'ANINE,} shade. A vegetable alkaloid, obtained from various species of Solanum, as S. dulcamara, S. nigrum, S. tuberosum, &c. It forms a crystalline powder, very bitter and acid, and highly poisonous. It is insoluble in water, but soluble in alcohol. With acids it forms salts, which are uncrystallizable.

SOLA'NO, n. A hot S. E. wind in Spain which produces inflammatory effects on men. It is a modification of the sirocco.

SOLA'NUM, n. [L.] A genus of plants, nat. order Solanaceæ, of which it is the type. It is one of the most extensive genera of plants, upwards of 400 species having been enumerated as belonging to it, many of them possessing apparently very opposite properties. The most important species are, the S. tuberosum, which produces the common potato, a native of America; [See POTATO]; S. nigrum, or common nightshade; S. dulcamara, woody nightshade or bitter-sweet; S. melongena, eggplant, mad-apple or Jew's apple; S. sodomum, Sodom egg-plant, or apple of Sodom; S. sanctum, or Palestine egg-plant; S. Æthiopicum, or Æthiopian nightshade; S. pseudo-quina, or false quina nightshade; S. verbascifolium, or mullein-leaved nightshade; S. Lycopersicum, common love-apple or tomato.

SOL'AR, a. [Fr. solaire; L. solaris, from sol, the sun.] 1. Pertaining to the sun; as, the solar system; or proceeding from it; as, solar light; solar rays; solar influence.—2. † Belonging to the sun; as, solar herbs.—3. † In astrol., born under the predominant influence of the sun; as, a solar people.—4. Measured by the progress of the sun, or by its revolution; as, the solar year.—Solar cycle, a period of 28 years. [See CYCLE.] Solar-day. [See DAY.]—Solar month. [See MONTH.]—Solar microscope; a microscope in which the object is illuminated by the light of the sun concentrated upon it. [See MICROSCOPE.]—Solar flowers are those which open and shut daily, at certain determinate hours.—Solar spots, dark spots that appear on the sun's disk, usually visible only by the telescope, but sometimes so large as to be seen by the naked eye. They adhere to the body of the sun; indicate its revolutions on its axis; are very changeable in their figure and dimensions; and vary in size from mere points to spaces of 50,000 miles in diameter.—Solar spectrum. [See SPECTRUM.]—Solar system, in astron., that system which consists of the sun, and all those heavenly bodies whose motions are controlled by its gravitation; viz., the planets, satellites, and comets. [See SYSTEM.]—Solar time. [See TIME.]—Solar year. [See YEAR.]

SOL'AR, n. In arch., a sollar; a loft, or upper chamber.

SOLA'RIMUM, n. [L.] Among the Romans, a place on the tops of houses, exposed to the sun, where the inhabitants used to take air and exercise.—2. A genus of marine univalve shells belonging to the family Turbinacea. They are littoral shells, and belong to tropical seas.

SOL'ARY, a. Solar. [Little used.]

SOLA'TIUM, n. [L. consolation; sollace.] In Scots law, a sum of money paid over and above actual damages, to an injured party, by the person who inflicted the injury, as a solace for wounded feelings. This solutium for wounded feelings is allowed in cases of breach of promise of marriage, or where a father, husband, or near relative is killed through negligence. This principle is not recognized in the law of England.

SOLD, pret. and pp. of Sell.

SOLD, † n. [from the root of soldier; Norm. soude.] Salary; military pay.

SOLD'AN, for Sultan, not in use.

SOLD'ANEL, } n. 1. A genus of

SOLD'ANEL'LA, } plants, nat. order

Primulaceæ. There is but a single species, the S. alpina, a native of Europe.—2. A species of convolvulus, the C. soldanella.

SOLD'ER, v. t. [W. sawd, juncture; sawdriav, to join, to solder; Fr. souder; Arm. souda or soudta; It. sodare, to make firm.] To unite and make solid, as metallic substances; to join separate things or parts of the same thing by a metallic substance in a state of fusion, which hardens in cooling, and renders the joint solid.

SOLD'ER, n. Metallic cement; a metal or metallic composition used in uniting other metallic substances, by being fused between them. [See SOLDERING.]

SOLD'ERED, pp. United by a metallic cement.

SOLD'ERING, ppr. Uniting and making solid by means of a metallic substance in a state of fusion.

SOLD'ERING, n. The process of uniting the surfaces of metals, by the intervention of a more fusible metal, which being melted upon each surface, serves, partly by chemical attraction, and partly by cohesive force, to bind them together. The alloy used as a solder must not only be more fusible than the metal or metals to be united, but must also have a strong affinity for them. The solder usually contains a large proportion of the metal to which it is to be applied, in combination with some more easily fusible metal. The surfaces to be united must be made perfectly clean and free from oxide. This is commonly effected by scraping the surfaces; and in order that the formation of any oxide may be prevented during the process, borax, sal ammoniac, or resin is used, either mixed with the solder or applied to the surfaces. A new process of soldering, the invention of a French gentleman, has recently been introduced under the name of autogenous soldering. It consists in the union of two pieces of metal without the intervention of any solder, by fusing them at the point of junction, by jets of flame from a gas blowpipe.

SOLD'IER, n. (söljür.) [Fr. soldat; Norm. soudeyer, soudiers; from L. soldus, a piece of money; the pay of a soldier; Norm. soud, contracted from sould, pay, wages; soudeyer, to keep in pay; Sw. besolda, to count out money to, to pay; Dan. besolder, to give a salary or wages.] 1. A man engaged in military service; one whose occupation is military; a man enlisted for service in an army; a private, or one in the ranks.

There ought to be some time for sober reflection between the life of a soldier and his death. Rambler.

2. A man enrolled for service, when on duty or embodied for military discipline; a private; as, a militia soldier.

—3. Emphatically, a brave warrior; a man of military experience and skill, or a man of distinguished valour. In this sense, an officer of any grade may be denominated a soldier.

SOLDIER-CRAB, n. A crustaceous animal.

SOLDIERESS, † n. A female soldier. SOLDIERLIKE, } a. Like or becoming SOLDIERLY, } a real soldier; brave; martial; heroic; honourable.

SOLDIERSHIP, n. Military qualities; military character or state; martial skill; behaviour becoming a soldier.

SOLDIERY, n. (sōljury.) Soldiers collectively; the body of military men.

I charge not the soldiery with ignorance and contempt of learning, without exception. Swift.

2. † Soldiership; military service.

SOLE, n. [Sax. sol; G. sohle; It. suolo, soil and sole; Sp. suela, the sole of the foot, and suolo, soil; L. solea, solum; that which sets or is set or laid. The radical sense coincides with that of stil.]

1. The bottom of the foot; and by a figure, the foot itself.—2. The bottom of a shoe; or the piece of leather which constitutes the bottom.

The caliga was a military shoe with a very thick sole, tied above the instep. Arbutnot.

3. The part of any thing that forms the bottom, and on which it stands upon the ground.

Elm is proper for mills, soles of wheels and pipes. Mortimer.

4. A marine fish of the genus Pleuronectes, the P. solea, Linn., the solea vulgaris, Cuvier, so called probably because it keeps on or near the bottom of the sea. These fish abound on the British coast, and hence the name of sole bank, to the southward of Ireland. They furnish a wholesome and delicious article of food. The sole sometimes grows to the weight of six or seven pounds.—5. In shipbuilding, a sort of lining, used to prevent the wearing of any thing.—Sole of a gun port, the lower part of it; more properly called the port-sail.—Sole of the rudder, a piece of timber attached to the lower part of it, to render it nearly level with the false keel.—6. A sort of horn under a horse's hoof.

Sole (Pleuronectes solea.)

SOLE, v. t. To furnish with a sole; as, to sole a shoe.

SOLE, a. [L. solus; Fr. seul; probably from separating; Ar. zaula.] 1. Single; being or acting without another; individual; only. God is the sole creator and sovereign of the world.—2. In law, single; unmarried; as, a femme sole.

SO'LEA, n. [L. a slipper.] In mammalogy, the under surface of the foot or hoofs; the sole.—2. The sole; a genus of malacopterygious fishes, separated by Cuvier from the Pleuronectes, Linn. They are distinguished from the other species of pleuronectes by their more elongated form, and by the blunt and rounded shape of the muzzle. The eyes and the colouring are on the right side. S. vulgaris is the common sole. [See SOLE, No. 4.]

SOL'ECISM, n. [Gr. σολεκισμος, said to be derived from Soli, a people of Attica, who being transplanted to Cilicia, lost the purity of their language.] 1. Impropriety in language, or a gross deviation from the rules of syntax; incongruity of words; want of correspondence or consistency.

A barbarism may be in one word; a solecism must be of more.

Johnson, from Cicero.

2. Any unfitness, absurdity, or impropriety.

Cesar, by dismissing his guards and retaining his power, committed a dangerous solecism in politics. Middleton.

3. Among modern grammarians, any word or expression which does not agree with the established usage of writing or speaking. As customs change, that which may be regarded as a solecism at one time, may at another be considered as correct language. Hence a solecism differs from a barbarism, which consists in the use of a word or expression altogether contrary to the spirit of the language.

SOL'ECIST, n. [Gr. σολεκιστες.] One who is guilty of impropriety in language.

SOLECISTIC, } a. Incorrect; in-SOLECISTICAL, } congruous.

SOLECISTICALLY, adv. In a solecistic manner.

SOL'ECIZE, v. i. [Gr. σολεκιστω.] To commit solecisms.

SOLE, pp. Furnished with a sole.

SOLE-LEATHER, n. Thick strong leather used for the soles of shoes.

SOLELY, adv. Singly; alone; only; without another; as, to rest a cause solely on one argument; to rely solely on one's own strength.

SOLEMN, a. (sol'em.) [Fr. solennel; L. solemnis, from soleo, to be accustomed, to use, that is, to hold on or continue, as we have wont, from G. wohnen, to dwell.] 1. † Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.

The worship of this image was advanced and a solemn supplication observed every year. Stillingfleet.

2. Religiously grave; awful; formal; marked with pomp and sanctity; attended with religious rites.

His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd. Milton.

3. Religiously serious; piously grave; devout; marked by reverence to God; as, solemn prayer; the solemn duties of the sanctuary.—4. Affecting with seriousness; impressing or adapted to impress seriousness, gravity, or reverence; sober; serious.

There reign'd a solemn silence over all. Spenser.

To 'swage with solemn touches troubled thoughts. Milton.

5. Grave; serious; or affectedly grave; as, a solemn face.—6. Sacred; enjoined by religion; or attended with a serious appeal to God; as, a solemn oath.—7. Marked with solemnities; as, a solemn day.

SOL'EMN-BREATHING, a. Diffusing or inspiring solemnity.

SOL'EMNNESS, n. The state or quality of being solemn; reverential manner; gravity; as, the solemnness of public worship.—2. Solemnity; gravity of manner.

SOLEMN'NITY, n. [Fr. solemnité.] 1. A rite or ceremony annually performed with religious reverence [rarely used].

—2. A religious ceremony; a ritual performance attended with religious reverence; as, the solemnity of a funeral or of a sacrament.—3. A ceremony adapted to impress awe; as, the solemnities of the last day.—4. Manner of acting awfully serious.

With horrible solemnity he caused every thing to be prepared for his triumph of victory. Stdney.

5. Gravity; grave stateliness; steady seriousness; as, the solemnity of the Spanish language.—6. Affected gravity.

Solemnity's a cover for a sot. Young.

SOLEMN'NIZATE, † v. t. To solemnize.

SOLEMNIZA'TION, n. The act of solemnizing; celebration; as, the solemnization of a marriage.

SOL'EMNIZE, v. t. [Fr. solemniser; It. solemnizzare.] 1. To dignify or honour by ceremonies; to celebrate; as, to solemnize the birth of Christ.

Their choice nobility and flow'r Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton.

2. To perform with ritual ceremonies and respect, or according to legal forms; as, to solemnize a marriage.—

3. † To perform religiously once a year.

4. To make grave, serious, and reverential; as, to solemnize the mind for the duties of the sanctuary.

SOL'EMNIZED, pp. Celebrated religiously; made grave.

SOL'EMNIZER, n. One who performs a solemn rite.

SOL'EMNIZING, ppr. Honouring with sacred rites.

SOL'EMNLY, adv. With gravity and religious reverence. Let us solemnly address the throne of grace.—2. With official formalities and by due authority. This question of law has been solemnly decided in the highest court.—3. With formal state.—4. With formal gravity and stateliness, or with affected gravity. There in deaf murmurs solemnly are wise. Dryden.

5. With religious seriousness; as, I solemnly declare myself innocent.

I do solemnly assure the reader. Swift.

SO'LEN, n. [Gr. σωλην, a tube.] A genus of marine bivalves, forming the type of the family Solenacea, and known by the common name of razor-shell. The species are found on sandy beaches or shoals, where they burrow vertically, and lie concealed at a depth of about six inches, when the tide leaves the beach dry. They are distinguished by the great length of the respiratory tubes; hence, perhaps, the name, although it may also apply to the shell, which resembles a tube.

SO'LEN, n. In sur., a machine in which a broken leg is placed.

SOLENA'CEA, } n. A family of SOLENA'CEANS, } bivalve molluscs, including the genus Solen and several others.

SOLENA'CEOUS, a. Relating to the Solenaceans.

SOLENESS, n. [from sole.] Singleness; a state of being unconnected with others.

SO'LENITE, n. Petrified solen, a genus of shells. Fragments of solenites are found in the Essex cliffs.

SOLEN'ODON, n. A genus of insectivorous mammals.

SOLENOID, n. [Gr. σολήν, a tube, and ειδός, appearance.] In electro-dynamics, a name given by Ampère to a system of small electrical currents, equal and equi-distant, and returning into themselves, the planes of which are normals to any given line, whether straight or curved, in which their centres are situated, and which forms the axis of the solenoid.

SOL'ERT, † a. [Lat. solers.] Crafty; subtle.

SOL-FA', v. i. In music, to exercise the voice on the gamut. [See SOLFEGGIO.]

SOL-FA-ING, n. Solmization,—which see.

SOLFANARIA, n. [It.] A sulphur mine.

SOLFATAR'A, n. [It.] A volcanic vent emitting sulphureous, muriatic, and acid vapours or gases. The word is derived from solfa terra, a celebrated mountain of Naples.

SOLFATAR'ITE, n. In min., a substance found in the sofataras of Italy.

SOLF-EGGIA'RE, v. i. [Ital.] To sol-fa.

SOLFEG'GIO, n. [Ital.] In music, the system of arranging the scale by the names ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la.

SOL'IL, in music, plur. of Solo.

SOLIC'IT, v. t. [L. solicitus; Fr. soliciter.] 1. To ask with some degree of earnestness; to make petition to; to apply to for obtaining something. This word implies earnestness in seeking, but less earnestness than beg, implore, entreat, and importune, and more than ask or request; as when we say, a man solicits the minister for an office; he solicits his father for a favour.

Did I solicit thee

From darkness to promote me? Milton.

2. To ask for with some degree of earnestness; to seek by petition; as, to solicit an office; to solicit a favour.

—3. To awake or excite to action; to summon; to invite.

That fruit solicited her longing eye.

Milton.

Sounds and some tangible qualities solicit their proper senses, and force an entrance to the mind.

Locke.

4. To attempt; to try to obtain.

I view my crime, but kindly at the view,

Repeat old pleasures and solicit new. Pope.

5. To disturb; to disquiet; a Latinism rarely used.

But anxious fears solicit my weak breast.

Dryden.

SOL'ICIT, v. i. To make solicitation for some one, or for a thing. [Thus used by Addison.]

SOLICITANT, n. One who solicits.

SOLICITA'TION, n. Earnest request; a seeking to obtain something from another with some degree of zeal and earnestness; sometimes, perhaps, importunity. He obtained a grant by repeated solicitations.—2. Excitement; invitation; as, the solicitation of the senses.

SOLICITED, pp. Earnestly requested.

SOLICITING, ppr. Requesting with earnestness; asking for; attempting to obtain.

This way and that soliciting the dart.

Dryden.

SOLICITOR, n. [Fr. soliciteur.] 1. One who asks with earnestness; one that asks for another.—2. A person admitted to practise in the court of chancery in the conduct of suits, &c., who is styled attorney in the courts of common law.—Solicitor-General, an officer of the crown, next in rank to the attorney-general, with whom he is in fact associated in the management of the legal business of the crown, and public offices. On him generally devolves the maintenance of the rights of the crown in revenue cases, patent causes, &c. The solicitor-general of Scotland is one of the crown counsel, next in dignity and importance to the lord advocate, to whom he gives his aid in protecting the interests of the crown, in conducting prosecutions, &c. In Scotland, the term solicitor or solicitor at law is synonymous with attorney in England. The solicitors at law form a society of law agents in Edinburgh, and are entitled to practise before the sheriff court of Edinburgh and other inferior courts. There is also, in Edinburgh, a society of solicitors who practise before the supreme court, and are members of the college of justice.

SOLIC'ITOUS, a. [L. solicitus.] 1. Careful; anxious; very desirous, as to obtain something. Men are often more solicitous to obtain the favour of their king or of the people, than of their Maker.—2. Careful; anxious; concerned; as respecting an unknown but interesting event; followed usually by about or for. We say, a man is solicitous about the fate of his petition, or about the result of the negotiation. He is solicitous for the safety of his ship.—3. Anxious; concerned; followed by for, as when something is to be obtained. Be not solicitous for the future.

SOLIC'ITOUSLY, adv. Anxiously; with care and concern. Errors in religion or in science are to be soliculously avoided. A wise prince soliculously promotes the prosperity of his subjects.

SOLIC'ITOUSNESS, n. Solicitude.

SOLICITRESS, n. A female who solicits or petitions.

SOLIC'ITUDE, n. [L. solicitudo.] Carefulness; concern; anxiety; uneasiness of mind occasioned by the fear of evil or the desire of good. A man feels solicitude when his friend is sick. We feel solicitude for the success of an enterprise. With what solicitude should men seek to secure future happiness!

SOL'ID, a. [L. solidus; Fr. solide; from the sense of setting or pressure, and hence allied to L. solum, Eng. sill.] 1. Hard; firm; compact, not fluid; not superficial; having its constituent particles so connected together that their relative positions cannot be altered without the application of sensible force. The force which resists the alteration of the relative positions of the parts, is termed the force of cohesion. Hence solid bodies are distinguished from fluids, whose parts yield, and alter their relative positions on the application of the slightest force or impression. [See the noun.] Solid is opposed to fluid and liquid.—2. Not hollow; full of matter; as, a solid globe or cone, as distinguished from a hollow one.—3. Having all the geometrical dimensions; having length, breadth, and thickness; cubic; as, a solid foot contains 1728 cubic inches. [In this sense, cubic is now generally used.]—4. Firm; compact; strong; as, a solid pier; a solid pile; a solid wall.—5. Sound; not weakly; as, a solid constitution of body. [Sound is more generally used.]—6. Real; sound; valid; true; just; not empty or fallacious. Wise men seek solid reasons for their opinions.—7. Grave; profound; not light, trifling, or superficial.

These wanting wit, affect gravity and go by the name of solid men. Dryden.

8. In bot., of a fleshy, uniform, undivided substance, as a bulb or root; not spungy or hollow within, as a stem.—Solid angle, an angle formed by three or more plane angles meeting in a point; but which are not in the same plane; as the angle of a die, the point of a diamond, &c. [See ANGLE.]—Solid square, in military lan., is a square body of troops; a body in which the ranks and files are equal.—Solid problem, a problem which cannot be constructed geometrically, that is, by the intersections of straight lines and circles, but requires the introduction of some curves of a higher order; as, the ellipse, parabola, and hyperbola; which being the sections of solids, give rise to the term solid problem. The algebraic solution of a solid problem leads to a cubic or biquadratic equation.—Solid of least resistance. [See RESISTANCE.]

SOL'ID, n. A firm compact body, a body the cohesion of whose particles is so strong that they move in a combined mass, and retain their relative positions. A solid is thus distinguished from a liquid, whose parts or particles yield to the slightest impression, and are easily made to move amongst each other. In solids, the attractive forces of the particles are greater than the repulsive, and the particles consequently adhere with greater or less force; in liquids, the attractive and repulsive forces are balanced; and in gases the repulsive forces prevail.—2. In geom., a body or magnitude which has three dimensions; length, breadth, and thickness, being thus distinguished from a surface which has but two dimensions, and from a line, which has but one. The boundaries of solids are surfaces.—Regular solids are those which are bounded by equal and regular planes. [See BODY.] All other solids are called irregular. In anatomy and medical science, the bones, flesh, and vessels of animal bodies are called solids, in distinction from the blood, chyle, and other fluids.

SOLIDA'GO, n. A genus of composite plants, chiefly natives of North America. [See GOLDEN ROD.]

SOLI'DARE, † n. A small piece of money.

SOL'IDATE, v. t. [L. solido.] To make solid or firm. [Little used.]

SOLIDIFICATION, n. The act of making solid.

SOLID'IFIED, pp. Made solid.

SOLID'IFY, v. t. [L. solidus, solid, and facio, to make.] To make solid or compact.

SOLIDIFYING, ppr. Making solid.

SOL'IDISM, n. In med., the doctrine that refers all diseases to alterations of the solid parts of the body.

SOLID'ITY, n. [Fr. solidité; L. soliditas.] 1. Firmness; hardness; density; compactness; that property of bodies by which the particles cohere with greater or less force, and cannot be made to alter their relative positions without the application of sensible force. It is opposed to fluidity.

That which hinders the approach of two bodies moving one toward another, I call solidity. Locke.

2. Fulness of matter; opposed to hollowness.—3. Moral firmness; soundness; strength; validity; truth; certainty; as opposed to weakness or fallaciousness; as, the solidity of arguments or reasoning; the solidity of principles, truths, or opinions.—4. In geom., the quantity of space contained or occupied by a solid body; called also its solid content or contents. The solidity of a body is estimated by the number of cubic inches, feet, yards, &c., which it contains. The method of ascertaining the solidity or solid content of different solids, forms a branch of mensuration.—5. In physical science, that property of matter by which it excludes all other bodies from the space which itself occupies. In this sense, the word is synonymous with impenetrability.

SOL'IDLY, adv. Firmly; densely; compactly; as, the parts of a pier solidly united.—2. Firmly; truly; on firm grounds.

A complete brave man ought to know solidly the main end of his being in the world. Digby.

SOLIDNESS, n. The quality of being firm, dense, or compact; firmness; compactness; solidity; as, of material bodies.—2. Soundness; strength; truth; validity; as, of arguments, reasons, principles, &c.

SOLIDUM, n. [L.] In arch., the die of the pedestal—To be bound in solidum, in Scots law, is to be bound for the whole debt, although only one of several obligants. Where several debtors are bound each for his own share, they are said to be bound pro rata.

SOLIDUNGULATES, or SOLIDUN'GULA, n. [See the adj.] A tribe of mammals, including those which have the hoofs whole or undivided; as the horse, ass, &c.

SOLIDUN'GULOUS, a. [L. solidus, solid, and ungula, hoof.] Having hoofs that are whole or not cloven. A horse is a solidungulous animal.

SOLIFID'IAN, n. [L. solus, alone, and fides, faith.] One who maintains that faith alone, without works, is necessary to justification.

SOLIFID'IAN, a. Holding the tenets of Solifidians.

SOLIFID'IANISM, n. The tenets of Solifidians.

SOLL'OUQIZE, v. i. To utter a soliloquy.

SOLL'OUQIZING, ppr. Uttering a soliloquy.

SOLL'OUQUY, n. [Fr. soliloque; L. solus, alone, and loquor, to speak.] 1. A talking to one's self; a monologue; a talking or discourse of a person alone, or not addressed to another person, even when others are present.

Lovers are always allowed the comfort of soliloquy. Spectator.

2. A written composition, reciting what it is supposed a person speaks to himself. The whole poem is a soliloquy. Prior.

SOL'IPED, n. [L. solus, alone, or solidus and pes, foot. But the word is ill formed.] An animal whose hoof is not cloven. The solipeds constitute a group of quadrupeds with undivided hoofs, as for example, the Linnean genus Equus.

SOLIP'EDOUS, a. Having hoofs which are not cloven.

SOLITAIRE, n. [Fr. solitaire, from L. solitarius. See SOLITARY.] 1. A person who lives in solitude; a recluse; a hermit.—2. An ornament for the neck; a diamond set alone, without other stones round it.—3. A game which one person can play alone.—4. A name given to a bird allied to the Dodo.

SOLITA'RIAN, n. A hermit.

SOLITAR'ETY, n. State of being solitary.

SOL'ITARILY, adv. [from solitary.] In solitude; alone; without company.

Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thy heritage, that dwell solitarily in the wood; Mic. xvi.

SOL'ITARINESS, n. The state of being alone; forbearance of company; retirement, or habitual retirement. At home, in wholesome solitariness. Donne. 2. Solitude; loneliness; destitution of company or of animated beings; applied to place; as, the solitariness of the country or of a wood.

SOL'ITARY, a. [Fr. solitaire; L. solitarius, from solus, alone.] 1. Living alone; not having company. Some of the more ferocious animals are solitary, seldom or never being found in flocks or herds. Thus the lion is called a solitary animal.

Those rare and solitary, these in flocks. Milton.

2. Retired; remote from society; not having company, or not much frequented; as, a solitary residence or place.—3. Lonely; destitute of company; as, a solitary life.—4. Gloomy; still; dismal.

Let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein; Job iii.

5. Single; as, a solitary instance of vengeance; a solitary example.—6. In bot., separate; one only in a place; as, a solitary stipule. A solitary flower is when there is only one to each peduncle; a solitary seed, when there is only one in a pericarp.

SOL'ITARY, n. One that lives alone or in solitude; a hermit; a recluse.

SOLITUDE, n. [Fr. from L. solitudo; from solus, alone.] 1. Loneliness; a state of being alone; a lonely life.

Whoever is delighted with solitude, is either a wild beast or a god. Bacon.

2. Loneliness; remoteness from society; destitution of company; applied to place; as, the solitude of a wood or a valley; the solitude of the country.

The solitude of his little parish is become matter of great comfort to him. Law.

3. A lonely place; a desert.

In these deep solitudes and awful cells, Where heavenly pensive contemplation dwells. Pope.

SOLIV'AGANT, a. [L. solivagus; solus, alone, and vagor, to wander.] Wandering alone.

SOL'IVE, n. [Fr.] A joist, rafter, or piece of wood, either slit or sawed, with which builders lay their ceilings. Rarely used in the English language.

SOL'LAR, n. [Low L. solarium.] Originally an open gallery or balcony at the top of a house, exposed to the sun; but latterly used to signify any upper room, loft, or garret.

SOLLE'CITO. [It. afflicted.] In music, a term denoting that the movement to which it is affixed is to be performed in a mournful style. It is also used to signify that the music is to be performed with care.

SOL'LERET, n. In ancient armour, sollerets were the overlapping plates

Right Jamb and Solleret, 15th century that formed the mailed shoe of an armed knight.

SOLMIZA'TION, or SOLMISA'TION, n. [from sol, mi, musical notes.] In singing, a solfa, or the art of applying to the seven notes of the scale certain syllables having no meaning in themselves, but containing the five first vowels, according to the French method, and the four first according to the system adopted by the Italians and English. The syllables used in the French system are ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la, si. Those used by the Italians and English are do, re, mi, fa, sol, la, si, do, which correspond to the letters C, D, E, F, G, A, B, C.

SO'LO, n. [It. from L. solus, alone.] A tune, air, or strain to be played by a single instrument, or sung by a single voice.

SOL'OMON'S LEAF, n. A plant.

SOL'OMON'S SEAL, n. The common name of several British perennial plants, of the genus convallaria, which grow in woods. [See CONVALLARIA.]

SOL'STICE, n. [Fr. from L. solstitium; sol, the sun, and sto, to stand; It. solstizio; Sp. solsticio.] In astron., the point in the ecliptic at the greatest distance from the equator, at which the sun stops or ceases to recede from the equator, either north in summer, or south in winter; a tropic or tropical point. There are two solstices; the summer solstice, the first degree of Cancer, which the sun enters on the 21st of June, and the winter solstice, the first degree of Capricorn, which the sun enters on the 22d of December.—2. The time at which the sun is at its greatest distance from the equator, and when its diurnal motion in declination ceases, which happens at midsummer and midwinter.

SOLSTY'TIAL, a. Pertaining to a solstice; as, a solstitial point. The solstitial points, those two points in the ecliptic which are farthest from the equator, and at which the sun arrives at the time of the solstices. They are diametrically opposite to each other, and the distance of each from the equator is equal to the obliquity of the ecliptic. Solstitial Colure. [See COLURE.]—2. Happening at a solstice; usually with us, at the summer solstice or midsummer; as, solstitial heat.

SOLUBIL'ITY, n. [from soluble.] The quality of a body which renders it susceptible of solution; susceptibility of being dissolved in a fluid. The solubility of resins is chiefly confined to spirits or alcohol.

SOL'UBLE, a. [L. solubilis, from solvo, to melt.] Susceptible of being dissolved in a fluid; capable of solution. Sugar is soluble in water; salt is soluble only to a certain extent, that is, till the water is saturated.

SOL'UBLENESS, n. Solubility.

SOLUS, a. [Lat.] Alone. Sola is the feminine form; and is to be used, in dramatic directions, when a female is in question.

SOLÛTE, a. [L. solutus, solvo.] 1. † In a general sense, loose; free; as, a solute interpretation.—2. In bot., loose; not adhering; opposed to adnate; as, a solute stipule.

SOLÛTE, † v. t. To dissolve.

SOLUTION, n. [Fr.; from L. solutio, from solvo, to loosen, melt, dissolve. See SOLVE.] 1. The act of separating the parts of any body; disruption; breach.—2. The reduction of any solid body to a liquid state by means of some solvent.—3. A feeble combination, in which, with a mere mechanical change of properties, and without regard to definite proportions, one or more solids are equally diffused through some liquid. This mode of combination is so weak, that the liquid may be evaporated from the solid or solids, leaving them unchanged, except in texture or aggregation. There is usually, and probably always, a limit to the quantity of the solid or solids which can be dissolved by a given liquid, and this is called saturation. The liquid in which the solution is effected is called the solvent or menstruum.

Note.—This word is not used in chemistry or mineralogy for the melting of bodies by the heat of fire. The term solution is applied to a very extensive class of phenomena. When a solid disappears in a liquid, if the compound exhibits perfect transparency, we have an example of solution. The word is applied both to the act of combination and to the result of the process. Thus common salt disappears in water, that is, its solution takes place, and the liquid obtained is called a solution of salt in water. Solution is the result of attraction or affinity between the fluid and the solid. This affinity continues to operate to a certain point, where it is overbalanced by the cohesion of the solid; it then ceases, the fluid is said to be saturated, the point where the operation ceases is called saturation, and the fluid is called a saturated solution.—Solution is a true chemical union. Mixture is a mere mechanical union of bodies.—4. Resolution; explanation; the act of explaining or removing difficulty or doubt; as, the solution of a difficult question in morality; the solution of a doubt in casuistry.—5. Release; deliverance; discharge.—6. In math., the method of resolving a problem, whether algebraical or geometrical, or of finding that which the problem requires to be found; but the word is frequently understood to apply to the answer, or result of the operation itself.—Solution of continuity, the separation of connection or connected substances or parts; applied, in surgery, to a fracture, laceration, &c.

SOLÛTIVE, a. Tending to dissolve; loosening; laxative.—2. That can be dissolved or loosened.

SOLVABILITY, n. Ability to pay all just debts.

SOLVABLE, a. That may be solved, resolved, or explained.—2. That can be paid.

SOLVABLENESS, n. Solvability.

SOLVE, v. t. (solv.) [L. solvo; Fr. soudre.] 1. Properly, to loosen or separate the parts of any thing; hence, to explain; to resolve; to eclaireise; to unfold; to clear up; as what is obscure or difficult to be understood; as, to solve questions; to solve difficulties or a problem.

When God shall solve the dark decrees of fate. Tickell

2. To remove; to dissipate; as, to solve doubts.

SOLVED, pp. Explained; resolved.

SOLVENCY, n. [L. solvens.] Ability to pay all debts or just claims; as, the solvency of a merchant is undoubted. The credit of a nation's notes depends on a favourable opinion of its solvency.

SOLVEND', n. A substance to be dissolved.

SOLVENT, a. Having the power of dissolving; as, a solvent body.—2. Able to pay all just debts. The merchant is solvent.—3. Sufficient to pay all just debts. The estate is solvent.

SOLVENT, n. Any fluid or substance that dissolves, or renders liquid, other bodies, is called the solvent, or menstruum. Water is of all solvents the most universal and useful. The solvent of resinous bodies is alcohol, and of some other similarly constituted substances. Naphtha, oil of turpentine, and ether, are solvents of caoutchouc; chlorine, and aqua regia, or nitro-muriatic acid, are solvents of gold. In most cases, heat increases the solvent powers of bodies.

SOLVER, n. One who solves or explains.

SOLVIBLE, a. Solvable,—which see.

SOMATIC, } † a. [Gr. σωματικός,
SOMATICAL, } from σωμα, body.]
Corporeal; pertaining to a body.

SOMATIST, n. [supra.] One who admits the existence of corporeal or material beings only; one who denies the existence of spiritual substances.

SOMATOL'OGY, n. [Gr. σωμα, body, and λογος, discourse.] The doctrine of bodies or material substances.—2. That branch of physics which treats of matter and its properties.

SOM'BRE, a. [Fr. sombre, from Sp. sombra, a shade.] Dull; dusky; cloudy; gloomy.

SOM'BRENESS, n. Darkness; gloominess.

SOMBROUS, a. Gloomy.

SOMBROUSLY, adv. Gloomily.

SOMBROUSNESS, n. State of being sombrous.

SOME, a. (sum.) [Sax. sum, sume; D. somme; Sw. and Dan. sum, who.]

1. Noting a certain quantity of a thing, but indeterminate; a portion greater or less. Give me some bread; drink some wine; bring some water.—

2. Noting a number of persons or things, greater or less, but indeterminate.

Some theoretical writers allege that there was a time when there was no such thing as society. Blackstone

3. Noting a person or thing, but not known, or not specific and definite. Some person, I know not who, gave me the information. Enter the city, and some man will direct you to the house.

Most gentlemen of property, at some period or other of their lives, are ambitious of representing their county in parliament. Blackstone

4. Noting indeterminate that a thing is not very great; moderate; as, the censure was, to some extent, just.—5. It sometimes precedes a word of number or quantity, with the sense of about or near, noting want of certainty as to the specific number or amount, but something near it; as, a village of some eighty houses; some two or three persons; some seventy miles distant; an object at some good distance.—6. Some is often opposed to others. Some men believe one thing, and others another.—7. Some is often used without a noun, and then, like other adjectives, is a substitute for a noun or a pronoun. We consumed some of our provisions, and the rest was given to the poor.

Some to the shores do fly,

Some to the woods. Daniel

Your edicts some reclaim from sins,

But most your life and blest example wins. Dryden

8. Some is used as a termination of certain adjectives, as in handsome, mettlesome, blithesome, fulsome, lonesome, gladsome, gamesome. In these words, some has primarily the sense of little, or a certain degree; a little blithe or glad. But in usage, it rather indicates a considerable degree of the thing or quantity; as, mettlesome, full of mettle or spirit; gladsome, very glad or joyous.

SOMEBODY, n. [some and body.] A person unknown or uncertain; a person indeterminate.

Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me; Luke viii.

We must draw in somebody that may stand 'Twixt us and danger. Denham

2. A person of consideration.

Before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; Acts v.

SOMEDEAL, † adv. [some and deal.] In some degree.

SOMEHOW, adv. [some and how] One way or other; in some way not yet known. The thing must have happened somehow or other.

SOMERSAULT, } n. [Old Fr. soubresaut, SOMERSET, } sault; Sp. sobresaltar;

to exceed in height, to leap over; sobresaltar, to surprise; It. soprasalire, to attack unexpectedly; soprasalto, an overleap; L. super and salio, to leap.] A leap by which a person jumps from a height, turns over his head, and falls upon his feet.

SOMETHING, n. [some and thing.] An indeterminate or unknown event.

Something must have happened to prevent the arrival of our friends at the time fixed. I shall call at two o'clock, unless something should prevent. [See THING.]—2. A substance or material thing, unknown, indeterminate, or not specified. A machine stops because something obstructs its motion. There must be something to support a wall or an arch.—3. A part; a portion more or less; a thing meriting consideration.

Something yet of doubt remains. Milton

Still from his little he could something spare,

To feed the hungry and to clothe the bare. Harte

Something of it arises from our infant state. Watts

4. A little; an indefinite quantity or degree. The man asked me a crown, but I gave him something more.—5. Distance not great.

It must be done to-night, and something from the palace. Shak

6. Something is used adverbially for in some degree; as, he was something discouraged; but the use is not elegant.

SOMETIME, adv. [some and time.] Once; formerly.

That fair and warlike form,
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did some time march. Shak.

2. At one time or other hereafter. [Sometime is really a compound noun, and at is understood before it; at some time.]

SOMETIMES, adv. [some and times.] At times; at intervals; not always; now and then. We are sometimes indisposed, sometimes occupied, sometimes at leisure; that is, at some times.

It is good that we be sometimes contradicted. Taylor.

2. At one time; opposed to another time.

SOMEWHAT, n. [some and what.] Something, though uncertain what.—2. More or less; a certain quantity or degree, indeterminate.

These salts have some what of a nitrous taste. Greiv.

3. A part, greater or less. Some what of his good sense will suffer in this transfusion, and much of the beauty of his thoughts will be lost. Dryden.

SOMEWHAT, adv. In some degree or quantity. This is some what more or less than was expected; he is some what aged; he is some what disappointed; some what disturbed.

SOMEWHERE, adv. [some and where.] In some place, unknown or not specified; in one place or another. He lives some where in obscurity. Dryden some where says, peace to the manes of the dead.

SOMEWHILE, adv. [some and while.] Once; for a time.

SOMEWHITHER, adv. To some indeterminate place.

SOMMERING. See SUMMERING.

SOMMITE, n. Nepheline; a mineral which occurs in small crystals and crystalline grains in the lava of Mount Somma, on Vesuvius.

SOMNAMBULATION, n. [L. somnus, sleep, and ambulo, to walk.] The act of walking in sleep.

SOMNAMBULE, n. A sleep-walker.

SOMNAMBULIC, a. Walking in sleep; pertaining to somnambulism.

SOMNAMBULISM, n. [supra.] The act or practice of walking in sleep. The term, however, is generally used in a more extended sense, to comprehend all the phenomena that take place when a person, apparently insensible to external objects, acts as if he were in a state of consciousness. The phenomena of sleep-walking are very singular, the person affected performing many voluntary actions implying to all appearance a certain degree of perception of the presence of external objects. The somnambulist gets out of bed, often dresses himself, goes out of doors, and walks frequently over very dangerous places in safety. On awaking in the morning, he is either utterly unconscious of having stirred during the night, or remembers it as a mere dream. Sometimes the transactions of the somnambulist are carried much farther; he will mount his horse and ride, or go to his usual occupation. In some cases, somnambulists are capable of holding conversation. The term Somnambulism is also used to denote a certain state of a person under the influence of animal magnetism, in which the patient is said to recover his internal consciousness, while his outward senses are still asleep, and is enabled to see and hear with the pit of his stomach, the ends of his fingers, &c. &c. [See MESMERISM.]

SOMNAMBULIST, n. A person who walks in his sleep.

SOMNER, † for Summoner.

SOMNIFEROUS, a. [L. somnifer; somnus, sleep, and fero, to bring; Fr. somnifère.] Causing or inducing sleep; soporific; as, a somniferous potion.

SOMNIFIC, a. [L. somnus, sleep, and facio, to make.] Causing sleep; tending to induce sleep.

SOMNIFOUENCE, n. The act or custom of talking in sleep.

SOMNIFOUISM, n. Somnifouence, or sleep-talking.

SOMNIFOUIST, n. One who talks in his sleep.

SOMNIFOUOUS, a. Apt to talk in sleep.

SOMNIFOUY, n. The talking of one in a state of somniphathy.

SOMNIFOUY, } n. [L. somnus and SOMNIFOUISM, } loquor.] A talking or speaking in sleep.

SOMNIPATHIST, n. A person in a state of somniphathy.

SOMNIPATHY, n. [L. somnus, sleep; and Gr. πάθος, suffering.] Sleep from sympathy, or by the process of mesmerism.

SOMNIUM, n. [L.] A dream; a combination of ideas or images that present themselves to the mind during sleep.

SOMNOLENCE, } n. [*Low L. somno-SOMNOLENCEY, } lentia; from som-
SOMNOLENCEY, } sleep; Sleepiness; drowsiness;
SOMNOLENCEY, } *inclination to sleep.

SOMNOLENT, a. Sleepy; drowsy; inclined to sleep.

SOMNOLENTLY, adv. Drowsily.

SOMNUS, n. In classical mythology, the god of sleep, the son of Erebus and Nox, or of Nox alone.

SÓN, n. [Sax. sunu; G. sohn; Dan. søn; Sans. sumu.] 1. A male child; the male issue of a parent, father, or mother. Jacob had twelve sons. Ishmael was the son of Hagar by Abraham.—2. A male descendant, however distant; hence in the plural, sons signifies descendants in general, a sense much used in the Scriptures. The whole human race are styled sons of Adam.—3. The compellation of an old man to a young one, or of a confessor to his penitent; or of a priest or teacher to his disciple; or a term of affection. Eli called Samuel his son. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift. Shak.

4. A native or inhabitant of a country; as, the sons of Britain. Let our country never be ashamed of her sons.

—5. The produce of any thing. Earth's tall sons, the cedar, oak, and pine.

Blackmore.
Note.—The primary sense of child is produce, issue; a shoot.—6. One adopted into a family.

Moses was the son of Pharaoh's daughter; Exod. ii.

7. One who is converted by another's instrumentality, is called his son; also, one educated by another; as, the sons of the prophets.—8. Christ is called the Son of God, as being conceived by the power of the Holy Spirit, or in consequence of his relation to the Father.—9. Son of pride, sons of light, son of Belial. These are Hebraisms, which denote that persons possess the qualities of pride, of light, or of Belial, as children inherit the qualities of their ancestors.

SONÁ'TA, n. [It. See SOUND.] A tune intended for an instrument only, as cantata is for the voice. It is generally a free composition for exhibiting the composer's powers, without confining him within the rigid rules of counterpoint or measure.

SON'EHUS, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Composite, sub-order Cichoraceæ. The species are inhabitants of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, and four are natives of Great Britain, where they are known by the name of sow-thistle. The most common species is S. oleraceus, the common sow-thistle. It has downy subumbellate flower-stalks; small yellow flowers, and a conical involucre when in seed, and is greedily fed upon by many animals. It grows in waste places, the borders of fields, and hedges.

SON'DERBUND. [Ger.] A league of the following seven Roman Catholic Cantons of Switzerland, namely, Lucerne, Friburg, Uri, Schwytz, Unterwalden, Zug, and Valais, which was formed in 1846, and was crushed in 1847, by the united power of the fifteen cantons; the sonderbund being an infraction of the federative constitution, as amended in 1845.

SONG, n. [Sax. song; G. sang, gesang. See SING.] 1. In general, that which is sung or uttered with musical modulations of the voice, whether of the human voice or that of a bird.—2. A little poem to be sung, or uttered with musical modulations; a ballad. The term is applied to either a short poetical or musical composition, but most frequently to both in union. As a poetical composition it may be largely defined a short poem divided into portions of returning measure, and turning upon some single thought or feeling. As a union of poetry and music, it may be defined a very brief lyrical poem, founded commonly upon agreeable subjects, to which is added a melody for the purpose of singing it. As denoting a musical composition, song is used to signify a vocal melody of any length or character, and not confined to a single movement; but as regards performance, it is confined to an air for a single voice. [See AIR, BALLAD, CANZONET.] The songs of a country are characteristic of its manners. Every country has its love songs, its war songs, and its patriotic songs.—3. A hymn; a sacred poem or hymn to be sung either in joy or thanksgiving, as that sung by Moses and the Israelites after escaping the dangers of the Red Sea and Pharaoh's wrath; or of lamentation, as that of David over the death of Saul and Jonathan. Songs of joy are represented as constituting a part of heavenly felicity.—4. A lay; a strain; a poem.

The bard that first adorn'd our native tongue,
Tun'd to his British lyre this ancient song.
Dryden.

5. Poetry; poesy; verse.

The subject for heroic song
Milton.

6. Notes of birds. [See DEF. 1.]

7. A mere trifle.

The soldier's pay is a song.
Sullivan.
Old song, a trifle.

I do not intend to be thus put off with an old song.
More.

SONG-BIRD, n. A bird that sings.

The nightingale is generally considered the sweetest of song-birds.

SONG-ENNOBLED, a. Ennobled in song.

SONG'ISH, a. Consisting of songs. [Low and not in use.]

SONG'STER, n. [song and Sax. steora, one that steers.] 1. One that sings; one skilled in singing; not often applied to human beings, or only in slight contempt.—2. A bird that sings; as, the little songster in his cage. [In this use, the word is elegant.]

SONG'STRESS, n. A female singer.

SONIF'EROUS, a. [L. sonus, sound, and fero, to bear.] Sounding; producing sound.

SON-IN-LAW, n. A man married to one's daughter.

SON'NET, n. [Fr. from It. sonetta; Sp. soneta. See SOUND.] 1. A short poem of fourteen lines, two stanzas of four verses each and two of three each, the rhymes being adjusted by a particular rule. The sonnet is a form of poetry much used by the Italian and Spanish poets; but not much in Britain, Germany, or France. The proper sonnet consists of two quatrains, with four lines and two rhymes each, and two tercines, each with three lines and a single rhyme. The last six lines, however, are susceptible of various arrangements; the one usually adopted in English is the rhyming of the fifth and sixth lines together, frequently after a full pause, so that the sonnet ends with a point, as in an epigram. The sonnet generally consists of one principal idea, pursued through the various antitheses of the different strophes. The lightness and richness of the Italian and Spanish languages enable their poets to express every feeling or fancy in the sonnet; but with us it has been found most suitable to grave, dignified, and contemplative subjects. Our best writers of sonnets are Milton and Wordsworth.—2. A short poem. I have sonnet that will serve the turn. Shak.

SON'NET, † v. i. To compose sonnets.

SONNETEER, n. [Fr. sonnetier.] A composer of sonnets or small poems; a small poet; usually in contempt.

SONNETER, † or SON'NETIST, † n. A sonneteer.

SONNETIZE, v. i. To compose sonnets.

SONOMETER, n. [L. sonus, sound, and Gr. μετρον, to measure.] An instrument for measuring sounds or the intervals of sounds.

SONORIF'IC, a. [L. sonus, sound, and facio, to make.] Producing sound; as, the sonorific quality of a body.

SONOROUS, a. [L. sonorus, from sonus, sound.] 1. Giving sound when struck. Metals are sonorous bodies.—2. Loud sounding; giving a clear or loud sound; as, a sonorous voice.—3. Yielding sound; as, the vowels are sonorous.—4. High sounding; magnificent of sound.

The Italian opera, amidst all the meanness and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison.

SONOROUSLY, adv. With sound; with a high sound.

SONOROUSNESS, n. The quality of yielding sound when struck, or coming in collision with another body; as, the sonorousness of metals.—2. Having or giving a loud or clear sound; as, the sonorousness of a voice or an instrument.—3. Magnificence of sound.

SONSHIP, n. [from son.] The state of being a son, or of having the relation of a son.—2. Filiation; the character of a son.

SON'SY, SON'SIE, a. Lucky; fortunate; happy; good humoured; well conditioned; plump; thriving; having sweet engaging looks. [Scotch.]

SOO'DRA, SU'DRA, or SOOD'ER, n. The fourth caste into which the Hindoos are divided. It comprehends the artizans and labourers. [See CASTE.]

SOO'FEE, n. Among Mohammedans, an infidel.

SOO'FEEISM, n. Mohammedan infidelity.

SOO'JA, n. A Japanese sance prepared from seeds of Dolichos soja, or Soja hispida. It is known in this country by the name of soy. The same name is also applied to the Chinese sauce called kitjop.

SOON, adv. [Sax. sona; Goth. suns.] 1. In a short time; shortly after any time specified or supposed; as, soon after sunrise; soon after dinner; I shall soon return; we shall soon have clear weather.—2. Early; without the usual delay; before any time supposed.

How is it that ye have come so soon to-day? Exod. ii.

3. Readily; willingly. But in this sense it accompanies would, or some other word expressing will.

I would as soon see a river winding among woods or in meadows, as when it is tossed up in so many whimsical figures at Versailles. Addison.

As soon as, so soon as, immediately at or after another event. As soon as the mail arrives, I will inform you.

As soon as Moses came nigh to the camp, he saw the calf and the dancing; Exod. xxxii.

SOON, † a. Speedy; quick.

SOON'DRY-TREE, } n. The Heriteria
SUN'DER-TREE, } robusta, a native of India. This tree gives name to the Sonderbunds, or great forest of soondry trees; a woody tract of country, 180 miles long, on the bay of Beugal, forming the delta of the Ganges.

SOO'NEE, n. One of a Mohammedan sect. Such sectaries are also called sonnites and sunnies.

SOON'LY, adv. Quickly; speedily.

SOO'PE MATI, n. In the East Indies, a native carbonate of soda, or mineral alkali.

SOOSHONG', n. A kind of black tea. [See SOUCHONG.]

SOO'SOO, n. Among the Bengalese, the name of a cataceous mammal, the Soosoo Gangeticus of Lesson.

SOOT, n. [Sax. sot; Ir. suth; W. sota, soot, that which is volatile or sudden. But qu. for the word is from the Ar. sauda, to be black.] A black substance formed by combustion, or disengaged from fuel in the process of combustion, rising in fine particles and adhering to the sides of the chimney or pipe conveying the smoke. The soot of coal and that of wood differ very materially in their composition; the former does not indeed appear to have been accurately analyzed, but it evidently contains more carbonaceous matter than the latter. Coal soot contains substances usually derived from animal matter; also sulphate and hydrochlorite of ammonia; and has been used for the preparation of the carbonate. It contains likewise an empyreumatic oil; but its chief basis is charcoal, in a state in which it is capable of being rendered soluble by the action of oxygen and moisture; and hence, combined with the action of the ammoniacal salts, it is used as a manure, and acts very powerfully as such. The soot of wood has been minutely analysed, and found to consist of fifteen different substances, of which ulmin, azotized matter, carbonate of lime, water, acetate and sulphate of lime, acetate of potash, carbonaceous matter insoluble in alkalies, are the principal. The soot of burned pine forms lampblack.

SOOT, v. t. To cover or foul with soot.

SOOTE, † or SOTE, † a. Sweet.

SOOTED, pp. Covered or soiled with soot.

SOOT'ERKIN, n. A kind of false birth, fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

SOOTH, † n. [Sax. soth; Ir. seadh.] 1. Truth; reality.—2. † Prognostication.—3. † Sweetness; kindness.

SOOTH, † a. Pleasing; delightful.—2. † True; faithful.

SOOTHE, v. t. [Sax. gesothian, to flatter. There seems to be a connection between this verb and the preceding sooth. The sense of setting, allay, or softening, would give that of truth, and of sweet, that is, smooth.] 1. To flatter; to please with blandishments or soft words.

Can I soothe tyranny? Dryden.
I've tried the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and caress'd, been angry, sooth'd again. Addison.

2. To soften; to assuage; to mollify; to calm; as, to soothe one in pain or passion; or to soothe pain. It is applied both to persons and things.—3. To gratify; to please.

Sooth'd with his future fame. Dryden.

SOOTH'ED, pp. Flattered; softened; calmed; pleased.

SOOTH'ER, n. A flatterer; he or that which softens or assuages.

SOOTH'ING, ppr. or a. Flattering; softening; assuaging.

SOOTH'INGLY, adv. With flattery or soft words.

SOOTH'LY, † adv. In truth; really.

SOOTH'SAY, v. i. [sooth and say.] To foretell; to predict; Acts xvi. [Little used.] SOOTH'SAYER, n. A foreteller; a prognosticator; one who undertakes to foretell future events without inspiration.

SOOTH'SAYING, n. The foretelling of future events by persons without divine aid or authority, and thus distinguished from prophecy.—2. † A true saying; truth.

SOOT'INESS, n. [from sooty.] The quality of being sooty or foul with soot; fuliginousness.

SOOT'ISH, a. Partaking of soot; like soot.

SOOT'Y, a. [Sax. sotig.] 1. Producing soot; as, sooty coal.—2. Consisting of soot; fuliginous; as, sooty matter.—3. Foul with soot.—4. Black like soot; dusky; dark; as, the sooty flag of Acheron.

SOOT'Y, v. t. To black or foul with soot. [Not authorized.]

SOP, n. [D. sop; Sax. sop; G. suppe, soup; Fr. soupe. Qu. soap.] 1. Any thing steeped or dipped and softened in liquor, but chiefly something thus dipped in broth or liquid food, and intended to be eaten.

Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine itself. Bacon.

2. Any thing given to pacify; so called from the sop given to Cerberus, in mythology. Hence the phrase, to give a sop to Cerberus.—Sop-in wine, a kind of pink.

SOP, v. t. To steep or dip in liquor.

SOPE. See SOAP.

SOPH, n. [L. sophista.] A certain distinction or title which under graduates in the university of Oxford assume, previous to their examination for a degree. It took its rise from the exercises which students formerly had to go through, but which are now out of use. [See SOPHISTER.]

SO'PHI, n. A title of the king of Persia.

SOPH'ICAL, † a. [Gr. σοφος, wise; σοφια, wisdom.] Teaching wisdom.

SOPH'ISM, n. [Fr. sophisme; L. sophisma; Gr. σοφισμα.] A specious proposition; a specious but fallacious argument; a subtily in reasoning; an argument that is not supported by sound reasoning, or in which the inference is not justly deduced from the premises. According to Aristotle, a sophism is the use of some word in a different sense in the premises from that in the conclusion. The following, called the "lying sophism," was a famous problem among the ancient sophists: "When a man says, I lie, does he lie, or does he not lie? If he lies, he speaks truth, and if he speaks the truth, he lies." Ignoratio elenchi, or a mistake of the question; Petitio principii, or a supposition of what is not granted, and reasoning in a circle, are species of sophisms.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy. Watts.

SOPH'IST, n. [L. sophista; Fr. sophiste; It. sofista.] 1. A professor of philosophy; as, the sophists of Greece. This name was first given to philosophers and those who were eminent for their wisdom and accomplishments. It was afterwards restricted to a bad sense, and applied to a class of men who rose in Greece in the fifth century before Christ, and who went about discoursing and debating, and taught the youth in the principal cities various arts and acquirements for hire. It thence came to be applied generally to all those who spent their time in verbal niceties, verbal quibbles, and philosophical enigmas.—2. A captious or fallacious reasoner.

SOPH'ISTER, † n. [Gr. σοφιστης.] The same as sophist,—which see.—2. In Cambridge university, the title of students who are advanced beyond the first year of their residence. The term is also used at Oxford and Dublin, and in some American colleges. In the latter, sophomore is the term occasionally used.—† A professor of philosophy; a sophist.

SORB'ILE, † a. [L. sorbeo.] That may be drank or sipped.

SORBI'TION, † n. [L. sorbitio.] The act of drinking or sipping.

SORBON'ICAL, a. Belonging to a sorbonist.

SOR'BONIST, n. A doctor of the Sorbonne in the university of Paris.

SORBON'NE, n. A celebrated college which existed in Paris for several centuries. It was founded by Robert de Sorbonne, an ecclesiastic of the 13th century, and intended for the education of secular priests in theology. The college of the Sorbonne was one of the four constituent parts of the faculty of theology in the university of Paris; and though the least numerous part, yet from the number of eminent men belonging to it, this college frequently gave name to the whole faculty; and graduates of the university of Paris, though not connected with this college, frequently styled themselves doctors or bachelors of the Sorbonne. The college of the Sorbonne exercised a high influence in ecclesiastical affairs, and on the public mind, especially in the 16th and 17th centuries.

SOR'BUS, n. A Linnæan genus of plants, comprising the mountain ash, rowan tree, and service tree. It is now made a subgenus of Pyrus. [See PYRUS, MOUNTAIN ASI.]

SORE/DIA, n. plur. [from Gr. σωειν, a heap.] In bot., heaps of pulverulent bodies scattered over the surface of the thallus, in lichens. These, along with the apothecia, form the reproductive organs of lichens.

SORE/HON, n. [Irish and Scottish.]

SORN, } A kind of servile tenure which subjected the tenant to maintain his chieftain gratuitously, whenever he wished to indulge himself in a debauch. So that when a person obtrudes himself on another for bed and board, he is said to sorn, or be a sorner.

SOR'EL, n. [dim. of sore.] A buck of the third year.

SOR'EL, a. Of a brownish colour, approaching to red. [See SORREL.]

SORELY, adv. [from sore.] With violent pain and distress; grievously; greatly; as, to be sorely pained or afflicted.—2. Greatly; violently; severely; as, to be sorely pressed with want; to be sorely wounded.

SORENESS, n. [from sore.] The tenderness of any part of an animal body, which renders it extremely susceptible of pain from pressure; as, the soreness of a boil, an abscess, or wound.—

2. Figuratively, tenderness of mind, or susceptibility of mental pain.

SOR'EX, n. A Linnæan genus of animals of the order Bæstia, now forming an extensive tribe of insectivorous ferines (Carnassiers) in the system of Cuvier, and subdivided into different genera. The original generic term was confined to the shrews or shrewmice, which form the type of the family Soricida.

SOR'GHUM, n. A genus of grasses, the species of which have been sometimes referred to the genus Holcus, and sometimes to Andropogon, and known by the general name millet. They form tall grasses with succulent stems, and are found in the tropical parts of Asia, whence they have spread to the warmer parts of Europe. S. vulgare is the largest of the small cereal grains, and is called in America guinea corn, and in some works the great or Indian millet. The different kinds are called jowary in India, where many of the inhabitants live upon these small dry grains, as upon rice. It has been introduced into the south of Europe, where it is chiefly used for feeding cattle and poultry, but it is also made into cakes.

SOR'GO, n. A plant of the genus Sorghum,—which see.

SOR'L, n. plur. sing. Sorus. [Gr. σωειν, a heap.] In bot., a term applied to the collections of the thecæ or capsules which are found on the edges or the under surface of the fronds of ferns. These are of various forms, and variously arranged. In most instances the sori are covered with a peculiar projecting portion of the epidermis, which is called the indusium, and forms an important characteristic in the systematic arrangement of these plants.

SORI'TES, n. [L. from Gr. σωειν, a heap.] In logic, an imperfect syllogism, or an abridged form of stating a series of syllogisms; or it is a species of reasoning in which a series of propositions are so linked together, that the predicate of the one becomes continually the next in succession, till a conclusion is formed by bringing together the subject of the first proposition and the predicate of the last. Thus, all men of revenge have their souls often uneasy. Uneasy souls are a plague to themselves. Now to be one's own plague is folly in the extreme. Therefore all men of revenge are extreme fools. A sorites has as many middle terms as there are intermediate propositions between the first and the last; and, consequently, it may be drawn out into as many syllogisms.

SORN'ED, pp. Obtruded upon a friend for bed and board.

SORN'ER, n. One who obtrudes himself on another for bed and board.—In Scots law, one who takes meat and drink from others by force or menaces, without paying for it. This offence was formerly so prevalent in Scotland, that the severest penalties were enacted against it, and at one period it was punishable with death.

SOROR'ICIDE, n. [L. soror, sister, and cedo, to strike, to kill.] The murder or murderer of a sister. [Little used.]

and obviously because the crime is very unfrequent.]

SOR'REL, n. [Sax. sur, sour; Dan. syre, sorrel; W. suran.] The popular name of certain species of Rumex, as Rumex acetosa, Rumex acetosella, &c., so named from its acid taste. [See RUMEX.] The wood sorrel is of the genus Oxalis. The mountain sorrel is of the genus Oxyria. The Indian red and Indian white sorrels are of the genus Hibiscus.—Sorrel tree, a North American tree of the genus Andromeda, the A. arborea, which sometimes attains the height of 50 feet. It is well adapted for an ornamental plant.—Salt of sorrel, binoxalate of potash.

SOR'RILY, adv. [from sorry.] Meantly; despicably; pitifully; in a wretched manner.

Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help, though I sing *sorri*ly.

Sidney.

SOR'RINESS, n. Meanness; poorness; despicableness.

SOR'RÖW, n. [Sax. sorg; Goth. saurga; Sw. and Dan. sorg, care, solicitude, sorrow; D. zorg; G. sorge, care, concern, uneasiness; from the same root as sore, heavy.] The uneasiness or pain of mind which is produced by the loss of any good, real or supposed, or by disappointment in the expectation of good; grief; regret; sadness; mourning. The loss of a friend we love occasions sorrow; the loss of property, of health, or any source of happiness, causes sorrow. We feel sorrow for ourselves in misfortunes; we feel sorrow for the calamities of our friends and our country.

A world of woe and sorrow.

Milton.

The safe and general antidote against sorrow is enjoyment

Rambler.

SOR'RÖW, v. i. [Sax. sarian, surgian, sorgian, Goth. saurgan, to be anxious, to sorrow.] To feel pain of mind in consequence of the actual loss of good, or of frustrated hopes of good, or of expected loss of happiness; to grieve; to be sad.

I rejoice not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance; 1 Cor. vii.

SORRY, a. [Sax. sarig, sari, from sar, sore.] 1. Grieved for the loss of some good; pained for some evil that has happened to one's self or friends or country. It does not ordinarily imply severe grief, but rather slight or transient regret. It may be, however, and often is used to express deep grief. We are sorry to lose the company of those we love; we are sorry to lose friends or property; we are sorry for the misfortunes of our friends or of our country.

And the king was sorry; Matt. xiv.

2. Melancholy; dismal.—3. Poor; mean; vile; worthless; as, a sorry slave; a sorry excuse.

Coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain. Milton.

SORT, n. [Fr. sorte; G. id.; L. sors, lot, chance, state, way, sort. This word is from the root of Fr. sortir, L. sortior; the radical sense of which is to start or shoot, to throw or to fall, to come suddenly. Hence sors is lot, chance, that which comes or falls. The sense of sort is probably derivative, signifying that which is thrown out, separated, or selected.] 1. A species; a rank subordinate to a kind; any number or collection of individual persons or things characterized by the same or like qualities; as, a sort of men; a sort of horses; a sort of trees; a sort of poems or writings. Sort is not a technical word, and therefore is used with less precision or more latitude than genus or species in the sciences.—2. 11. Generosity; nobleness of mind; a colloquial use.—12. An intelligent being. Every soul in heaven shall bend the knee. Milton.

13. Heart; affection. The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David; 1 Sam. xviii.

14. In scrip., appetite; as, the full soul; the hungry soul; Prov. xxvii.; Job xxxiii.—15. A familiar compellation of a person, but often expressing some qualities of the mind; as, alas, poor soul; he was a good soul.

SÖUL, † v. t. To endure with a soul.
SÖUL, † v. i. [Sax. sufel, sufel, broth, pottage.] To afford suitable sustenance.

SÖUL-BELL, † n. The passing bell.
SÖUL-BETRAYING, a. Tending to betray the soul.

SÖUL-CALMING, a. Tranquillizing the soul.

SÖUL-CONFIRMING, a. Giving confidence.

SÖUL-DESTROYING, a. Pernicious to the soul. Procrastination of repentance and faith is a soul-destroying evil.

SÖUL-DISEASED, † a. Diseased in soul or mind.

SÖUL-DISSOLVING, a. Melting or tending to soften the soul.

SÖULED, a. Furnished with a soul or mind; as, Grecian chiefs largely souled. [Little used.]

SÖUL-ENTRANCING, a. Enrapturing the soul.

SÖUL-FELT, a. Deeply felt.

SÖUL-HARDENED, a. Having an obdurate heart.

SÖULESS, a. Without a soul, or without greatness or nobleness of mind; mean; spiritless.

Slave, souless villain. Shak.

SÖUL-REFRESHING, a. Comforting the soul.

SÖUL-SCOT, † n. [soul and scot.] A SÖUL-SHOT, † funeral duty, or money paid by the Romanists in former times for a requiem for the soul.

SÖUL-SEARCHING, a. Searching the soul or heart.

SÖUL-SELLING, a. [soul and sell.] Selling persons; dealing in the purchase and sale of human beings.

SÖUL-SICK, a. [soul and sick.] Diseased in mind or soul; morally diseased.

SÖUL-STIRRING, a. Exciting the soul.

SÖUL-SUBDU'ING, a. Subduing the soul.

SÖUL-VEXED, a. Grieved at heart.

SOUND, a. [Sax. sund; G. gesund; L. sanus; Fr. sain; Ch. and Syr. כסין, chasin. It is from driving, or straining, stretching.] 1. Entire; unbroken; not shaky, split, or defective; as, sound timber.—2. Undecayed; whole; perfect, or not defective; as, sound fruit; a sound apple or melon.—3. Unbroken; not bruised or defective; not lacerated or decayed; as, a sound limb.—4. Not carious; not decaying; as, a sound tooth.—5. Not broken or decayed; not defective; as, a sound ship.—6. Whole; entire; unhurt; unutilated; as, a sound body.—7. Healthy; not diseased; not being in a morbid state; having all the organs complete and in perfect action; as, a sound body; sound health; a sound constitution; a sound man; a sound horse.—8. Founded in truth; firm; strong; valid; solid; that cannot be overthrown or refuted; as, sound reasoning; a sound argument; a sound objection; sound doctrine; sound principles.—9. Right; correct; well founded; free from error; orthodox; 2 Tim. i.

Let my heart be sound in thy statutes; Ps. cxix.

10. Heavy; laid on with force; as, sound strokes; a sound beating.—11. Founded in right and law; legal; valid; not defective; that cannot be overthrown; as, a sound title to land; sound justice.—12. Fast; profound; unbroken; undisturbed; as, sound sleep.—13. Perfect, as intellect; not broken or defective; not enfeebled by age or accident; not wild or wandering; not deranged; as, a sound mind; a sound understanding or reason.—Sound currency, in com., a currency whose actual value is the same as its nominal value, and if in bank notes or other substitute for silver and gold, a currency which is so sustained by funds, that it is at any time convertible into gold and silver, and of course of equal value.

SOUND, adv. Soundly; heartily. So sound he slept that naught might him awake. Spenser.

SOUND, n. The air-bladder of a fish.—2. A name given to the cuttle-fish.

SOUND, n. [Sax. sund, a narrow sea or strait, a swimming; Pers. shana, a swimming, L. natatio. Qu. can this name be given to a narrow sea because wild beasts were accustomed to pass it by swimming, like Bosporus; or is the word from the root of sound, whole, denoting a stretch, or narrowness, from stretching, like straight; or, from its sounding?] A narrow passage of water, or a strait between the main land and an isle; or a strait connecting two seas, or connecting a sea or lake with the ocean; as, the sound which connects the Baltic with the ocean, between Denmark and Sweden.

SOUND, n. [Fr. sonde; Sp. sonda. See the following verb.] An instrument which surgeons introduce into the bladder, in order to discover whether there is a stone in that viscus or not.

SOUND, v. t. [Sp. sondar or sondear; Fr. sonder. This word is probably connected with the L. sonus, Eng. sound, the primary sense of which is to stretch or reach.] 1. To try, as the depth of water and the quality of the ground, by sinking a plummet or lead, attached to a line on which are marked the number of fathoms. The lower end of the lead is covered with tallow, by means of which some portion of the earth, sand, gravel, shells, &c. of the bottom, adhere to it and are drawn up. By these means, and the depth of water and the nature of the bottom, which are carefully marked on good charts, seamen may know how far a ship is from land in the night or in thick weather, and in many cases when the land is too remote to be visible. [See SOUNDING.]—2. To introduce a sound into the bladder of a patient, in order to ascertain whether a stone is there or not.

When a patient is to be sounded. Cooper.

3. To try; to examine; to discover or endeavour to discover that which lies concealed in another's breast; to search out the intention, opinion, will, or desires.

I was in jest, And by that offer meant to sound your breast. Dryden.

I've sounded my Numidians man by man. Addison SOUND, v. i. To use the line and lead in searching the depth of water.

The shipmen sounded, and found it twenty fathoms; Acts xxvii.

SOUND, n. [Sax. son; W. swen; Ir. soin; Fr. son; L. sonus, from sono, to sound, sing, rattle, beat, &c. This may be dialectical variation of L. tonus, tono, which seems to be allied to Gr. τωω, to stretch or strain, L. teneo.] 1. Noise; report; the object of hearing; that which strikes the ear; or more philosophically, an impression, or the effect of an impression, made on the organs of hearing by the vibrations of the air or other medium with which these organs are in contact, which vibrations are caused by the vibrations or tremulous motions of the sounding body; as, the sound of a trumpet or drum; the sound of the human voice; a horrid sound; a charming sound; a sharp sound; a high sound; a loud sound; a low sound; an acute sound; a grave sound. No body can emit a sound unless it be put into a tremulous or vibratory motion; and hence, sound considered with respect to the sounding body, consists of a motion of vibration impressed on the parts of the body; this motion is communicated to the air which surrounds the body, and produces in it corresponding undulations, by which the ear being affected, the sensation of sound is produced. The propagation of sound is not instantaneous; that is to say, the sensation is not produced at the same instant as the motion in the sonorous body which causes it;

for if a gun or a piece of ordnance be discharged at a considerable distance, the flash will be first seen, and after some seconds have elapsed, the report will be heard. In like manner, lightning always precedes thunder, and if the thunder cloud be at a considerable distance, several seconds will elapse before the thunder is heard. It has been ascertained that the atmosphere, in its ordinary state, conducts sound at the rate of 1130 feet per second. The velocity is subject to some slight variation, owing to the change of temperature, the moisture suspended in the air, and other causes; but 1130 feet per second may be taken as an average rate. If, however, there be a wind, its velocity must be added to 1130 feet, when it blows from the sounding body; and subtracted when it blows in a contrary direction. From these data, we are enabled to determine distances with considerable accuracy. For example, when a ship at sea fires a gun, by multiplying 1130 feet, the mean velocity of sound per second, by the number of seconds that elapse between the flash and the report, we obtain the distance of the ship in feet. In the same way we may ascertain the distance of a thunder cloud. Sound is propagated or radiates from the sounding body, in all directions, and in straight lines, and diminishes in intensity as it recedes from the sounding body; so that at different distances from the body, it is inversely as the squares of those distances. When sound is arrested in its progress by a smooth, hard, or elastic surface, as a rock, the wall of a house, of a cavern, or of a vault, it is thrown back or reflected, and thus forms what is called an echo, the law of the reflection being that the angle of reflection is always equal to the angle of incidence. Sounds are as various as the means that concur in producing them. Noise and discordant sounds arise from a want of isochronism in the vibrations of the sounding body; and loudness of sound depends on the greater extent of the vibrations. When the vibrations of a sonorous body are isochronous, the sound is always musical, and the quicker the vibrations, the more acute is the tone. The determination of the laws according to which sound is produced and transmitted to our organs, forms the object of that branch of physical science termed acoustics. — 2. A vibration of air caused by a collision of bodies or other means, sufficient to affect the auditory nerves when perfect. Some persons are so entirely deaf that they cannot hear the loudest sounds. Audible sounds are such as are perceptible by the organs of hearing. Sounds not audible to men, may be audible to animals of more sensible organs. — 3. Noise without signification; empty noise; noise and nothing else.

It is the sense and not the sound, that must be the principle.

Locke.

Sound dues, the sea-toll levied on all vessels passing the sound between Denmark and Sweden, collected at Elsinour. SOUND, v. i. To make a noise; to utter a voice; to make an impulse of the air that shall strike the organs of hearing with a particular effect. We say, an instrument sounds well or ill; it sounds shrill; the voice sounds harsh.

And first taught speaking trumpets how to sound.

Dryden.

2. To exhibit by sound or likeness of sound. This relation sounds rather like a fiction than a truth. — 3. To be conveyed in sound; to be spread or published.

From you sounded out the word of the Lord; 1 Thess. i.

SOUND'ABLE, a. Not unfathomable; as, a soundable sea.

SOUND'-BOARD, } n. The prin-SOUND'ING-BOARD, } cipal part of an organ, and that which makes the whole machine play. It is a reservoir into which the wind, drawn in by the bellows, is conducted by a port vent, and thence distributed into the pipes, placed over the holes of its upper part. It is also a thin board that propagates the sound in a violin, piano, harp, &c.

To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes.
Milton.

SOUND-BOARDING, n. In arch., the sound boarding of floors consists of short boards, which are disposed transversely between the joists, and supported by fillets fixed to the sides of the joists, for holding the substance called pugging, intended to prevent sound from being transmitted from one story to another. [See PUGGING.] In Scotland, sound-boarding is termed deafening-boarding.

SOUND'ED, pp. Caused to make a noise; uttered audibly. — 2. Explored; examined.

SOUND'ER, n. An instrument for sounding.

SOUND'-HEADED, a. Having sound principles.

SOUND'-HEARTED, a. Having a sound heart or affections.

SOUND'ING, ppr. Causing to sound; uttering audibly. — 2. Trying the depth of water by the plummet; examining the intention or will. — 3. a. Sonorous; making a noise. — 4. Having a magnificent sound; as, words more sounding or significant.

SOUND'ING, n. The act of uttering noise; the act of endeavouring to discover the opinion or desires; the operation of trying the depth of the sea, and the nature of its bottom, by means of a plummet sunk from a ship to the bottom. [See SOUNDINGS.] — 2. In sur., the operation of introducing the sound into the bladder; called searching for the stone.

SOUND'ING-BOARD, or SOUND'-BOARD, n. A board or structure placed over a pulpit or other place occupied by a public speaker, to reflect the sound of his voice, and thereby render it more audible. Sounding boards are generally flat, and placed horizontally over the head of the speaker; but concave parabolic sounding boards have been tried, and found to answer better. — 2. In musical instruments, the thin board placed under the strings, as in a violin.

SOUND'ING-LINE, n. A line for trying the depth of water.

SOUND'ING-POST, n. A small post in a violin and violoncello, set under the bridge for a support, and for propagating the sounds to the back of the instrument.

SOUND'ING-ROD, n. A rod or piece of iron used to ascertain the depth of water in a ship's hold. It is let down in a groove by a pump.

SOUND'INGS, n. The depths of water in rivers, harbours, along shores, and even in the open seas, which are ascertained by the operation of sounding. The term is also used to signify any place or part of the ocean, where a deep sounding line will reach the bottom; also, the kind of ground or bottom where the lead reaches. There are two plummet used in sounding, one called the hand lead, the other the deep-sea lead; both are shaped like the frustum of a cone. [See LEAD.] Sounding with the hand-lead, called by seamen heaving the lead, is generally performed by a single person, who stands in the main chains to windward, and throws the lead forward while the ship is in motion; so that by the lead sinking while the ship advances, the line may be almost perpendicular when it reaches the bottom. In using the deep sea lead at sea, or in deep water, it is usual previously to bring-to the ship, in order to retard her course; the lead is then thrown as far as possible from the ship, on the line of her drift, so that, as it sinks, the ship drives more perpendicularly over it. The bottom of the lead being well rubbed over with tallow, retains the distinguishing marks of the bottom; as, shells, ooze, gravel, &c. The depth of the water, and the nature of the ground, are carefully marked in the log book. In soundings, implies the being so near the land that a deep sea lead will attain the bottom, which is seldom practicable in the ocean.

SOUND'LESS, a. That cannot be fathomed; having no sound.

SOUND'LY, adv. [from sound, entire.] Healthily; heartily. — 2. Severely; lustily; with heavy blows; smartly; as, to beat one soundly. — 3. Truly; without fallacy or error; as, to judge or reason soundly. — 4. Firmly; as, a doctrine soundly settled. — 5. Fast; closely; so as not to be easily awakened; as, to sleep soundly.

SOUND'NESS, n. Wholeness; entireness; an unbroken, unimpaired, or undecayed state; as, the soundness of timber, of fruit, of the teeth, of a limb, &c. [See SOUND.] — 2. An unimpaired state of an animal or vegetable body; a state in which the organs are entire and regularly perform their functions. We say, the soundness of the body, the soundness of the constitution, the soundness of health. — 3. Firmness; strength; solidity; truth; as, soundness of reasoning or argument, of doctrine or principles. — 4. Truth; rectitude; firmness; freedom from error or fallacy; orthodoxy; as, soundness of faith.

SOUND-POST, n. A prop within a violin, &c. [See SOUNDING-POST.]

SÖUP, n. [Fr. soupe; G. suppe. See SUP and SOP.] The substance of meat infused in water by boiling, with various other ingredients. Soups are of many different kinds; as, brown soup; white soup; hare soup; turtle soup; pea soup, &c. — Portable soup, a sort of cake formed of concentrated broth, freed from fat, and by long-continued boiling, from all the putrescent parts, and thereby reduced to the consistence of glue; which, in reality, it is. It will keep sound for many years, and in long voyages it has been found to be a valuable article of food. It is made into soup by pouring boiling water upon it with a little salt, and stirring till it dissolves.

SÖUP, † v. i. To sup; to breathe out.

SŪP, † v. t. To sweep. [See SWEEP and SWOOP.]

SOUP-LA'DLE, n. A large spoon for lading soup or broth.

SOUR, a. [Sax. sur, surig; G. sauer; W. sür; Fr. sur, süre; Heb. סור, sur, to depart, to decline, to turn, as liquors, to become sour.] 1. Acid; having a pungent taste; sharp to the taste; tart; as, vinegar is sour; sour cider; sour beer.—2. Acid and austere or astringent; as, sun-ripe fruits are often sour.—3. Harsh of temper; crabbed; peevish; austere; morose; as, a man of a sour temper.—4. † Afflictive; as, sour adversities.—5. Expressing discontent or peevishness. He never uttered a sour word.

The lord treasurer often looked on me with a sour countenance. Swift.
6. Harsh to the feelings; cold and damp; as, sour weather.—7. Rancid; musty.—8. Turned, as milk; coagulated.

SOUR, n. A sour or acid substance.

SOUR, v. t. To make acid; to cause to have a sharp taste.

So the sun's heat, with different pow'rs,
Ripens the grape, the liquor sours.

2. To make harsh, cold, or unkindly.
Tufts of grass sour land. Mortimer.

3. To make harsh in temper; to make cross, crabbed, peevish, or discontented. Misfortunes often sour the temper. Pride had not sour'd, nor wrath debas'd my heart. Harte.

4. To make uneasy or less agreeable.
Hail, great king!
To sour your happiness I must report
The queen is dead. Shak.

5. In rural economy, to macerate, as lime, and render fit for plaster or mortar.

SOUR, v. i. To become acid; to acquire the quality of tartness or pungency to the taste. Cider sours rapidly in the rays of the sun. When food sours in the stomach, it is evidence of imperfect digestion.—2. To become peevish or crabbed.

They hinder the hatred of vice from souring into severity. Addison.

SOURCE, n. [Fr. source; Arm. sourcenn; either from soudre or sortir, or the L. surgo. The Italian sorgente is from surgo.] 1. Properly, the spring or fountain from which a stream of water proceeds, or any collection of water within the earth or upon its surface, in which a stream originates. This is called also the head of the stream. We call the water of a spring, where it issues from the earth, the source of the stream or rivulet proceeding from it. We say also that springs have their sources in subterranean ponds, lakes, or collections of water. We say also that a large river has its source in a lake. For example, the St. Lawrence has its source in the great lakes of America.—2. First cause; original; that which gives rise to anything. Thus ambition, the love of power and of fame, have been the sources of half the calamities of nations. Intemperance is the source of innumerable evils to individuals.—3. The first producer; he or that which originates; as, Greece, the source of arts.

SOUR'-CROUT, or SOUR'-KROUT, n. [G. sauer-kraut, i. e. sour-cabbage.] Cabbage cut fine, pressed into a cask, and suffered to ferment till it becomes sour, and then cooked.

SOUR'DET, n. [Fr. sourdine, from sourd, deaf.] The little pipe of a trumpet.

SOUR'-DOCK, n. Sorrel, so called.

SOUR'ED, pp. Made sour; made peevish.

SOUR-EYED, † a. Having a cross look.

SOUR'-GŪRD, n. A plant of the genus Adansonia, the A. digitata, Linn.

SOUR'ING, ppr. Making acid; becoming sour; making peevish.

SOUR'ING, n. That which makes acid.

SOUR'ISH, a. Somewhat sour; moderately acid; as, sourish fruit; a sourish taste.

SOUR'LY, adv. With acidity.—2. With peevishness; with acrimony.

The stern Athenian prince
Then sourly smil'd. Dryden.

3. Discontentedly.

SOUR'NESS, n. Acidity; sharpness to the taste; tartness; as, the sourness of vinegar or of fruit.

Sourness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe. Arbuthnot.

2. Asperity; harshness of temper.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness mingle with our seriousness of mind. Nelson.

SOUR'-SOP, n. A plant, the Anona muricata. The custard apple.

SŪS, pl. of Sou, which see. [Some English writers have erroneously used sous with a singular meaning.]

SOUSE, n. [Ir. sousgeach, watery.] 1. Pickle made with salt.—2. Something kept or steeped in pickle; any thing parboiled in a salt pickle.—3. The ears, feet, &c., of swine pickled.—4. A violent attack, as of a bird striking its prey.

SOUSE, v. t. To steep in pickle.

But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart Pope.

2. To plunge into water.

They soused me into the Thames, with as little remorse as they drown blind puppies. Shak.

SOUSE, v. i. [Ger. sausen, to rush.] To fall suddenly on; to rush with speed; as a hawk on its prey.

Joe's bird will souse upon the tim'rous hare. Dryden.

SOUSE, v. t. To strike with sudden violence.

SOUSE, adv. With sudden violence. [Familiar.]

SŌUSE or SOURCE, n. [Fr. sous, under, below.] In arch., a support, or underprop.

SŌUS'ED, pp. Steeped in pickle.—2. Plunged into water.

SŌUS'TENU or SŌUTENU, [Fr.] In her., a term applied when a chief is, as it were, supported by a small part of the escentheon beneath it, of a different colour or metal from the chief, and reaching, as the chief does, from side to side, being, as it were, a small part of the chief of another colour, and supporting the real chief.

SŌUTER, n. [Sax. sutere; L. sutor.] A shoemaker; a cobbler. [Scotch.]

SŌUTERLY, adv. Like a cobbler; low, vulgar. [Scotch.]

SŌUTERRAIN, n. [Fr.; that is, sub-terrain, under ground.] A grotto or cavern under ground. [Not English.]

SOUTH, n. [Sax. suth; G. sud; Fr. sud.]

1. One of the four cardinal points of the compass. The north and south are opposite points in the horizon; each ninety degrees or the quarter of a great circle distant from the east and west. A man standing with his face toward the east or rising sun, has the south on his right hand. The meridian of every place is a great circle passing through the north and south points. Strictly, south is the horizontal point in the meridian of a place, on the right hand of a person standing with his face toward the east. But the words applied to any point in the meridian, between the horizon and the zenith.—2. In a less exact sense, any point or place on the earth or in the heavens, which is near the meridian toward the right hand as one faces the east.—3. A southern region, country, or place; as, the queen of the south, in Scripture. So in Europe, the people of Spain and Italy are spoken of as living in the south.—4. † The wind that blows from the south.

SOUTH, a. In any place north of the tropic of Cancer, pertaining to or lying in the meridian toward the sun; as, a south wind.—2. Being in a southern direction; as, the south sea.

SOUTH, adv. Toward the south, from the south. A ship sails south; the wind blows south.

SOUTHCOT'TIANS, n. The followers of Joanna Southcott, a religious fanatic, who was born at Gittisham, in Devonshire, in 1750. She first pretended to a divine mission, and held herself out as the woman spoken of in the book of Revelation. After she had attained her grand climacteric, in 1814, she announced herself as the mother of the promised Shiloh, whose speedy advent she predicted. Her death, in December of that year, did not undeceive her disciples, and the sect continued to exist for many years, nor are we aware that it is yet altogether extinct. Many of her followers wore long beards and a peculiar costume.

SOUTHEAST, n. The point of the compass equally distant from the south and east.

SOUTHEAST, a. In the direction of southeast, or coming from the southeast; as, a southeast wind.

SOUTHEASTERN, a. Toward the southeast.

SOUTHERLY, a. Lying at the south, or in a direction nearly south; as, a southerly point.—2. Coming from the south or a point nearly south; as, a southerly wind.

SOUTHERN, a. [Sax. suth and ern, place.] 1. Belonging to the south; meridional, lying on the south side of the equator; as, the southern hemisphere; southern latitudes, southern signs, &c.—2. Lying toward the south; as, a southern country or climate.—3. Coming from the south; as, a southern breeze.

SOUTHERNER, n. In America, an inhabitant or native of the south or southern states.

SOUTH'ERNLINESS, n. State of being southerly.

SOUTHERNLY, adv. Toward the south.

SOUTHERNMŌST, a. Furthest toward the south.

SOUTHERNWOOD, n. (suth'ern-wood.) A plant nearly allied to the wormwood. The southernwood is the Artemisia abrotanum, a congener of the wormwood. It is found in almost every cottage garden, and was formerly employed in medicine as a stomachic and stimulant. [See ARTEMISIA.]

SOUTH'ING, a. Going toward the south; as, the southing sun.

SOUTH'ING, n. Tendency or motion to the south.—2. The southing of the moon, the time at which the moon passes the meridian.—3. In navigation, the difference of latitude made by a ship in sailing to the southward.

SOUTH'MOST, a. Furthest toward the south.

SOUTH'RON, n. In ancient Scotland, the name of a native of South Britain; an Englishman. Applied also by the Highlanders to the Lowlanders of Scotland.

SOUTH'SAY, } See SOOTHSAV.

SOUTH'SAYER, }

SOUTHWARD, adv. Toward the south; as, to go southward.

SOUTHWARD, n. The southern regions or countries.

SOUTHWEST', n. [south and west.] The point of the compass equally distant from the south and west.

SOUTHWEST', a. Lying in the direction of the southwest; as, a southwest country.—2. Coming from the southwest; as, a southwest wind.

SOUTH-WEST'ER, n. A strong southwest wind.

SOUTHWEST'ERLY, a. In the direction of southwest, or nearly so.—2. Coming from the southwest, or a point near it; as, a southwesterly wind.

SOUTHWEST'ERN, a. In the direction of southwest, or nearly so; as, to sail a southwestern course.

Note.—Southerly, southern, southerly, southernmost, southward, often receive the technical sea pronunciation, Suth'eryly, suth'ern, suth'ernly, suth'ernmost, suth'ard. Southwest, southwest, and southwestern, are, for the same reason, often contracted into sow'west, sow-west'er, and sowwest'ern.

SÖUVENANCE, † n. [Fr.] Remembrance.

SÖUVENIR, n. [Fr.] A remembrancer.

SOVEREIGN, a. (suv'eran.) [We retain this barbarous orthography from the Norman sovereign, which doubtless was adopted through a mistake of its origin. The true spelling would be superan, from the L. supernus, superus; Fr. souverain.] 1. Supreme in power; possessing supreme dominion; as, a sovereign prince. God is the sovereign ruler of the universe.—2. Supreme; superior to all others; chief. God is the sovereign good of all who love and obey him.—3. Supremely; efficacious; superior to all others; predominant; effectual; as, a sovereign remedy.—4. Supreme; pertaining to the first magistrate of a nation; as, sovereign authority.

SOVEREIGN, n. (suv'eran.) A supreme lord or ruler; one who possesses the highest authority without control, a person or body of persons in whom the legislative authority rests in every state. Some earthly princes, kings, and emperors are sovereigns in their dominions.—2. A supreme magistrate; a king or queen regnant.—3. A gold coin of the value of 20s. sterling, and weighing 123.374 grains troy.—4. A gold coin current at 22s. 6d. in the reign of Henry VIII. and which was in use till the time of James I.

SÖVEREIGNIZE, † v. i. (suv'eranize.) To exercise supreme authority.

SÖVEREIGNLY, adv. (suv'eranly.) Supremely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in himself. [Little used.] Boyle.

SÖVEREIGNTY, n. (suv'eranty.) Supreme power; supremacy; the possession of the highest power, or of uncontrollable power. Absolute sovereignty belongs to God only.

SOW'ENS, } n. [Scottish.] A nutritious

SOW'INS, } article of food made from SOW'ANS, } the husk of the oat, by a process not unlike that by which common starch is made. The husk of the oat, (called in Scotland seeds.) after being separated from the oatmeal by the sieve, still retains a considerable portion of farinaceous matter. It is steeped in water till the farinaceous matter is dissolved, and till the liquid has become sour. The whole is then made to pass through a sieve, which allows the milky liquid to pass through, but retains the husks. The liquid thus obtained is loaded with starchy matter which subsides to the bottom. The sour liquor is decanted off, and about an equal quantity of fresh water added. This mixture, when boiled, forms sowens, a very wholesome and nutritious article of food, which is much used in Scotland. It is eaten with milk or beer. In England it is called flummary. SÖWER, n. He that scatters seed for propagation.

Behold, a sower went forth to sow; Matth. xiii.

2. One who scatters or spreads; as, a sower of words.—3. A breeder; a promoter; as, a sower of suits.

SÖWING, ppr. Scattering, as seed; sprinkling with seed, as ground; stocking with seed.

SÖWING MACHINE, n. A machine for depositing seeds in the soil, either equally over its surface, or in rows. Various machines of this kind have been contrived.

SÖWL, † v. t. To pull by the ears.

SÖWMING, } In Scots law, two old

ROWMING, } terms now applied to the action whereby the number of cattle to be brought upon a common by the persons respectively, having a servitude of pasturage, may be ascertained. The criterion is the number of cattle which each of the dominant proprietors is able to fodder during winter. A sowm of land is as much as will pasture one cow or ten sheep, or in some places one cow and five sheep; and, strictly speaking, to sowm the common is to ascertain the several sowms it may hold; and to rowm it is to portion it out amongst the dominant proprietors.

SÖWN, pp. Scattered, as seed; sprinkled with seed, as ground.

SOY, n. A kind of sauce prepared in China and Japan, from a small bean, the fruit of the Soja-hispida. It is eaten with fish, cold meat, &c. There are two or three qualities of soy, but the Japan soy is reckoned the best. [See SOJA-HISPIDA.]

SOY'A or SÖW'A, n. An umbelliferous plant cultivated in India. It is the Anethum sowa of Roxburgh, the aromatic seed of which is much used by the natives in cookery, as well as for medicinal purposes.

SPA, n. A general name for a mineral spring. It is derived from a place, (Spa or spaa) in Belgium, celebrated for its mineral springs. It is situate about twenty miles from Aix-la-chapelle.

SPAAD, n. A kind of mineral; spar. [Sp. espato.]

SPACE, n. [Fr. espace; L. spatium, space; spatior, to wander. This word is probably formed on the root of pateo.] 1. Room; extension in all directions. Space, in the abstract, is mere extension. Space is a simple idea, of which the modes are distance, capacity, extension, duration, &c. Space, considered with regard to length only, is the same idea as that which we have of distance. If it be considered in regard to length, breadth, and thickness, it is the same as capacity. When considered between the extremities or boundaries of matter, which fills the capacity of space with something solid, tangible, and movable, it is called extension. Space may be conceived as existing without matter, for although the whole matter of the universe were annihilated, space would still remain. Space is usually divided into absolute and relative. Absolute space is that which is considered in its own nature, without regard to any thing external, which always remains the same; and is unbounded and immovable. Relative space is any portion of absolute space. It is capable of measurement, and is considered in regard to material objects. The ideas of space and of time enter into all our speculations on physical phenomena, and they are both necessarily involved in the idea of motion.

2. Any quantity of extension. In relation to bodies, space is the interval between any two or more objects; as, the space between two stars or two hills. The quantity of space or extent between bodies, constitutes their distance from each other.—3. In geom., the surface of any figure, or that which fills the interval or distance between the lines that terminate or bound the figure.—4. In mech., the line which a moving body considered as a point, is conceived to describe by its motion. In uniform motion a body passes over equal spaces in equal times.—5. The distance or interval between lines; as, in books.—Among printers, a kind of blank type, with a shorter shank than the letter types, for separating words.—In music, the void between the lines in a staff. The spaces are four in number, and the lines five. The spaces in music are named as well as the lines.—6. Quantity of time; also, the interval between two points of time.

Nine times the space that measures day and night. Milton.

God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space for repentance. Tillotson.

7. A short time; a while. To stay your deadly strife a space. Spenser. [This sense is nearly obsolete.]

To scatter a liquid substance on; to sprinkle with water or any fluid, or with any moist and dirty matter; as, to spatter a coat; to spatter the floor; to spatter the boots with mud. [This word is applied always to fluid or moist substances. We say, to spatter with water, mud, blood, or gravy; but never to spatter with dust or meal.]—2. Figuratively, to asperse; to defame. [In this sense, asperse is generally used.]—3. † To throw out any thing offensive; as, to spatter foul speeches.—4. To scatter about; as, to spatter water here and there.

SPAT'TER, v. i. To throw out of the mouth in a scattered manner; to sputter. [See SPUTTER.]

SPAT'TERDASHES, n. plur. [spatter and dash.] Coverings for the legs, to keep them clean from water and mud. [Since boots are generally worn, these things and their name are little used.]

SPATTERED, pp. Sprinkled or fouled by some liquid or dirty substance.—2. Aspersed.

SPAT'TERING, ppr. Sprinkling with moist or foul matter.—2. Aspersing.

SPAT'TLE, † n. Spittle.—2. A spatula.

SPAT'TLING-POPPY, n. A plant, Silene inflata. It may be used as a substitute for asparagus, or green pease, the young shoots having the flavour of both.

SPAT'ULA, n. [L. spathula, spatha, a slice; W. yspodol; from the root of L. pateo; so named from its breadth, or from its use in spreading things.] A slice; an apothecary's instrument for spreading plasters, salves, &c.

SPAT'ULATE, a. [from L. spathula.] In bot., a spatulate leaf is one shaped, like a spatula or battledore, being roundish, with a long, narrow,

linear base; as in Cistus incanus.—2. In conchol., applied to shells which are rounded and broad at the top, and become narrower below.—3. In cutom., applied to the

commencing with a narrow base, gradually widening by the lateral margins sloping out, and terminating at the extremity

by a sudden straight line.

SPAVIN, n. [It. spavenio, spavano, spavin, a cramp; Fr. eparvin; Sp. esparavan; Port. esparavam.] A tumour or excrescence that forms on the inside of a horse's hough, not far from the elbow; at first like gristle, but afterward hard and bony.

SPAVINED, a. Affected with spavin.

SPAWL, v. t. [G. spawel, spawel, spawel, to spawl, to spew. Spew is a contracted word.] 1. To throw saliva from the mouth in a scattering form;

to disperse spittle in a careless, dirty manner. Why must he spatter, spawl, and slaver it?

Swift.

2. A fragment of stone.

SPAWL, n. Saliva or spittle thrown out carelessly.

SPAWLING, ppr. Throwing spittle carelessly from the mouth.

SPAWLING, n. Saliva thrown out

carelessly.

SPAWN, n. It has no plural. [If this word is not contracted, it belongs to the root of L. pono, Fr. pondre, to lay eggs. If contracted, it probably belongs to the root of spew or spawl.

The radical sense is, that which is ejected or thrown out.] 1. The eggs or ova of fishes and frogs when deposited, from which a new progeny arises, that continues the species. In the oviparous fishes, with distinct sexes,

the eggs are impregnated externally and arrive at maturity without the aid of the mother. The spawn being deposited by the female, the male then pours upon it the impregnating fluid.

In the ovoviviparous fishes, sexual intercourse takes place, and the eggs are hatched in the uterus. In the oviparous fishes, which are hermaphrodite, the spawn is impregnated previous to deposition by the same individual which deposits the eggs. Fishes exhibit a great variety in regard to the number of their eggs.

In some the number is small, while in others it is prodigiously great. In the spawn of a cod-fish, for example, no fewer than 3,686,760 eggs have been found. In general, before spawning, fish forsake the deep water and approach the shore, and some fish leave the salt water and ascend the rivers before spawning, and then return again.—2. Any product or offspring; an expression of contempt.—3. In gardening, the buds or branches which are produced from underground stems. Also, the white fibrous matter, which shooting through earth, dung, decaying vegetable matter, &c., is the matrix from which mushrooms and other fungi are produced.

SPAWN, v. t. To produce or deposit, as fishes do their eggs.—2. To bring forth; to generate; in contempt.

SPAWN, v. i. To deposit eggs, as fish or frogs.—2. To issue, as offspring; in contempt.

SPAWN'ED, pp. Produced or deposited, as the eggs of fish or frogs.

SPAWN'ER, n. The female fish.

The spawner and the melter of the barbel cover their spawn with sand. Waltou.

SPAY, v. t. [W. yspazu, to exhaust; dyspazu, to geld; Arm. spaza or spahin, to geld; L. spado, a gelding; Gr. spazo, to draw out.] To extirpate the ovaries of a female animal; to incapacitate a female animal for producing young. The operation of spaying is performed on the females of several kinds of animals to prevent conception, and promote their fattening. It is usually performed when the animal is young.

SPAY'ADE, n. In her., a young stag in his third year.

SPAYED, pp. Having the ovaries extirpated.

SPAYING, ppr. Extirpating the ovaries.

SPEAK, v. i. pret. Spoke, [Spahe, nearly obs.]; pp. Spoke, Spoken. [Sax. spaccan, speacan; It. spiccar le parole, to speak distinctly; spicare, to shine, that is, to shoot or thrust forth; Eth. sabak, to preach, to teach, to proclaim. The Sw. has spa, Dan. spær, to foretell. It is easy to see that the root of this word is allied to that of beak, peak, pick.] 1. To utter words or articulate sounds, as human beings; to express thoughts by words. Children learn to speak at an early age. The organs may be so obstructed that a man may not be able to speak.

Speak, Lord, for thy servant hearth; 1 Sam. iii.

2. To utter a speech, discourse, or harangue; to utter thoughts in a public assembly. A man may be well informed on a subject, and yet too diffident to speak in public.

Many of the nobility made themselves popular by speaking in parliament against those things which were most grateful to his majesty. Cutrendon.

3. To talk; to express opinions; to dispute.

An honest man, Sir, is able to speak for himself, when the knave is not. Shak.

4. To discourse; to make mention of. Lucan speaks of a part of Caesar's army that came to him from the Lemn lake. Addison.

The Scripture speaks only of those to whom it speaks. Hammond.

5. To give sound. Make all your trumpets speak. Shuk.

To speak with, to converse with. Let me speak with my son.—To speak with a vessel, to communicate with those who are on board, either in person or by means of a speaking trumpet.

SPEAK, v. t. To utter with the mouth; to pronounce; to utter articulately; as human beings.

They sat down with him on the ground seven days and seven nights, and none speak a word to him; Job ii.

Speak the word, and my son shall be healed; Matt. viii.

2. To declare; to proclaim; to celebrate.

It is my father's music
To speak your deeds. Shak.

3. To talk or converse in; to utter or pronounce, as in conversation. A man may know how to read and to understand a language which he cannot speak.—4. To address; to accost.

He will smile upon thee, put thee in hope, and speak thee fair. Eccles.

5. To exhibit; to make known. Let heaven's wide circuit speak The Maker's high magnificence. Milton.

6. To express silently or by signs. The lady's looks or eyes speak the meaning or wishes of her heart.—7. To communicate; as, to speak peace to the soul.—To speak a ship, to hail and speak to her captain or commander.

Note.—We say, to speak a word or syllable, to speak a sentence, an oration, piece, composition, or a dialogue, to speak a man's praise, &c.; but we never say, to speak an argument, a sermon, or a story.

SPEAKABLE, a. That can be spoken.

—2. Having the power of speech.

SPEAKER, n. One that speaks in whatever manner.—2. One that proclaims or celebrates.

No other speaker of my living actions. Shak.

3. One that utters or pronounces a discourse; usually, one that utters a speech in public. We say, a man is a good speaker, or a bad speaker.—4. The presiding officer in each house of parliament. The speaker of the house of commons is a member of the house, elected by a majority of votes, to act as chairman or president, in putting questions, reading bills, keeping order, controlling the debates of the house, issuing warrants to the clerk of the crown to make out new writs for the election of members, when seats are vacant, and carrying into execution the resolutions of the house. The speaker chosen must be approved of by the crown. He is not to deliver his sentiments upon any question, or give his vote, except in a committee or in case of an equality of votes, when he has the privilege of giving a casting vote. It is also the duty of the speaker to interrupt a member whose language is indecorous, or who wanders from the subject of debate: he may also stop a debate, to remind the house of any standing order or established mode of proceeding, which he sees about to be violated. He, however, submits every thing to the decision of the house. The speaker of the house of lords is ex-officio the lord chancellor, keeper of the great seal, or other person holding the king's commission. He can speak and vote on any question. The same name is given to the president of other legislative bodies besides the British parliament, as in the American congress, &c.

SPEAK'ERSHIP, n. The office of speaker.

SPEAKING, ppr. Uttering words; discoursing; talking.

SPEAKING, n. The act of uttering words; discourse.—2. In colleges, public declamation.

SPEAKING, a. Animated; as, a speaking portrait.

SPEAKING-TRUMPET, n. A trumpet by which the sound of the human voice may be propagated to a great distance. [See TRUMPET.]

SPEAR, n. [Sax. speare, sper; D. and G. spear; W. yspar, from pdr, a spear. So W. ber is a spear, and a spit, that which shoots to a point.] 1. A long pointed weapon used in war and hunting, by thrusting or throwing; a lance.

Ancient Spears.

a. Spetum, time of Edward IV.

b. Partisno, time of James I.

c. Pike, time of Cromwell.

d. Voulge or Boulge, time of Henry VII.

e. Banseur, time of Henry VIII.

Also, the long piece of wood which is fixed to the body or beam of a cheval de frise.—2. A sharp pointed instrument with barbs; used for stabbing fish and other animals.—3. A shoot, as of grass; usually spire.—4. The feather of a horse, called also the streak of the spear. It is a mark in the neck, or near the shoulder of some barbs, which is reckoned a sure sign of a good horse.

SPEAR, v. t. To pierce with a spear; to kill with a spear; as to spear a fish.

SPEAR, v. i. To shoot into a long stem. [See SPIRE.]

SPEARED, pp. Pierced or killed with a spear.

SPEAR'ER, n. A spearman.

SPEAR-FOOT, n. [spear and foot.] The far foot behind; used of a horse.

SPEAR-GRASS, n. [spear and grass] A long, stiff grass, a species of Poa, the P. rigida, Linn.

SPEAR-HAND, n. In the manege, a horseman's right hand.—2. A lancer's right hand.

SPEARING, ppr. Piercing or killing with a spear.—2. Shooting into a long stem.

SPEARMAN, n. [spear and man.] One who is armed with a spear; Ps. lxxviii.

SPEARMINT, n. [spear and mint.] A plant of the genus Mentha, the M. viridis. [See MINT.]

SPEAR-THISTLE, n. A plant of the genus Cnicus, the C. lanceolatus, Willd.; called also spear plume-thistle. It grows on way sides and in pastures. The leaves are downy beneath, and their points long and very sharp.

SPEAR-WORT, n. A plant of the genus Ranunculus. The great spear-wort is the R. lingua, Linn., and the lesser spear-wort is the R. flammula, Linn. Both are British plants. [See RANUNCULUS.]

SPEAT. See SPATE.

SPEIGHT, } n. A woodpecker. [Not SPEIGHT, } in use or local.]

SPE'CIAL, a. [Fr.; It. speciale; from L. specialis, from species, form, figure, sort, from specio, to see. Hence species, primarily, is appearance, that which is presented to the eye. This word and especial are the same.] 1. Designating a species or sort.

A special idea is called by the schools a species. Watts.

2. Particular; peculiar; noting something more than ordinary. She smiles with a special grace.

Our Saviour is represented everywhere in Scripture as the special patron of the poor and afflicted. Atterbury.

3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose. A private grant is made by a special act of parliament.—

4. Confined to some particular class of subjects; ex. gr. a special dictionary, as one of medicine or law. [Technical.]—5. Extraordinary; uncommon. Our charities should be universal, but chiefly exercised on special opportunities.—6. Chief in excellence.

The king hath drawn

The special head of all the land together. Shak.

Special administration, in law, is one in which the power of an administrator is limited to the administration of certain specific effects, and not the effects in general of the deceased.—

Special bail, consists of actual sureties recognised to answer for the appearance of a person in court; as distinguished from common bail, which is nominal.—

Special bailiff, is a bailiff appointed by the sheriff, for making arrests and serving processes.—Special case. In Scots law, in civil jury causes, a special case differs from a special verdict only in this, that the special verdict is returned by the jury; whereas the special case is adjusted by the parties themselves, or by their counsel, and sets forth the special facts on which they are agreed, without the evidence.—Special charge. In Scots law, letters of special charge, are letters passing under the signet, charging the heir of one who has died infert in lands, to enter heir to him, under certification that if no entry takes place, the complainer shall have the same execution against the lands as if the heir had entered.—Special constable, a person sworn to aid the constituted authorities, military or civil, in maintaining the public peace, on occasions of exigency; as, to quell a riot. Sometimes the epithet stands for the positive term; as, many specials were in attendance.—Special contract. [See SPECIALTY.]—Special demurrer, is one in which the cause of demurrer is particularly stated.—Special grace, in theol., according to Edwards, is "the renewing and sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit, as distinguished from common grace, which only awakens and convicts."—Special imparlance, is one in which there is a saving of all exceptions to the writ or count, or of all exceptions whatsoever.—Special jury, is a jury of a superior class or supposed experience regarding the matter at issue. It may be called upon motion of either party, when the cause is supposed to require it.—Special jury book, in Scots law, a book kept by the sheriff, and prepared by copying from the general jury book the names of those qualified to serve as special jurors, that is, persons possessed of heritable property yielding £100 of yearly rent, or personal property to the amount of £1000.—Special matter in evidence the particular facts in the case on which the defendant relies.—Special plea, in bar, is a plea which sets forth the particular facts or reasons why the plaintiff's demand should be barred, as a release, accord, &c.—Special pleading, the allegation of special or new matter, as distinguished from a direct denial of the matter alleged on the opposite side.—Special property, a qualified or limited property, as the property which a man acquires in wild animals, by reclaiming them.—Special service, in Scots law, that form of service by which an heir is served to his ancestor, in a special fental subject, and under a special character.—Special session of a court, an extraordinary session; a session beyond the regular stated sessions; or in corporations and counties in England, a petty session held by a few justices for despatching small business.—Special statute, is a private act of the legislature, such as respects a private person or individual.—

Special tail, is where a gift is restrained to certain heirs of the donee's body, and does not descend to the heirs in general.—Special verdict, is a verdict in which the jury find the facts and state them as proved, but leave the law arising from the facts to be determined by the court. Another method of finding a special verdict, is when the jury find a verdict generally for the plaintiff, but subject to the opinion of the court on a special case stated by the counsel on both sides, with regard to a matter of law.—Special verdict, in Scots law, in a criminal trial, a return of certain facts or circumstances as proved, without any general conclusion from them as to the pannel's guilt, the conclusion being left to be made by the judge, according to his opinion of the lawful construction of the facts so laid before him. In civil causes tried by jury, a special verdict must be confined to specific findings of fact, with no detail of the evidence on which the verdict rests.—Special warrant, a warrant to take a person and bring him before a particular justice who granted the warrant.

SPE'CIAL, † n. A particular.

SPE'CIALIST, n. A man of technicalities; a merely practical person.

SPECIAL'ITY, n. A particular or peculiar case; a particularity. [See SPECIALTY.]

SPE'CIALIZE, † v. t. To mention specially.

SPE'CIALLY, adv. Particularly; in a manner beyond what is common, or out of the ordinary course. Every signal deliverance from danger ought to be specially noticed as a divine interposition.—2. For a particular purpose. A meeting of the legislature is specially summoned.—3. Chiefly; especially.

SPE'CIALTY, n. Particularity. Specialty of rule hath been neglected. Shak.

2. A particular or peculiar case. Note. This word is now little used in the senses above. Its common acceptance is,

3. A special contract; an obligation or bond; the evidence of a debt by deed or instrument under seal. Such a debt is called a debt by specialty, in distinction from simple contract.

SPECIE, n. (spe'shiz.) Gold and silver coin, in contradistinction to paper money. [See SPECIES.]

SPECIES, n. (spe'shiz.) sing. and plur. [L. from specio, to see. See SPECIAL.]

1. In zool. and bot., a species is usually defined a collection of individuals that are precisely alike in every character not capable of change by any accidental circumstances, and capable of uniform, invariable, and permanent continuance by natural propagation. All changes produced by accidental causes, in individuals of a species, and which are not capable of uniform, invariable, and permanent continuance by natural propagation, indicate and mark what are called varieties.

There are as many species as there are different invariable forms or structures of vegetables. Martyn.

2. In mineral., a collection of minerals which are composed of the same ingredients, and combined in the same proportions.—3. In logic., a special idea, corresponding to the specific distinctions of things in nature, or it is a predicable which is considered as expressing the whole essence of the individuals of which it is affirmed. The genus and difference together make up, in logical language, the species. For example, a "biped" is compounded of the genus "animal," and the difference, "having two legs." The difference which, together with the genus, makes up the species, is termed the specific difference. [See PREDICABLE.]—4. Sort; kind; in a loose sense; as, a species of low cunning in the world; a species of generosity; a species of cloth.—5. Appearance to the senses; visible or sensible representation.

An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible, is that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth. Bacon.

The species of letters illuminated with indigo and violet. [Little used.] Newton.

6. Representation to the mind.

Wit...the faculty of imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. [Little used.] Dryden.

7. Show; visible exhibition.

Shows and species serve best with the common people. † Bacon.

8. Coin, or coined silver and gold, used as a circulating medium; as, the current species of Europe. In modern practice, this word is contracted into specie. What quantity of specie has the bank in its vault? What is the amount of all the current specie in the country? What is the value, in specie, of a bill of exchange? We receive payment for goods in specie, not in bank notes.—

9. In phar., a simple; a component part of a compound medicine.—10. The old pharmaceutical term for powders.—11. In alge., the letters, symbols, marks, or characters, which represent the quantities in any operation or equation.—In geom., figures of the same species, are those which have the same form, whatever be their size.—In spherical trigonometry, the sides and angles of spherical triangles, are said to be of the same species, when by comparing any two sides, any two angles, or an angle and a side together, each is found to be greater or less than, or equal to, a quadrant or a right angle. But when by comparing a side with a side, an angle with an angle, or a side with an angle, one is found to be less, and another greater than a quadrant or a right angle, such sides and angles are said to be of different species. The word affection is often used in spherical trigonometry in the same sense as species.—12. In optics, the image painted on the retina by the rays of light reflected from the several points of the surface of an object, received by the pupil, and collected in their passage through the crystalline lens, &c.

SPECIFIC, } a. [Fr. specifique; It. SPECIFIC, } specifico.] 1. That makes a thing of the species of which it is; designating the peculiar property or properties of a thing, which constitute its species, and distinguish it from other things. Thus we say, the specific form of an animal or a plant; the specific form of a cube or square; the specific qualities of a plant or a drug; the specific difference between an acid and an alkali; the specific distinction between virtue and vice.

Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another.

Watts.

2. In med., acting upon some particular organ more than upon others; possessed of peculiar efficacy in the cure of a particular disease. [See the noun.]—Specific character, in bot., a circumstance or circumstances distinguishing one species from every other species of the same genus.—Specific gravity, in nat. philosophy, the weight of any body under a given bulk or volume, or it is the weight of any particular kind of matter as compared with the weight of the same bulk of some other body, of which the weight is supposed to be familiarly known, and is therefore taken as the standard of comparison. Pure distilled water, at the temperature of 60° of Fahrenheit, is the substance usually employed for the purpose of comparing together the weights of all substances, except the gases. A cubic foot of distilled water at the temperature of 60° is found to weigh exactly 1000 ounces avoirdupois; consequently, assuming this as the specific gravity of distilled water, and comparing all other bodies with this, the same numbers that express their specific gravities, will at the same time express the weight of a cubic foot of each in avoirdupois ounces, which affords great facility to numerical computations. Or if the specific gravity of water be expressed by 1, the specific gravity of other substances will be expressed by a thousandth part of the former numbers. This only requires that three decimal places should be taken. Thus, a cubic foot of gold weighs 19,250 ounces; hence, taking 1000 for the specific gravity of water, 19,250 will express the specific gravity of gold; or, if 1 be the specific gravity of water, the thousandth part of 19,250, which is 19.250, will be the specific gravity of gold. In bodies of equal magnitudes, the weights are directly as the specific gravities; in bodies of the same specific gravities, the weights are directly as the magnitudes; in bodies of equal weights the specific gravities are inversely as the magnitudes; and the weights of different bodies are to each other in the compound ratio of their magnitudes and specific gravities. A body when immersed in a fluid loses a portion of its weight which is exactly equal to the weight of an equal bulk of the fluid; hence, if a body be weighed in air (or rather in vacuo), and then in water, the difference between the two weights will give the weight of a quantity of water equal to the bulk of the solid. From this we can easily determine the specific gravity of any solid body; for, since in equal magnitudes the weights are as the specific gravities, the weight of the water equal in volume to the body, is to the actual weight of the body, as the specific gravity of water = 1, to the specific gravity of the body. [See GRAVITY and HYDROMETER.]—Specific heat. [See HEAT.]—Specific name, in bot., is now used for the name which, appended to the name of the genus, constitutes the distinctive name of the species; but it was originally applied by Linnæus to the essential character of the species, or the essential difference. The present specific name he at first called the trivial name.

SPECIFIC, n. In philosophy, that which is peculiar to any thing, and distinguishes it from all others.—2. A medicine which acts upon some particular organ more than upon others: thus, ipecacuanha appears to have a specific action on the respiratory mucous membrane.—3. A medicine which is more uniform in its effects than any other, in any particular disorder: thus, cinchona is called a specific in certain forms of intermittent fever, and mercury in syphilis, &c. No such thing as an infallible specific is known.

SPECIFICALLY, adv. In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species. A body is specifically lighter than another, when it has less weight in the same bulk than the other.

Human reason...differs specifically from the fantastic reason of brutes. Greuv.

...Those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of duty.

South.

SPECIFIC ALNESS, n. State of being specific.

SPECIFICATE, v. t. [L. species, form, and facio, to make.] To show, mark, or designate the species, or the distinguishing particulars of a thing; to specify.

SPECIFICATION, n. The act of determining by a mark or limit; notation of limits.

This specification or limitation of the question hinders the disputers from wandering away from the precise point of inquiry.

Watts.

2. The act of specifying; designation of particulars; particular mention; as, the specification of a charge against a military or naval officer.—3. Among architects, engineers, builders, or artists, a statement of particulars, describing the dimensions, details, peculiarities, &c., of any work about to be undertaken. It is a condition in patents that the inventor should give a specification of his invention, in which the nature of the invention must be particularly described and ascertained.—4. Article or thing specified.—5. In Scots law, the formation of a new property from materials belonging to another.

SPECIFICNESS, n. Particular mark of distinction.

SPECIFIED, pp. Particularized; specially named.

SPECIFY, v. t. [Fr. specifier; It. specificare.] To mention or name, as a particular thing; to designate in words, so as to distinguish a thing from every other; as, to specify the uses of a plant; to specify the articles one wants to purchase.

He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries and the uses of their soils are specified. Pope.

SPECIFYING, ppr. Naming or designating particularly.

SPECIMEN, n. [L. from species, with the termination men, which corresponds in sense to the English hood or ness.] A sample; a part or small portion of anything, intended to exhibit the kind and quality of the whole, or of something not exhibited; as, a specimen of a man's hand-writing; a specimen of painting or composition; a specimen of one's art or skill.

SPECIOUS, a. [Fr. specieux; L. speciosus.] 1. Showy; pleasing to the view.

The rest, far greater part,

Will deem in outward rites and specious forms

Religion satisfied. Milton.

2. Apparently right; superficially fair, just, or correct; plausible; appearing well at first view; as, specious reasoning; a specious argument; a specious objection; specious deeds. Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the specious names of good nature, good manners, nobleness of mind, &c.

SPECIOUSLY, adv. With a fair appearance; with show of right; as, to reason speciously.

SPECIOUSNESS, n. Plausible appearance; fair external show; as, the speciousness of an argument.

SPECK, n. [Sax. specca; D. spikkel. In Sp. peca is a freckle or spot raised in the skin by the sun. This word may be formed from peck, for pecked has been used for specked, spotted as though pecked. Qu. Ar. bakaa, to be spotted.] 1. A spot; a stain; a small place in anything that is discoloured by foreign matter, or is of a colour different from that of the main substance; as, a speck on paper or cloth. 2. A very small thing.—3. The sole of a shoe.—4. The sole-fish.

SPECK, v. t. To spot; to stain in spots or drops.—2. To put a sole upon a shoe.

SPECKLE, n. A little spot in anything, of a different substance or colour from that of the thing itself.

SPECKLE, v. t. To mark with small spots of a different colour; used chiefly in the participle passive, — which see.

SPECKLED, pp. or a. Marked with specks; variegated with spots of a different colour from the ground or surface of the object; as, the speckled breast of a bird; a speckled serpent.—2. In her., spotted over with another tincture.—Speckled bird, a denomination given to a person of doubtful character or principles. [Familiar.]

SPECKLEDNESS, n. The state of being speckled.

SPECKLING, ppr. Marking with small spots.

SPECKT, n. A woodpecker. [See SPECTHOUT.]

SPECTACLE, n. [Fr. from L. spectaculum, from specto, to behold; specio, to see.] 1. A show; a gazing-stock; something exhibited to view; usually, something presented to view as extraordinary, or something that is held as unusual and worthy of special notice. Thus we call things exhibited for amusement, public spectacles, as the combats of gladiators in ancient Rome.

We are made a spectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men; 1 Cor. iv.

2. Anything seen; a sight. A drunkard is a shocking spectacle.—3. Figuratively, something that aids the intellectual sight.

Shakespeare...needed not the spectacles of books to read nature. Dryden.

SPEC'TACLE-BESTRID, a. Bearing spectacles; as, with nose spectacle-bestrid.

SPEC'TACLED, a. Furnished with spectacles.

SPEC'TACLE-MAKER, n. One whose trade is spectacle-making.

SPEC'TACLES, n. plur. [L. spectaculum. See SPECTACLE.] A well known and invaluable optical instrument used to assist or correct some defect in the organs of vision. Common spectacles consist of two lenses, either convex or concave, set in a frame so constructed as to adhere to the nose and temples, and keep the lenses in the proper position. The earlier kinds were merely fixed on the nose. Spectacles with convex lenses are used to aid the sight of the aged, or those who are termed long or far sighted; and spectacles with concave lenses are used to assist the vision of those who are near sighted. In long sighted persons the refractive powers of the eye are too feeble, or the cornea is too much flattened; hence, the rays of light coming from an object after entering the eye, do not converge sufficiently soon to be brought to a focus, and form a perfect image of the object on the retina. The convex lens counteracts this defect by increasing the convergence of the rays, and causing them to meet at the retina. Short-sightedness is a defect the very reverse of that which has been stated, and hence, must be corrected by opposite means, namely, by concave lenses. In both cases the value of spectacles depends upon their being accurately adapted to the state of the eye. There is a kind of spectacles, commonly called preserves or sight preservers, the glasses of which are usually plane, and sometimes coloured; their utility is, however, dubious. Another kind of spectacles, called goggles, limit the field of view, and are used for correcting obliquity of vision. Another kind, called periscopic spectacles, has been contrived in order to allow considerable latitude of motion to the eyes without fatigue. The lenses employed in this case are either of a meniscus or concavo-convex form, the concave side being turned to the eye. An invention of recent origin, called railway spectacles, with wire-cloth sights, is useful for keeping sand, ashes, &c., out of the eyes. We know not when or by whom spectacles were invented. Some assign their origin to the 12th, others to the 13th century. Spectacles, as they form an instrument of binocular power, are usually designated a pair of spectacles.

SPECTACULAR, a. Pertaining to shows.

SPEC'TANT, ppr. [L. specto, to behold.] In her., a term applied to an animal at gaze, or looking forward; sometimes termed in full aspect. The term is likewise applied to any animal looking upwards with the nose bend-wise.

SPECTATION, n. [L. spectatio.] Regard; respect. [Little used.]

SPECTATOR, n. [L. whence Fr. spectateur; It. spettatore.] 1. One that looks on; one that sees or beholds; a beholder; as, the spectators of a show.—2. One personally present. The spectators were numerous.

SPECTATORIAL, a. Pertaining to the spectator.

SPECTATORSHIP, n. The act of beholding.—2. The office or quality of a spectator.

SPECTATRESS, } n. [L. spectatrix.]
SPECTATRIX, } A female beholder or looker on.

SPECTRA, n. plur. [L. spectrum, from specio, to behold. See SPECTRUM.] Images presented to the eyes after removing them from a bright or coloured object, or closing them. If, for example, we look intently with one eye upon any coloured object, such as a wafer placed on a sheet of white paper, and immediately afterwards, turn the same eye to another part of the paper, we shall see a similar spot, but of a different colour. Thus, if the wafer be red, the seeming spot will be green; if black, it will be changed into white. These images are also termed ocular spectra and accidental colours.

SPECTRAL, a. Pertaining to a spectre; ghostlike; ghostly.

SPECTRAL, a. Pertaining to ocular spectra; pertaining to the solar or prismatic spectrum; as spectral colours.

SPECTRE, n. [Fr. spectre; from L. spectrum, from specio, to behold.] 1. An apparition; the appearance of a person who is dead; a ghost.

The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descended.

With bold fanatic spectres to rejoice. Dryden.
2. Something made preternaturally visible.

SPECTRE-PEOPLED, a. Peopled with ghosts.

SPECTRES, n. A family of orthopterous insects, comprehending such as have a linear and attenuated body, like the ghost of an insect.

SPECTRUM, n. plur. Spectra, [L.] A visible form; an image of something seen, continuing after the eyes are closed, covered or turned away. This is called an ocular spectrum. [See SPECTRA.]—2. In optics, the name given to an elongated image of the sun, formed on a wall or screen, by a beam of solar light passing through a small hole in a window-shutter into a dark room, and refracted by a triangular glass prism. The ray, on passing through the prism, is decomposed, and separated into seven rays of different colours, such as are observable in the rainbow. These are exhibited in the elongated image or spectrum, in the following order; namely, red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet; the red being lowermost. As the spectrum is produced by solar light, it is frequently called the solar spectrum, and because it is formed by means of a prism, it is further termed the prismatic spectrum, and the colours composing it the prismatic colours. A spectrum may be formed by any other luminous body as well as the sun.

SPECULAR, a. [L. specularis, from speculum, a mirror, from specio, to see.] 1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking-glass; having a smooth reflecting surface; as, a specular metal; a specular surface.—2. Assisting sight.

[Improper and not used.].—3. Affording view.

SPECULATE, v. i. [L. speculor, to view, to contemplate, from specio, to see; Fr. speculer.] 1. To meditate; to contemplate; to consider a subject by turning it in the mind and viewing it in its different aspects and relations; as, to speculate on political events; to speculate on the probable results of a discovery.—2. In com., to purchase goods, stock, or other things, with the expectation of an advance in price, and of selling the articles with a profit by means of such advance; as, to speculate in coffee, or in sugar, or in six per cent. stock, or in bank stock.

SPECULATE, † v. t. To consider attentively; as, to speculate the nature of a thing.

SPECULATION, n. Examination by the eye; view. [Little used.].—2. Mental view of anything in its various aspects and relations; contemplation; intellectual examination. The events of the day afford matter of serious speculation to the friends of Christianity.

Thenceforth to speculations high or deep
I turn'd my thoughts. Milton.

3. Train of thoughts formed by meditation.

From him Socrates derived the principles of morality and most part of his natural speculations. Temple.

4. Mental scheme; theory; views of a subject not verified by fact or practice. This globe, which was formerly round only in speculation, has been circumnavigated. The application of steam to navigation is no longer a matter of mere speculation.

Speculations which originate in guilt, must end in ruin. R. Hall.

5. Power of sight.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes. † Shak.

6. In com., the act or practice of buying articles of merchandize, or any purchasable commodities whatever, in expectation of a rise of price and of selling them at an advance, as distinguished from a regular trade, in which the profit expected is the difference between the retail and wholesale prices, or the difference of price in the place where the goods are purchased, and the place to which they are to be carried for market. Speculation on a large scale, on the principle of monopolizing, or that kind of speculation which consists in the purchase and sale of shares in public companies, as well as "dabbling in the stocks," and a variety of other hazardous transactions, may be considered as different species of gambling, and are often no less ruinous. A few men have been enriched, but many have been ruined by speculation.

SPECULATIST, n. One who speculates or forms theories; a speculator.

SPECULATIVE, a. [Fr. speculatif; It. speculativo.] 1. Given to speculation; contemplative; applied to persons.

The mind of man being by nature speculative. Hooker.

2. Formed by speculation; theoretical; ideal; not verified by fact, experiment, or practice; as, a scheme merely speculative.

—3. Pertaining to view; also, prying.—

4. Pertaining to speculation in land, goods, &c.—5. Capable of being turned to account by improvement, or favourable representations, true or false; as, an ill conditioned but speculative picture. [A dealer's term.]

SPECULATIVELY, adv. In contemplation; with meditation.—2. Ideally; theoretically; in theory only, not in practice. Propositions seem often to be speculatively true, which experience does not verify.—3. In the way of speculation in lands, goods, &c.

SPEC'ULATIVENESS, n. The state of being speculative, or of consisting in speculation only.

SPEC'ULATOR, n. One who speculates or forms theories.—2. An observer; a contemplator.—3. A spy; a watcher.—4. In com., one who buys goods, or other things, with the expectation of a rise of price, and of deriving profit from such advance.

SPEC'ULATORY, a. Exercising speculation.—2. Intended or adapted for viewing or espying.

SPEC'ULUM, n. [L.; G. and D. spiegel.] 1. A mirror or looking glass.—2. A glass that reflects the images of objects. In optics, the term speculum is usually applied to reflectors formed of polished metal, while the term mirror is used to signify a reflector of glass.—3. A metallic reflector used in catadioptric or reflecting telescopes, instead of the object glass in refracting telescopes.—4. In sur., an instrument for dilating and keeping open certain parts of the body, in order to examine them attentively.

SPEC'ULUM-METAL, n. Metal used for making the specula of reflecting telescopes. It is an alloy of two parts of copper and one of tin; its whiteness being improved by the addition of a little arsenic.

SPEED, pret. and pp. of Speed.

SPEECH, n. [Sax. spec. See SPEAK.] 1. The faculty of uttering articulate sounds or words, as in human beings; the faculty of expressing thoughts by words or articulate sounds. Speech was given to man by his Creator for the noblest purposes.—2. Language; words as expressing ideas.

The acts of God to human ears Cannot without process of speech be told.

Milton.

3. A particular language, as distinct from others; Ps. xix.—4. That which is spoken; words uttered in connection and expressing thoughts. You smile at my speech.—5. Talk; mention; common saying.

The duke did of me demand, What was the speech among the Londoners Concerning the French journey. Shak.

6. Formal discourse in public; oration; harangue. The member has made his first speech in parliament.—7. Any declaration of thoughts.

I, with leave of speech inplor'd, replied. Milton.

SPEECH, † v. i. To make a speech; to harangue. We now use speechify.

SPEECH-CRIER, n. One who hawks about a printed account of the execution, and confessions, when any are made, of criminals.

SPEECHIFIED, pp. Harangued. SPEECHIFY, v. i. To make a speech; to harangue.

SPEECHIFYING, ppr. Haranguing. SPEECHING, n. The act of making a speech.

SPEECHLESS, a. Destitute or deprived of the faculty of speech. More generally.—2. Mute; silent; not speaking for a time.

Speechless with wonder, and half dead with fear. Addison.

SPEECHLESSNESS, n. The state of being speechless; muteness.

11.

SPEECH-MAKER, n. One who makes speeches; one who speaks much in a public assembly.

SPEED, v. i. pret. and pp. Speed, Speeded. [Sax. spedian, spadan; G. spediren, to send; Gr. σπυδο. The L. expedio may be from the same root, which signifies to drive, to hurry, of the family of L. peto.] 1. To make haste; to move with celerity.—2. To have success; to prosper; to succeed; that is, to advance in one's enterprise.

He that's once deni'd will hardly speed. Shak.

Those that profaned and abused the second temple, speed no better. South.

3. To have any condition, good or ill; to fare.

Ships heretofore in seas like fishes speed, The mightiest still upon the smallest fed. Waller.

SPEED, v. t. To despatch; to send away in haste.

He speed him thence home to his habitation. Fairfax.

2. To hasten; to hurry; to put in quick motion.

But speed his steps along the hoarse resounding shore. Dryden.

3. To hasten to a conclusion; to execute; to despatch; as, to speed judicial acts.—4. To assist; to help forward; to hasten.

With rising gales that speed their happy flight. Dryden.

5. To prosper; to cause to succeed. May heaven speed this undertaking.—6. To furnish in haste.—7. To despatch; to kill; to ruin; to destroy.

With a speeding thrust his heart he found. Dryden.

A dire dilemma! either way I'm speed! If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead. Pope.

Note.—In the phrase, "God speed," there is probably a gross mistake in considering it as equivalent to "may God give you success." The true phrase is probably "good speed," good in Saxon, being written god. I bid you or wish you good speed, that is, good success.

SPEED, n. Swiftmess; quickness; celerity; applied to animals. We say, a man or a horse runs or travels with speed; a fowl flies with speed. We speak of the speed of a fish in the water, but we do not speak of the speed of a river, or of wind, or of a falling body. I think, however, I have seen the word applied to the lapse of time and the motion of lightning, but in poetry only.

—2. Haste; despatch; as, to perform a journey with speed; to execute an order with speed.—3. Rapid pace; as, a horse of speed. We say also, high speed, full speed.—4. Success; prosperity in an undertaking; favourable issue; that is, advance to the desired end.

O Lord God of my master Abraham, I pray thee, send me good speed this day; Gen. xxiv.

This use is retained in the proverb, "to make more haste than good speed," and in the Scriptural phrase, "to bid one good speed," [not God speed, as erroneously written.]

SPEEDFUL, a. Full of speed; hasty.

SPEEDILY, adv. Quickly; with haste; in a short time.

Send speedily to Bertram. Dryden.

SPEEDINESS, n. The quality of being speedy; quickness; celerity; haste; despatch.

SPEED'LESS, a. Having no speed.

SPEEDWELL, n. Veronica, a genus of plants, class and order Diandria monogynia, Linn.; nat. order Scrophulariaceae. The species consist of herbs, undershrubs, or shrubs, with opposite, alternate, or verticillate leaves. The flowers are of a blue, white, or red colour, and are arranged in spikes or racemes. The species are exceedingly numerous, and are distributed over all parts of the world, and are especially abundant in temperate climates. The Flora of Great Britain contains about twenty species.—V. officinalis, or common speedwell, was once extensively used as a substitute for tea, and also as a tonic and diuretic. V. teuricium, or Germander-leaved speedwell, has much the same properties as common speedwell, and at one time entered into the composition of several esteemed diet-drinks.—V. chamaedrys, or Germander speedwell, is a very general favourite, on account of its being among the very first that opens its flowers in the early spring. It is sometimes known by the name of bird's-eye, and is often mistaken for the Forget-me-not.

SPEEDY, a. Quick; swift; nimble; hasty; rapid in motion; as, a speedy flight; on speedy foot.—2. Quick in performance; not dilatory or slow; as, a speedy despatch of business.

SPEEL, or SPELL, v. n. To climb; to clamber. [Succeed.]

SPEET, † v. t. [G. speeten; from the root of spit.] To stab.

SPEIGHT, n. A woodpecker. [Not in use or local.]

SPEL'FUL, a. Having spells or charms. SPEIR, or SPERE, v. n. [Sax. spyrrian, to search out by the track or trace.] To trace or search out, to investigate; to make diligent inquiry; to ask; to inquire. Followed by out, at, after, for, about. [Scotch.]

SPEISS, or SPEISE, n. [Ger.] An artificial arseniuret of nickel; a metallurgic production obtained in forming smalt from the roasted ores of cobalt. SPELK, n. [Sax. spelc.] A splinter; a small stick or rod used in thatching. [Local.]

SPELL, n. [Sax. spel or spell, a story, narration, fable, speech, saying, fame, report, sudden rumour, a magic charm or song. Hence gospel, Sax. god-spell. In G. spiel is play, sport; spielen, to play. But this is a different application of the same action. The verb primarily signifies to throw or drive, and is probably formed on the root of L. pello, Gr. βαλλω. See PEAL and APPEAL. In some of the applications of spell, we observe the sense of turn. We observe the same in throw, warp, cant, &c.] 1. † A story; a tale.—2. A charm consisting of some words of occult power; any form of words, whether written or spoken, supposed to be endowed with magical virtues. A superstition peculiarly prevalent among the ancients.

Start not; her actions shall be holy; You hear my spell is lawful. Shak.

Begin, begin, the mystic spell prepare. Milton.

3. Among workmen, a turn of work; relief; turn of duty.

Their toil is so extreme, that they cannot endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells. Carew.

4. In seamen's lan., the period during which one or more sailors are employed in a particular exercise, from which they are relieved, as soon as the limited time expires; such are the spells to the hand-lead in sounding; to the pump; to look out on the mast-head, &c.

SPELL, v. t. pret. and pp. Spelled or Spelt. [Sax. spellian, spelligan, to tell, to narrate, to discourse, which gives our sense of spell in reading letters; spellian, spelligan, to take another's turn in labour; D. spellen, to spell, as words; old Fr. espeler.] 1. To tell or name the letters of a word, with a proper division of syllables, for the purpose of learning the pronunciation. In this manner children learn to read by first spelling the words.—2. To write or print with the proper letters; to form words by correct orthography.

The word satire ought to be spelled with i, and not with y.

Dryden.
3. Among seamen, to take a turn; to relieve; to fall in at any work by way of relief; as, to spell the pump; to spell the lead, &c.—To spell the mizzen, to let go the sheet and peak it up.—4. To charm; as, spelled with words of power.—5. To read; to discover by characters or marks; with out; as, to spell out the sense of an author.

We are not left to spell out a God in the works of creation.

South.

6. † To tell; to relate; to teach.
SPELL, v. i. To form words with the proper letters, either in reading or writing. He knows not how to spell. Our orthography is so irregular that most persons never learn to spell.—2. To read; to read unskillfully.

SPELL'-BOUND, a. Bound as by a spell or charm.

SPELL'ED, } pret. and pp. of Spell.

SPELT, }
SPELLER, n. One that spells; one skilled in spelling.—2. In her., spellers are the small branches shooting out from the flat-part of a buck's horn, at the top.

SPELL'ING, ppr. Naming the letters of a word, or writing them; forming words with their proper letters.

SPELL'ING, n. The act of naming the letters of a word, or the act of writing or printing words with their proper letters.—2. Orthography; the manner of forming words with letters. Bad spelling is disreputable to a gentleman.—3. That part of orthography which teaches the true manner of resolving words into syllables.

SPELL'ING-BOOK, n. A book for teaching children to spell and read.

SPELT, n. [Sax. spelte; G. speltz.] A species of grain, the Triticum spelta; called also German wheat.

SPELT, † v. t. [G. spalten; Dan. spilder.] To split; to break.

SPEL'TER, n. [G. and D. spiauter.] Natural impure zinc, which contains a portion of lead, copper, iron, a little arsenic, manganese, and plumbago.

SPENCE, † n. (spens.) [Old Fr. dispense.] A buttery; a larder; a place where provisions are kept. In Scotland, it also signifies the interior apartment of a country house, or the place where the family sit and eat.

SPEN' CER, † n. One who has the care of the spence or buttery.—2. An outer coat or jacket, without skirts, named from the late Earl Spencer.—3. In mar. lan., a fore-and-aft sail set abaft the fore and main masts; a trysail.

SPEND, v. t. pret. and pp. Spent. [Sax. spendan; L. expendo, from the participle of which is Fr. depenser; from the root of L. pando, pendeo, the primary sense of which is to strain, to open or spread; allied to span, pane, &c., and probably to Gr. σπειναι, to pour out.] 1. To lay out; to dispose of; to part with; as, to spend money for clothing.

Why do ye spend money for that which is not bread? Is. lv.

2. To consume; to waste; to squander; as, to spend an estate in gaming or other vices.—3. To consume; to exhaust. The provisions were spent, and the troops were in want.—4. To bestow for any purpose; often with on or upon. It is folly to spend words in debate on trifles. 5. To effuse. [Little used.]—6. To pass, as time; to suffer to pass away.

They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave; Job xiii.

7. To lay out; to exert or to waste; as, to spend one's strength.—8. To exhaust of force; to waste; to wear away; as, a ball had spent its force. The violence of the waves was spent.

Heaps of spent arrows fall and strew the ground.

9. To exhaust of strength; to harass; to fatigue.

Their bodies spent with long labour and thirst.

To spend a mast, to break a mast in foul weather.

SPEND, v. i. To make expense; to make disposition of money. He spends like a prudent man.—2. To be lost or wasted; to vanish; to be dissipated.

The sound spendeth and is dissipated in the open air.

3. To prove in the use.

Butter spent as if it came from the richer soil.

4. To be consumed. Candles spend fast in a current of air. Our provisions spend rapidly.—5. To be employed to any use.

The vines they use for wine are so often cut, that their sap spendeth into the grapes.

[Unusual.]

SPEND'ER, n. One that spends; also, a prodigal; a lavish.

SPEND'ING, ppr. Laying out; consuming; wasting; exhausting.

SPEND'ING, n. The act of laying out, expending, consuming, or wasting.

SPEND'THRIFT, n. [spend and thrif.] One who spends money profusely or imprudently; a prodigal; one who lavishes his estate.

SPENT, pp. from Spent. Wasted; consumed; gone; passed; decayed; worn out. A spent ball is a cannon or musket ball, which reaches its object without sufficient force to pass through it, or otherwise wound, than by a contusion.

SPER, or SPERR, † v. t. To shut in; support.

SPERABLE, † a. [L. sperabilis, from spero, to hope.] That may be hoped.

SPER'ATE, † a. [L. speratus.] Hoped for.

SPERE, v. t. To ask; to inquire. [Scotch.]

SPERE, n. In arch., an old term for the screen across the lower end of a dining hall, to shelter the entrance.

SPERED, pp. Asked; inquired. [Scotch.]

SPER'GULA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Caryophyllaceæ. The species are found in fields and cultivated ground, especially on sandy soils, all over the world. The genus is divided into two sections, one of which possesses stipules; the other is without these organs. Four species are found in Britain, known by the name of spurrey. S. arvensis, corn-spurrey or yarr, is a well known plant, growing in corn-fields. In some parts of the Continent, it is sown as fodder for animals. Cattle and sheep are fond of it; and hens also eat it, and are said to lay a greater number of eggs in consequence.

SPERM, n. [Fr. sperme; L. sperma; Gr. σπερμα.] 1. Animal seed; that by which the species is propagated.—2. The head matter of a certain species of whale, called cachalot. [See SPERMACE'TI.]—3. Spawn of fishes or frogs.

SPERMACE'TI, n. [L. sperma, sperm, and cetus, a whale. It is pronounced as it is written.] Adipocere, a fatty material obtained from the Physeter macrocephalus, a species of whale generally met with in the South Seas, but occasionally also on the coasts of Greenland. This animal, called the cachalot or white whale, is of immense size, frequently sixty or more feet in length, of which the head constitutes one third. The head is the chief reservoir of the spermaceti, which, however, is found in several other parts of the body mixed with the sperm oil.

During the life of the animal, the spermaceti is in a fluid state, and on the head being opened, has the appearance of an oily white liquid. On exposure to the air, the spermaceti concretes, and deposits from the oil. They are then separated, and put into different barrels. Some of the larger whales have been known to yield 24 barrels of spermaceti, and from 70 to 100 barrels of oil. After being brought to England, the spermaceti is purified. It then concretes into a white, crystallized, brittle, semitransparent unctuous substance, nearly inodorous and insipid.

It dissolves in boiling alcohol, and as the solution cools, it is deposited in perfectly pure lamellated crystals. It is then called cetine. A hundred parts of spermaceti consist of 60 parts of margaric and oleic acids, 40 parts of ethal, and 0.9 parts of a yellow extractiform substance. It is bland and demulcent, with considerable nutritive qualities when taken internally. It is chiefly employed externally as an ingredient in ointments and cerates. It is also largely used to form candles.

SPERMACE'OE, } n. Button-weed, a SPERMACE'OE, } genus of plants, belonging to the nat. order Rubiaceæ. The species are abundant in tropical parts of the world. The roots of S. poaya and ferruginea form substitutes for ipecacuanha.

SPERM'APHORE, n. [Gr. σπερμα, seed, and φορεω, to bear.] In bot., that part of the ovary, from which the ovules arise. It is synonymous with placenta.

SPERMAT'IC, a. Consisting of seed; seminal.—2. Pertaining to the semen, or conveying it; as, spermatic vessels, spermatic artery, cord, and veins.

SPERMAT'ICAL, a. Spermatic. [Not much used.]

SPERMATIZE, † v. i. To yield seed.
SPERMATOCELE, n. [Gr. σπέρμα, seed, and κύημα, tumour.] A swelling of the spermatie vessels, or vessels of the testicles.

SPERMATOZO'A, n. pl. [Gr. σπέρμα, and ζωον.] Minute particles in the spermatie fluid of animals, resembling certain infusoria.

SPERMIDIUM, n. [from Gr. σπέρμα, a seed.] In bot., a kind of small seed-vessel resembling a seed, and more commonly called an achenium. [See ACHENIUM.]

SPERMODERM, n. [Gr. σπέρμα and δερμα.] In bot., the whole integuments of a seed in the aggregate.

SPERM OIL, } n. The oil of SPERMACE'TI OIL, } the spermaceti whale, which is separated from the spermaceti. This kind of oil is much purer than train oil, and burns away without leaving any charcoal on the wicks of lamps. In composition it differs but slightly from common whale oil.

SPERMOL'OGIST, n. One who treats of seeds.

SPERMO'PHAGA, n. Swainson's name for a subgenus of Fringillidæ.

SPERMO'PHILA, n. Swainson's name for a subgenus of Fringillidæ.

SPERMO'PHILUS, n. Cuvier's name for a genus of marmots that have cheek pouches. The superior lightness of their structure has caused them to be called ground-squirrels. Eastern Europe produces one species, M. citillus, called also the souslik or zizel. Several species are found in North America.

SPERSE, † v. t. To disperse.

SPER'VER, n. In arch., an old term for the wooden frame at the top of a bed or canopy. Sometimes the term includes the tester, or head piece. It signified originally a tent.

SPET, † v. t. To spit; to throw out.

SPET, † n. Spit, or a flow.

SPEW, v. t. [Sax. spwian; D. spuwen, spuigen; G. speien, contracted from speichen; L. spuo.] 1. To vomit; to puke; to eject from the stomach.—2. To eject; to cast forth.—3. To cast out with abhorrence; Lev. xviii.

SPEW, r. i. To vomit; to discharge the contents of the stomach.

SPEW'ED, pp. Vomited; ejected.

SPEW'ER, n. One who spews.

SPEW'ING, ppr. Vomiting; ejecting from the stomach.

SPEW'ING, n. The act of vomiting.

SPEW'Y, a. Wet; foggy. [Local.]

SPHA'CEL, n. Gangrene. [See SPACELUS.]

SPHAC'ELATE, v. i. [See SPHACELUS.] To mortify; to become gangrenous; as flesh.—2. To decay or become carious, as a bone.

SPHAC'ELATE, v. t. To affect with gangrene.

SPHAC'ELATE, a. In bot., decayed, withered, or dead.

SPHAC'ELATED, pp. Affected with gangrene; mortified.

SPHACELA'TION, n. The process of becoming or making gangrenous; mortification.

SPHAC'ELISM, n. A gangrene; an inflammation of the brain.

SPHAC'ELUS, n. [Gr. σφακελός, from σφαζω, to kill.] 1. In med. and sur., gangrene; mortification of the flesh of a living animal.—2. Death of a bone.

SPHERALCE'A, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Malvaceæ. The species are trees or shrubs with toothed or 3-5-lobed leaves, and flowers of a reddish or flesh colour. With the exception of one which is a native of the Cape of Good Hope, they are all natives of South America. They are all of them elegant flowers, and will thrive well in gardens in this country. S. cisplatina is used medicinally in Brazil in the same manner as marsh-mallows are in Europe.

SPHERAN'THIUS, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Compositæ. The species are small herbs, common in tropical parts of the Old World. Some of them are bitter and aromatic.

SPHÆ'RIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Fungi. It is well known by possessing a rounded external receptacle, which opens at the top with a minute orifice. The species are generally found upon decaying vegetable matter, as on the bark of the stem and branches of decayed trees, and also on decaying leaves, on the stems of grasses, and on the surface of decaying wood. Upwards of 200 species have been recorded as British.

SPHERISTE'RUM, n. [Gr. σφαίρα, a sphere or ball.] In ancient arch. a building for the exercise of the ball; a tennis-court.

SPHÆ'RULITE. See SPHERULITE.

SPHAG'NOUS, a. [sphagnum, bog-moss. Linnaeus.] Pertaining to bog-moss; mossy.

SPHAG'NUM, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Musci or mosses. The plants of this genus are widely diffused over the surface of the earth. They are aquatic plants, and constitute the great mass of our bogs, in swampy and moory districts. The formation of peat in such situations is often owing, in a great measure, to these plants. All the species used to be included under the name of sphagnum palustre, but later botanists have multiplied the species to fourteen, four of which are British.

SPHÆ'CIDÆ, n. Leach's name for a family of hymenopterous insects of the section Fossores. Several species are found in England; they usually make burrows in the sand for nidification.

SPHENE, n. [Gr. σφην, a wedge.] A mineral composed of silicic acid, titanic acid, and lime. Its colours are dull yellow, green, gray, brown, and black. It is found unimorphous and in crystals. The primary form of its crystal is an oblique rhombic prism.

SPHENOID', } a. [Gr. σφην, a wedge,
SPHENOID'AL, } and ἴδιος, form.] Resembling a wedge. The sphenoid bone is the pterygoid bone of the basis of the skull, so named because it is wedged in amidst the other bones of the head.

—Sphenoidal suture, the sphenoidal and ethmoidal sutures are those which surround the many irregular processes of the sphenoid and ethmoidal bones, and join them to each other and to the rest.

SPHENO-MAXILLARY, a. Relating to the sphenoid and maxillary bones.

SPHENO-PALATINATE, a. Relating to the sphenoid and palate bones.

SPHENO-PARIETAL, a. Relating to the sphenoid and parietal bones.

SPHENOPTEKIS, n. A genus of fossil ferns, remarkable for the wedge-shaped divisions of their fronds.

SPHENO-TEMPORAL, a. Relating to the sphenoid and temporal bones.

SPHERÉ, n. [Fr. from L. sphæra, Gr. σφαίρα, whence G. sphère.] 1. In geom., a solid body contained under a single surface, which in every part is equally distant from a point called its centre, and hence all its radii are equal. It may be conceived to be generated by the revolution of a semicircle about its diameter, which remains fixed, and which is hence called the axis of the sphere. A section of a sphere made by a plane passing through its centre, is called a great circle of the sphere; and when the cutting plane does not pass through the centre, the section is called a small circle of the sphere. A sphere is two-thirds of its circumscribing cylinder. Spheres are to one another as the cubes of their diameters. The surface of a sphere is equal to four times the area of one of its great circles, and the solidity is found by multiplying the cube of the diameter by $\frac{5236}{3}$ or $\frac{1}{3}$ of 7854; or by multiplying the area of a great circle by $\frac{2}{3}$ of the diameter.—2. An orb or globe of the mundane system, as, the sun, the earth, the stars, or planets.

First the sun, a mighty sphere, he fram'd.

Milton.

Then mortal ears

Had heard the music of the spheres.

Dryden.

3. An orbicular body, or a circular figure representing the earth or apparent heavens.—4. Circuit of motion; revolution; orbit; as, the diurnal sphere.

—5. In astron., the concave expanse of the heavens, which appears to the eye as the interior surface of a hollow sphere enclosing the earth, which is placed at its centre. In this sphere all the heavenly bodies appear to be fixed, and at equal distances from the eye. It is also called the celestial sphere. The equator, ecliptic, meridians, &c., are circles of the celestial sphere.—6. In geography, a representation of the earth on the surface of a globe, which has also represented on it an assemblage of circles, showing the positions of the equator, ecliptic, meridians, &c.—7. Circuit of action, knowledge, or influence; compass; province; employment. Every man has his particular sphere of action, in which it should be his ambition to excel. Events of this kind have repeatedly fallen within the sphere of my knowledge. This man treats of matters not within his sphere.—8. Rank; order of society. Persons moving in a higher sphere claim more deference.—Sphere of activity of a body, the whole space through which the influence of a body, as a magnet, &c., extends.—A right sphere, that aspect of the heavens in which the circles of daily motion of the heavenly bodies are perpendicular to the horizon. A spectator at the equator views a right sphere.—A parallel sphere, that in which the circles of daily motion are parallel to the horizon. A spectator at either of the poles would view a parallel sphere.—An oblique sphere, that in which the circles of daily motion are oblique to the horizon, as is the case to a spectator at any point between the equator and either pole.—Armillary sphere, an artificial representation of the circles of the sphere, by means of brass rings. [See ARMILLARY.]—Doctrine of the sphere, the doctrine of the properties of the sphere considered as a geometrical body, particularly the several circles described on its surface, with the method of projecting these on a plane, and likewise the application of these geometrical properties, and notions to geography and astronomy.—Projection of the sphere. [See PROJECTION.]—Terrestrial sphere, the earth, or any representation of it.

SPHERE, v. t. To place in a sphere.

The glorious planet Sol
 In noble eminence enthron'd, and spher'd
 Amidst the rest. [Unusual.] Shak.
2. To form into roundness; as, light spher'd in a radiant cloud.

SPHERE-BORN, a. Born among the spheres.

SPHERED, pp. Placed in a sphere.
SPHERE-DESCEND'ED, a. Descended from the spheres.

SPHERE-MEL'ODY, n. Melody of the spheres.

SPHERE-MUSIC, n. The music or harmony of the spheres.

SPHER'IC, } a. [It. sferico; Fr. SPHER'ICAL, } spherique; L. sphæricus.] 1. Globular; orbicular; having a surface in every part equally distant from the centre; as, a spherical body. Drops of water take a spherical form.—2. Planetary; relating to the orbs of the planets.

We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and the stars, as if we were villains by spherical predominance. Shak.

3. Relating to a sphere.

Spherical geometry, that branch of geometry which treats of spherical magnitudes, as, spherical triangles, arches, and angles.—Spherical angle, an angle formed on the surface of a sphere, by the intersection of two great circles, and is the same with the inclination of the planes of these circles.—Spherical triangle, a triangle formed on the surface of a sphere by the mutual intersection of three great circles. Spherical triangles are divided into right-angled, oblique-angled, equilateral, isosceles, &c., as plane triangles are.—Spherical trigonometry, that branch of trigonometry which teaches to compute the sides and angles of spherical triangles. [See TRIGONOMETRY.]—Spherical excess, the excess of the sum of the three angles of a spherical triangle above two right angles or 180°, the three angles of every spherical triangle being greater than two right angles.—Spherical aberration. [See ABBERRATION.]

SPHER'ICAL BRACKETING, n. In arch., brackets so formed that the surface of the lath-and-plaster work which they support forms a spherical surface.

SPHER'ICALLY, adv. In the form of a sphere.

SPHER'ICALNESS, } n. The state or SPHERIC'ITY, } quality of being orbicular or spherical; roundness; as, the sphericity of a drop of water.

SPHER'ICLE, n. A small sphere.

SPHER'ICS, n. In geom., the doctrine of the properties of the sphere considered as a geometrical body; and in particular of the different circles described on its surface, with the method of projecting the same on a plane.

SPHE'ROID, n. [Gr. σφαῖρα, a sphere, and ειδής, form.] A body or figure approaching to a sphere, but not perfectly spherical. In geom., a spheroid is a solid, generated by the revolution of an ellipse about one of its axis. When the generating ellipse revolves about its longer or major axis, the spheroid is oblong or prolate; when about its less or minor axis, the spheroid is oblate. The earth is an oblate spheroid, that is, flattened at the poles, so that its polar diameter is shorter than its equatorial diameter. [See EARTH.] The same figure is assumed by the other planets; hence, the properties of the oblate spheroid are of great importance in geodesy and astronomy.

SPHEROID'AL, } a. Having the SPHEROID'IC, } form of a spher- SPHEROID'ICAL, } roid.—2. In crystallography, bounded by several convex faces.

SPHEROID'AL BRACKETING, n. In arch., bracketing which has a spheroidal surface.

SPHEROID'ITY, n. The state or quality of being spheroidal.

SPHERO'METER, n. [Gr. σφαῖρα and μετρέω, measure.] An instrument for measuring the thickness of small bodies, when great accuracy is required; the curvature of optical glasses, &c.

SPHEROSID'ERITE, n. A substance found in the basaltic compact lava of Steinheim; called also glass lava or hyatite.

SPHER'ULE, n. [L. sphærule.] A little sphere or spherical body. Mercury or quicksilver, when poured upon a plane, divides itself into a great number of minute spherules.

SPHER'ULITE, n. A variety of obsidian or pearl-stone, found in rounded grains.

SPHERY, a. Belonging to the spheres.—2. Round; spherical.

SPHYGMO'METER, } n. [Gr. σφυγμός, SPHYGMO'METER, } the pulse, and μετρέω, measure.] An instrument for counting the arterial pulsations, and one which renders the action of the pulse visible to the eye, and indicates its strength.

SPHIN'CTER, n. [from Gr. σφινγών, to constrain, to draw close.] In anat., a name applied generally to a kind of circular muscles, or muscles in rings, which serve to close the external orifices of organs; as the sphincter of the mouth, of the eyes, &c.; and more particularly to those among them which, like the sphincter ani, have the peculiarity of being in a state of permanent contraction, independently of the will, and of relaxing only when it is required, that the contents of the organs which they close should be evacuated.

SPHIN'GIDÆ, n. A family of lepidopterous insects, section Crepuscularia. The insects belonging to this division generally fly in the evening or early in the morning, but there are many which fly in the day-time. This family embraces some of the largest European lepidoptera; as, the death's head hawk-moth, the sphinx atropos, Linn; the privet hawk-moth, (sphinx ligustri.)

SPHINX, n. pl. Sphinxes. The classic plur. sphinges is sometimes used. [Gr. σφιγξ; L. sphinx.] 1. A famous monster in Egypt, having the body of a lion and the face of a young woman, or the head of a ram. In some cases the head is covered with a kind of cap, which also covers part of the neck.

The Egyptian sphinxes were generally placed at the entrance of temples, where they often formed a long avenue leading to the temple. The Greek sphinxes are represented with wings, but those of Egypt were without wings. Sphinxes are also found in India as ornaments of temples, but they are always represented with the head of a man.—2. In entom., the hawk-moth, a genus of lepidopterous insects, section Crepuscularia. They are so named from the attitude of several of the caterpillars, which resembles that of the fabled monster so called. [See SPHINGIDÆ.]

SPHRAG'ID, n. A species of ochreous clay, which falls to pieces in water with the emission of many bubbles; called also earth of Lemnos.

SPHRAGIS'TICES, n. [Gr. σφραγίς, a seal.] The science of seals, their history, peculiarities, and distinctions. The chief object of this science is to ascertain the age and genuineness of the documents to which seals are affixed.

SPHYGMOMETER. See SPHYGMO-METER.

SPY'AL, † n. A spy; a scout.

SPY'GATE, a. [L. spicatus, from spica, a spike.] Having a spike or ear, eared like corn.

SPY'CA VIRGINIS, n. A star of the first magnitude in the constellation Virgo.

SPIC'CA TO, [It. divided.] In music, a term which indicates that every note is to have its distinct sound; and in regard to instruments played with a bow, it denotes that every note is to have a distinct bow.

SPICE, n. [Fr. epice; It. spezie; Sp. especia.] 1. A vegetable production, fragrant or aromatic to the smell, and pungent to the taste; such as pepper, nutmeg, ginger, cinnamon, and cloves, used in sauces and in cookery.—2. A small quantity, giving a seasoning to a greater; something that enriches or alters the quality of a thing in a small degree, as spice alters the taste of a thing.—3. A sample. [Fr. espèce.]

SPICE, v. t. To season with spice; to season; to mix aromatic substances with; as, to spice wine.—2. To tincture; as, the spiced Indian air.—3. To render nice; to season with scruples.

SPICED, pp. Seasoned with spice.

SPICER, n. One that seasons with spice.

2. One who deals in spice.

SPICERY, n. [Fr. epicerie.] 1. Spices in general; fragrant and aromatic vegetable substances used in seasoning.—2. A repository of spices.

SPICE'WOOD, n. The Laurus benzoin, an American shrub, the wild-allspice, or benjamin tree.

SPY'GINESS, n. Quality of being spiey.

SPICING, pp. Seasoning with spice.

SPICK and SPAN, bright; shining; as, a garment spick and span new, or span-new. Spick is from the root of the It. spicco, brightness; spicare, to shine; spicare le parole, to speak distinctly; spiccare, to rush out, the radical sense of which is to shoot or dart. Span is probably from the root of spangle, Gr. σφιγξ, G. spiegel, a mirror.

SPICK'NEL. See SPIGNEL.

SPICOS'ITY, † n. [L. spica.] The state of having or being full of ears, like corn.

SPIC'ULAR, a. [L. spiculum, a dart.] Resembling a dart; having sharp points.

SPICULATE, v. t. [L. spicula, to sharpen, from spiculum, a dart, from spica, or its root. See SPIKE.] To sharpen to a point.

SPICEULE, n. [L. spicula.] In bot., a spikelet.

SPICY, a. [from spice.] Producing spicy; abounding with spices; as, the spicy shore of Arabia.—2. Having the qualities of spice; fragrant; aromatic; as, spicy plants.

Led by new stars and borne by spicy gales.
Pope.

3. Showy; handsome; neat; as, a spicy garment. [Vulgar.]

SPIDER, n. [D. spinne; Ger. spume; Sw. spindel; Dan. and Ger. spinner; Sw. spinna; Sax. spinnan, to spin.] 1. The common name of the animals of the family Araneides, of the class Arachnida, some of which are remarkable for spinning webs for taking their prey and forming a convenient habitation, and for the deposit of their food. The abdomen of the spider is furnished with from four to six cylindrical or conical, articulated mammilla, with fleshy extremities, which are perforated with numberless small orifices for the passage of silky filaments of extreme tenuity, with which they form their webs, and which proceed from internal reservoirs. Their mandibles are terminated by a movable hook, flexed inferiorly, underneath which, and near its extremity, which is always pointed, is a little opening, that allows a passage to a venomous fluid contained in a gland of the preceding joint. After wounding their prey with their hooked mandibles, they inject this poison into the wound, which suddenly destroys the victim. A very great diversity exists in the modes in which spiders construct their webs, and in the situations in which they are placed. Some spiders are sedentary, and catch their prey by entangling them in their webs; others roam abroad in search of their prey.

The spider's touch, how exquisitely fine!

Pope.

2. A kitchen utensil, somewhat resembling a spider.—3. A trevet to support vessels over a fire.

SPIDERLIKE, a. Resembling a spider.

SPIDER ORCHIS, n. The common name of two British species of Ophrys, the O. arachnites, late spider orchis, and O. aranifera, early spider orchis. [See OPHRYS.]

SPIDERWORT, n. A British perennial plant of the genus Anthericum, the A. serotinum, mountain spiderwort. It grows on some of the highest Welsh mountains.

SPIGELIA, n. Worm-seed, a genus of plants, nat. order Spigeliaceae. It consists of annual and perennial herbs and under shrubs, with opposite leaves and rose-coloured or purple flowers. They are natives of North and South America. The root of S. marylandica, is used in America as a vermifuge; and if administered in large doses, it acts powerfully as a cathartic. S. anthelmia possesses powerful narcotic properties, and is used in the same manner as the last.

SPIGELIA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of plants belonging to the monopetalous subclass of Exogens. There are only two genera, Spigelia and Canala, both natives of America.

SPIGNEL, n. A British plant of the genus meum, the M. athamanticum. [See MEUM.]

SPIG'OT, n. [W. yspigawd, from yspig, Eng. spike; from pig, Eng. pike; Dan. spiger; a nail. See SPIKE and PIKE.] A pin or peg used to stop a faucet, or to stop a small hole in a cask of liquor.

SPIKE, n. [W. yspig, supra; D. spyh, spyher; G. speiche; Dan. spiger, Sw. spik, a nail; L. spica, an ear of corn. It signifies a shoot or point. See PIKE.] 1. A large nail or pin, generally of iron, but sometimes of wood; a piece of pointed iron like a long nail, inserted with the point outwards, as on the top of walls, gates, &c., to prevent people from passing over them; a nail or instrument, with which the vents of cannon are filled up.—2. An ear of corn or grain.—3. A shoot.—4. [L. spica.] In bot., a species of inflorescence, in which sessile flowers are alternate on a common simple peduncle, as in wheat, rye, lavender, &c.

SPIKE, n. A species of lavender, Lavandula spica.

SPIKE, v. t. To fasten with spikes or long and large nails; as, to spike down the planks of a floor or bridge.—2. To set with spikes.

A youth leaping over the spiked pales .. was caught by the spikes. [Unusual.]

Wiseman.

3. To stop the vent with spikes.—To spike a gun or cannon, is to fill up the touch-hole by driving a nail or spike forcibly into it, in order to render it unserviceable.—To spike up the ordnance, is a sea phrase for fastening a quin with spikes to the deck, close to the breech of a gun carriage, so that the gun may keep firmly and closely to the sides of the ship, when she rolls.

SPIKED, pp. Furnished with spikes, as corn; spicate; fastened with spikes; stopped with spikes.

SPIKELET, n. In bot., a small spike making a part of a large one; or a subdivision of a spike, as, the spikelets of grasses.

SPIKENARD, n. (spik'nard.) [L. spica nardi.] 1. A highly aromatic plant growing in the East Indies, the Nardostachys jatamansi of Decandolle, nat. order Valerianaceae. The fruit has a strong smell and a sharp bitterish taste. This is the true spikenard of the ancients, and it has enjoyed celebrity from the earliest period, on account of the valuable extract or perfume obtained from its roots, which was used at the ancient baths and at feasts. It is called jatamansi or balchar by the Hindoos, and sunbil by the Arabians. Differences of opinion exist respecting the nature of the fragrance of the jatamansi. It is, however, highly esteemed in the East as a perfume, and is used to scent oils and unguents. [See NARD.] The name spikenard is applied to various other plants; as to valeriana celtica; andropogon nardus, lavendula spica, asarum Europaeum, &c. In the United States, it is applied to araliaracemosa.—2. A name of various fragrant essential oils.

SPIKE-RUSH, n. The common name of several British plants of the genus Eleocharis. [See ELEOCHARIS.]

SPIKING, ppr. Fastening with spikes; stopping with large nails.

SPIKE, a. Having a sharp point.

SPILL, n. [Dan. spil, a pivot, a spindle; G. spille; Ir. spile; Scot. spylte.] 1. A small shiver of wood, or a small peg or pin for stopping a cask; as, a vent hole stopped with a spill.—2. A little bar or pin of iron.—3.† A little sum of money.

SPILL, v. t. pret. Spilled or Spilt; pp. id. [Sax. spellan; D. and G. spillen.] 1. To suffer to fall or run out of a vessel; to lose or suffer to be scattered; applied only to fluids and to substances whose particles are small and loose. Thus we spill water from a pail; we spill spirit or oil from a bottle; we spill quicksilver or powders from a vessel or a paper; we spill sand or flour. Spill differs from pour in expressing accidental loss; a loss or waste not designed, or contrary to purpose.—2. To suffer to be shed; as, a man spills his own blood.—3. To cause to flow out or lose; to shed; as, a man spills another's blood. [This is applied to cases of murder or other homicide, but not to venesection. In the latter case we say, to let or take blood.]

And to revenge his blood so justly spilt.
Dryden.

4. To injure; to destroy; as, to spill the mind or soul; to spill glory; to spill forms, &c. [This application is obsolete and now improper.].—5. To throw away.—6. In seamen's lan., to discharge the wind out of the cavity or belly of a sail, in order to furl or reef it.

SPILL, † v. i. To waste; to be prodigal.—2. To be shed; to be suffered to fall, be lost, or wasted.

He was so topfull of himself, that he let it spill on all the company. Watts.

SPILLED, pp. Suffered to fall, as liquids; shed.

SPILLER, n. One that spills or sheds.—2. A kind of fishing-line.

SPILLING, ppr. Suffering to fall or run out, as liquids; shedding.—Spilling-lines, in a ship, are certain ropes, fixed occasionally to the main and fore-sails of a ship, in tempestuous weather, for reefing or furling them more conveniently.

SPILL'WATER, n. An excavation made outside the bankment of a river, to receive the water that overflows when the river is flooded, and prevent it from flooding the adjacent grounds.

SPLIT, pret. and pp. of Spill.

SPLITH, † n. [from spill.] Any thing split.

SPIN, v. t. pret. and pp. Spun. Spin is not used. [Sax. spinnan; D. and G. spinnen.] If the sense is to draw out or extend, this coincides in origin with span.] 1. To draw out and twist into threads, either by the hand or machinery; as, to spin wool, cotton, or flax; to spin goats' hair.

All the yarn which Penelope spun in Ulysses' absence, did but fill Ithaca with moths. Shak.

2. To draw out tediously; to form by a slow process or by degrees; with out; as, to spin out large volumes on a subject.—3. To extend to a great length; as, to spin out a subject.—4. To draw out; to protract; to spend by delays; as, to spin out the day in idleness.

By one delay after another, they spin out their whole lives. L'Esrange.

5. To whirl with a thread; to turn or cause to whirl; as, to spin a top.—6. To draw out from the stomach in a filament; as, a spider spins a web.—To spin hay, in milit. lan., is to twist it into ropes for convenient carriage on an expedition.

SPIN, v. i. To practice spinning; to work at drawing and twisting threads; as, the woman knows how to spin. They neither know to spin nor care to toil.

Prior.

2. To perform the act of drawing and twisting threads; as, a machine or mule spins with great exactness.—3. To move round rapidly; to whirl; as a top or a spindle.—4. † To stream or issue in a thread or small current; as, blood spins from a vein.

SPINA, n. plur. Spinæ, [L.] A thorn; a prickle; a spine.

SPINA'CEOUS, a. Relating to spinach, or the class of plants to which it belongs.

SPIN'ACH, } n. [L. spinacia; It. spin
SPIN'AGE, } nacee; Fr. épinards; G.
spinat; Pers. spanach.] Spinacia, a genus of plants, nat. order Chenopodiaceæ. There are only two species, one of which, S. oleracea, or common spinach, is well known on account of its use in the kitchen. It is eaten sometimes in salads, but more frequently cooked in various ways. It is a wholesome and agreeable aliment, but contains little nutriment. There are two principal varieties cultivated in gardens, the prickly-fruited and the smooth-fruited.

SPINAL, a. [See SPINE.] Pertaining to the spine or back bone of an animal; as, the spinal cord; spinal muscles; spinal arteries. The spinal cord, or spinal marrow, is a continuation of the medulla oblongata. It begins directly behind the origin of the ninth pair of nerves, and obtains its name from being contained in the osseous canal of the spine. It gives rise on each side to a number of nerves, being the origin of most of the nerves of the trunk of the body. The arteries of the spinal cord consist of anterior and posterior spinal arteries, and of many additional branches communicating with others from the adjacent vessels.

SPINDLE, n. [from spin; Sax. and Dan. spindel.] 1. The pin used in spinning wheels for twisting the thread, and on which the thread, when twisted, is wound.—2. Any slender pointed rod or pin which turns round, or on which any thing turns; as, the spindle of a vane.—3. The fusee of a watch.—4. A long slender stalk.—5. In geom., a solid body generated by the revolution of some curve about its base or double ordinate, in opposition to a conoid, which is generated by the rotation of the curve about its axis, or abscissa, perpendicular to its ordinate. The spindle is denominated circular, elliptic, hyperbolic, or parabolic, according to the figure of its generating curve.—6. In mech., a term synonymous with axis. In machinery, where several axes occur, it is usual to denominate the subordinate or smaller axes spindles.—7. In mast-making, the upper main piece of a made mast.—Spindle of a capstan, the smallest part of a ship's capstan, which is between the two decks.—Spindle of a vane, a sort of iron pin tapering at the upper end to a point. It is fixed into the upper end of the top-gallant-mast, so as to carry a vane, which, by turning on it, indicates the direction of the wind.

SPINDLE, v. i. To shoot or grow in a long slender stalk or body.

SPINDLE, n. In manufactures, a quantity of thread, yarn, or silk, put up together after it is taken off the reel. It contains 18 hanks of 7 skeins each. The skein contains 80 threads of 64 inches. [The Scotch word is spynle.] SPINDLE-LEGS, } n. A tall slender SPINDLE-SHANKS, } der person; in contempt.

SPINDLE-SHANK'ED, a. Having long slender legs.

SPINDLE-SHAP'ED, a. Having the shape of a spindle; fusiform.

SPINDLE-TREE, n. A plant of the genus Eunonymus, the E. Europæus. [See EUNYMIUS.]

SPINDLE-WORM, n. The caterpillar of a lepidopterous insect, which injures maize plants. [American.]

SPIND'LING, ppr. or a. Tall and slender; shooting into a thin tall stalk.

SPINE, n. [L. and It. spina; Fr. épine; W. yspin, from pin.] 1. The back bone of a vertebrated animal, so called from the thorn-like processes of the vertebrae. In reference to man, it is the articulated bony column, reaching from the head down the back to the os sacrum, being the series or assemblage of vertebrae which sustains the rest of the body, contains the spinal marrow, and to which the ribs are connected. [See VERTEBRÆ.]—2. The shin of the leg.—3. A thorn; a sharp process from the woody part of a plant. It differs from a prickle, which proceeds from the bark. A spine sometimes terminates a branch, and sometimes is axillary, growing at the angle formed by the branch or leaf with the stem. The wild apple and pear are armed with spines; the rose, bramble, gooseberry, &c., are armed with prickles.—4. In zool., a thin, pointed spike, as in fishes.—5. Sometimes a ridge.

SPINEL, } n. [It. spinella.] A sub-
SPINELLE, } species of corundum, which occurs in regular crystals, and sometimes in rounded grains. Its colours are red, black, blue, green, brown, yellow, and white. Its colouring matter is sometimes oxide of chromium, but generally oxide of iron. It usually contains from 80 to 84 per cent. of alumina, and from 8 to 10 of magnesia. It is also termed spinel ruby, balas ruby, and ceylanite. It is found in the beds of rivers, in Ceylon and Siam, and imbedded in carbonate of lime in North America and Sweden.

SPINEL'ANE, n. A mineral occurring in small crystalline masses and in minute crystals. It is a dodecahedral variety of Zeolite, of a bluish or brownish colour, found near Andernach, on the Rhine.

SPINES'CENT, a. [from spine.] Becoming hard and thorny.

SPIN'ET, n. [It. spinetta; Fr. épinette; Sp. espineta.] An instrument of music resembling a harpsichord, but smaller; a virginal; a clavichord. It is now entirely superseded by the piano-forte.

SPIN'ET, † n. [L. spinetum.] A small wood or place where briars and thorns grow.

SPINIF'EROUS, a. [L. spina, spine, and fero, to bear.] Producing spines; bearing thorns.

SPIN'IFORM, a. [L. spina, and forma, form.] Having the form of a spine, or thorn.

SPINK, n. A trivial name given to the chaffinch.

SPINNER, n. One that spins; one skilled in spinning.—2. A spider; especially the garden spider with long jointed legs.

SPIN'NERS, or SPIN'NERETS, n. The organs with which insects form their silk or webs; as the silk-worm and spider.

SPIN'NERY, n. A place where fibrous substances, or other staples, are spun; as, a flax, silk, or cotton spinnery.

SPIN'NING, ppr. Drawing out and twisting into threads; drawing out; delaying.

SPIN'NING, n. The act, practice, or art of drawing out and twisting into threads, as wool, flax, cotton, &c. When the fibres of cotton, wool, flax, &c., are intended to be woven, they are reduced to threads of uniform size, more or less fine, by the well-known process of spinning. The primitive modes of spinning by the spindle and distaff, and by the spinning wheel, only enable the spinner to produce a single thread, or at the utmost, two threads, at once; but with the almost automatic spinning machinery, which in modern times has been called into existence by the cotton manufacture, one individual may produce nearly two thousand threads at the same time.

—2. The act or practice of forming webs, as spiders.

SPIN'NING-JENNY, n. An engine or complicated machine for spinning wool or cotton, in the manufacture of cloth, in which many spindles are turned by a horizontal wheel. It was invented about 1767 by James Hargreaves, a weaver in Lancashire. It was long ago superseded by the mule, a machine which combines the principles of the jenny and water-frame.

SPIN'NING-WHEEL, n. A wheel for spinning wool, cotton, or flax into threads by the hand. Before the introduction of machinery for spinning, there were two kinds of spinning wheels in common use; the large wheel, for spinning wool and cotton, and the small or Saxon wheel, for spinning flax.

SPIN'NOSE, a. Spinous.

SPINOS'ITY, n. The state of being spiny or thorny; crabbedness.

SPIN'OUS, a. [L. spinosus, from spina.] Full of spines; armed with thorns; thorny, as a plant. Spinous leaf, a leaf having its margin beset with spines, as in thistles.—2. In anat., applied to certain processes of bones.

SPIN'OSISM, n. The peculiar atheism, or rather pantheism, of Benedict Spinoza, a Dutch Jew; who maintained that God is not only the maker, but also the matter of the universe; so that creation was only a development of himself by the Deity.

SPIN'OSIST, n. A believer in the doctrines of Spinoza.

SPIN'STER, n. [from ster.] A woman who spins, or whose occupation is to spin. Hence,—2. In law, the common title by which an unmarried woman, without rank or distinction, is designated in England.

she a gentlewoman is termed a spinster, she may abate the writ. Coke.

SPIN'STRY, n. The business of spinning.

SPIN'THERE, n. A mineral of a greenish grey colour; it is a variety of sphe.

SPIN'ULE, n. A minute spine.

SPINULES'CENT, a. In bot., having a tendency to produce small spines.

SPIN'ULOSE, a. In bot., covered with small spines.

SPIN'Y, a. [from spine.] Full of spines; thorny; as, a spiny tree.—2. Perplexed; difficult; troublesome.

SPIRACLE, n. [L. spiraculum, from spiro, to breathe.] 1. In entom., spiracles are the breathing pores, or external orifices of the air tubes of insects; also called stigmata.—2. Any small external breathing hole or vent, in animals or plants.

SPIRÆA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Rosaceæ. The species which are diffused through the temperate parts of the northern hemisphere, consist of small unarmed shrubs or perennial herbs, with white or reddish flowers. Three species are British, and are known by the name of meadow-sweet,—which see.

SPIRAL, a. [It. spirale; Fr. spiral; from L. spira, a spire.] Winding round a fixed point or centre, and continually receding from it, like a watch-spring. [See the noun.]—2. In common lan., winding round a cylinder or other round body and at the same time rising or advancing forward, like a cork-screw. The column in the Place Vendôme, at Paris, is divided by a spiral line into compartments. A whirlwind is so named from the spiral motion of the air.—3. In arch. and sculp., applied to a curve that ascends winding about a cone or spire, so that every point of it continually approaches the axis. It is thus distinguished from the helix or screw, which winds in the same manner round a cylinder.

SPIRAL, n. In geom., the name given to a class of curves, distinguished by this property, that they continually recede from a centre or pole, while they continue to revolve about it. The main-spring of a watch gives an idea of this kind of curve. Spirals receive different names from the properties by which they are characterized, or from their inventors; as, the spiral of Archimedes; the logarithmic spiral; the lozodromic spiral; the parabolic spiral, &c.—2. In common lan., a helix or curve which winds round a cylinder like a screw.

SPIRAL-COATED, a. Coated spirally.

SPIRALLY, adv. In a spiral form or direction; in the manner of a screw.

SPIRAL-PUMP, n. The Archimedes' water-screw. [See ARCHIMEDES' SCREW.]

SPIRAL-VESSELS, n. In plants, fine transparent membranous tubes, with one or more spiral fibres coiled up in their interior. They are generally present among the other vessels of plants, and in trees are found chiefly in the medullary sheath surrounding the pith. The fibre coils either from right to left, or the reverse, somewhat in the manner of a cork-screw. The fibre may be single or double, or it may be composed of numerous threads up to 25. These vessels are extremely delicate, their diameter averaging the 1000th of an inch. Their function is that of the conveyance of air. They are very seldom found in the root or bark of wood, but are frequently abundant in the other parts, especially in the leaves and flowers. They are easily discovered on breaking asunder the leaves and stalks of many plants, when the fibres may be unrolled, and present themselves as delicate filaments, like those of spiders.

SPIRAL-WHEELS, n. In mill work, a species of gearing much used in the textile manufactures. Spiral wheels serve the same purpose as bevel wheels, and are better adapted for light machinery. The teeth are formed upon the circumference of cylinders of the required diameter, at an angle of 45° with their respective axes, when the direction of the motion is to be changed from the horizontal to the vertical. By this construction the teeth become in fact small portions of screws or spirals winding round the cylinders, whence the name.

Spiral Wheels.

SPIRATION, † n. [L. spiratio.] A breathing.

SPIRE, n. [L. spira; Gr. σπιρα: Sp. spira; from the root of L. spiro, to breathe. The primary sense of the root is to throw, to drive, to send, but it implies a winding motion, like throw, warp, and many others.] 1. A winding line like the threads of a screw; a spiral; any thing wreathed or contorted; a curl; a twist; a wreath.

His neck erect amidst his circling spires.
Milton.

A dragon's fiery form belied the god;
Sublime on radiant spires he rode.

Dryden.

2. A body that shoots up to a point; a tapering body; a conical or pyramidal body; the tapering portion of a steeple rising above the tower; a steeple.

With glist'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd.
Milton.

In arch., the pyramidal or conical termination of a tower or turret. The earliest spires were merely pyramidal or conical roofs, specimens of which still exist in Norman buildings, as that of the tower of Than church in Normandy. These roofs, becoming gradually elongated, and more and more acute, resulted at length in the elegant tapering spire; among the many existing examples of which, probably, that of Salisbury is the finest. The spires of mediæval architecture, to which alone they are appropriate, are generally square, octagonal, or circular in plan; they are sometimes solid, more frequently hollow, and are variously ornamented with bands encircling them, with panels more or less enriched, and with spire lights, which are of infinite variety. Their angles are sometimes crocketed, and they are almost invariably terminated by a finial. In the later styles the general pyramidal outline is obtained by diminishing the diameter of the building in successive stages, and this has been imitated in modern spires, in which the forms and details of classic architecture have been applied to structures essentially mediæval. The term spire is sometimes restricted to signify such tapering buildings, crowning towers or turrets, as have parapets at their base. When the spire rises from the exterior of the wall of the tower without the intervention of a parapet, it is called a broach.—3. A stalk or blade of grass or other plant. How humble ought man to be, who cannot make a single spire of grass!—4. The top or uppermost point of a thing.

SPIRE, v. i. To shoot; to shoot up pyramidically.—2.† To breathe.—3. To sprout, as grain in malting.

SPIRED, a. Having a spire.

SPIRE-LIGHTS, n. The windows of a spire.

SPIRIFER, n. [L. spira, a spire, and fero, to bear.] The name of an extinct genus of molluscs, having a shell with two internal, calcareous, spiral appendages.

SPIRIT, n. [Fr. esprit; L. spiritus, from spiro, to breathe, to blow. The primary sense is to rush or drive.] 1. Primarily, wind; air in motion; hence, breath.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them. Bacon.

[This sense is now unusual.]—2. Animal excitement, or the effect of it; life; ardour; fire; courage; elevation or vehemence of mind. The troops attacked the enemy with great spirit. The young man has the spirit of youth. He speaks or acts with spirit. Spirits, in the plural, is used in nearly a like sense. The troops began to recover their spirits.—3. Vigour of intellect; genius.

His wit, his beauty, and his spirit. Butler.

The noblest spirit or genius cannot deserve enough of mankind to pretend to the esteem of heroic virtue. Temple.

4. Temper; disposition of mind, habitual or temporary; as, a man of a generous spirit, or of a revengeful spirit; the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit.

Let us go to the house of God in the spirit of prayer. Bickersteth.

5. The soul of man; the intelligent, immaterial, and immortal part of human beings. [See SOUL.]

The spirit shall return to God that gave it; Eccles. xii.

6. An immaterial intelligent substance.

Spirit is a substance in which thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving do subsist. Locke.

Hence,—7. An immaterial intelligent being.

By which he went and preached to the spirits in prison; 1 Pet. iii.

God is a spirit; John iv.

8. Turn of mind; temper; occasional state of the mind.

A perfect judge will read each work of wit, With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

9. Powers of mind distinct from the body.

In spirit perhaps he also saw Rich Mexico, the seat of Montezum. Milton.

10. Sentiment; perception. Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain. Shak.

11. Eager desire; disposition of mind excited and directed to a particular object.

God has made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down. South.

12. A person of activity; a man of life, vigour, or enterprise.

The watery kingdom is no bar To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shak.

13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. Such spirits as he desired to please, such would I choose for my judges. Dryden.

14. Excitement of mind; animation; cheerfulness; usually in the plural. We found our friend in very good spirits. He has a great flow of spirits. To sing thy praise, would heaven my breath prolong. Infusing spirits worthy such a song. Dryden.

15. Life or strength of resemblance; essential qualities; as, to set off the face in its true spirit. The copy has not the spirit of the original.—16. Something eminently pure and refined.

Nor doth the eye itself,

That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself. Shak.

17. Among the older chemists, a name given to most substances capable of being vaporized, and condensed by distillation, and to some not obtained by distillation. Three principal kinds were distinguished; inflammable or ardent spirits, acid spirits, and alkaline spirits. Modern chemists, however, confine the word, especially when employed by itself, almost exclusively to the spirit of wine or alcohol.—18. In commercial lan., a strong, pungent liquor, usually obtained by distillation, as rum, brandy, gin, whisky. [See SPIRITS.]—19. An apparition; a ghost.—20. The renewed nature of man; Matt. xxvi.; Gal. v.—21. The influences of the Holy Spirit; Matt. xxii.—Holy Spirit, the third person in the Trinity. SPIR'IT, v. t. To animate; to actuate; as a spirit.

So talk'd the spirited sly snake. [Little used.]
Milton.

2. To animate with vigour; to excite; to encourage; as, civil dissensions spirit the ambition of private men. It is sometimes followed by up; as, to spirit up.—3. To kidnap.—To spirit away, to entice or seduce.

SPIR'ITALLY, adv. By means of the breath.

SPIR'ITED, pp. Animated; encouraged; incited.—2. a. Animated; full of life; lively; full of spirit or fire; as, a spirited address or oration; a spirited answer. It is used in composition, noting the state of the mind; as, in high-spirited low-spirited, mean-spirited.

SPIR'ITEDLY, adv. In a lively manner; with spirit; with strength; with animation.

SPIR'ITEDNESS, n. Life; animation;—2. Disposition or make of mind. Used in compounds; as high-spiritedness, low-spiritedness, mean-spiritedness, narrow-spiritedness.

SPIR'ITFUL, † a. Lively; full of spirit. SPIR'ITFULLY, † adv. In a lively manner.

SPIR'ITFULNESS, † n. Liveliness; sprightliness.

SPIR'ITING, ppr. Animating; actuating.

SPIR'IT-LAMP, n. A lamp in which alcohol is used instead of oil.

SPIR'ITLESS, a. Destitute of spirits; wanting animation; wanting cheerfulness; dejected; depressed.—2. Destitute of vigour; wanting life, courage, or fire; as, a spiritless slave.

A man so faint, so spiritless,

So dull, so dead in look. Shak.

3. Having no breath; extinct; dead. SPIR'ITLESSLY, adv. Without spirit; without exertion.

SPIR'ITLESSNESS, n. Dulness; want of life or vigour.

SPIR'IT-LEVEL, n. An instrument employed for determining a line or plane parallel to the horizon, and also the relative heights of ground at two or more stations. It consists of a tube of glass nearly filled with spirit of wine or distilled water, and hermetically sealed at both ends; so that when held with its axis in a horizontal position, the bubble of air which occupies the part not filled with the liquid rises to the upper surface and stands exactly in the middle of the tube. The tube is placed within a brass or wooden case, having a long opening on the side which is to be uppermost, so that the position of the air-bubble may be readily seen. When the instrument thus prepared is laid on a horizontal surface, the air-bubble stands in the very middle of the tube; when the surface slopes, the bubble rises to the higher end. It is used by carpenters and joiners for ascertaining whether the upper surface of any work be horizontal. When employed in surveying, it is attached to a telescope, the telescope and tube being fitted to a frame or cradle of brass, which is supported on three legs.

SPIR'IT OF SALT. An old name for hydrochloric acid.

SPIR'IT OF WINE. Alcohol,—which see.

SPIR'IT/OSO, or CON SPIR'ITO. [It. with spirit.] In music, a term denoting that the movement to which it is prefixed is to be performed in a spirited manner.

SPIR'ITOUS, a. Like spirit; refined; defecated; pure.

More refined, more spiritous and pure.

Milton.

2. Fine; ardent; active.

SPIR'ITOUSNESS, n. A refined state; fineness and activity of parts; as, the thinness and spiritousness of liquor.

SPIR'IT-PIERCING, a. Piercing the spirit.

SPIR'ITS, n. In commercial lan., all inflammable liquors obtained by distillation, as brandy, rum, geneva, whisky, gin, &c. The spirits chiefly manufactured in Britain are gin and whisky. The manufacture of spirits is placed under the supervision of the excise, and a very large revenue is obtained from it. The quantity of spirits consumed yearly in the United Kingdom may be estimated at from 25 to 30 millions of gallons.

SPIR'IT-SEARCHING, a. Searching the spirit.

SPIR'IT-STIRRING, } a. Exciting the SPIR'IT-ROUSING, } spirit.

SPIR'ITUAL, a. [Fr. spirituel; L. spiritualis.] 1. Consisting of spirit; not material; existing imperceptibly to the organs of sense; incorporeal; as, a spiritual substance or being. The soul of man is spiritual.—2. Mental; intellectual; as, spiritual armour.—3. Not gross; refined from external things; not sensual; relating to mind only; as, a spiritual and refined religion.—4. Not lay or temporal; relating to sacred things; ecclesiastical; as, the spiritual functions of the clergy; the lords spiritual and temporal; a spiritual corporation.—5. Pertaining to spirit or to the affections; pure; holy.

God's law is spiritual; it is a transcript of the divine nature, and extends its authority to the acts of the soul of man. Brown.

6. Pertaining to the renewed nature of man; as, spiritual life.—7. Not fleshly; not material; as, spiritual sacrifices; 1 Pet. ii.—8. Pertaining to divine things; as, spiritual songs; Eph. v.—Spiritual courts, courts having jurisdiction over matters appertaining or annexed to ecclesiastical affairs; such as the probate of wills; suits for braulry or smiting in a church or churchyard; slander imputing in- continence, as well as the offence itself; the validity of marriages; the restitution of conjugal rights; subtraction of tithes; and some others which are termed spiritual causes, though not strictly so.

SPIR'ITUALISM, n. The doctrine of the existence of spirits, as distinct from matter. Spiritualism, as distinguished from materialism, is that system according to which all that is real is spirit, soul, or self; that which is called matter, or the external world, being either a succession of notions impressed on the mind, by the Deity, or else a mere notion of the mind itself.—2. State of being spiritual.

SPIR'ITUALIST, n. One who professes a regard for spiritual things only; one whose employment is spiritual.—2. One who admits the reality of an intelligent being, distinct from the perceptible universe; one who maintains that all which is real is spirit. [See SPIRITUALISM.]

SPIR'ITUALITY, n. Essence distinct from matter; immateriality.

If this light be not spiritual, it approacheth nearest to spirituality. Raleigh.

2. Intellectual nature; as, the spirituality of the soul.—3. Spiritual nature; the quality which respects the spirit or affections of the heart only, and the essence of true religion; as, the spirituality of God's law.—4. Spiritual exercises and holy affections.

Much of our spirituality and comfort in public worship depend on the state of mind in which we come. Bickersteth.

5. That which belongs to the church, or to a person as an ecclesiastic, or to religion; as distinct from temporalities.

During the vacancy of a see, the archbishop is guardian of the spiritualities thereof. Blackstone.

6. † An ecclesiastical body.

SPIR'ITUALIZA'TION, n. The act of spiritualizing. Among the older chemists, the operation of extracting spirit from natural bodies.

SPIR'ITUALIZE, v. i. [Fr. spiritualiser, to extract spirit from mixed bodies.] 1. To refine the intellect; to purify from the feculencies of the world; as, to spiritualize the soul.—2. Among the older chemists, to extract spirit from natural bodies, to raise by distillation.—3. To convert to a spiritual meaning.

SPIR'ITUALIZER, n. One who spiritualizes.

SPIR'ITUALLY, adv. Without corporeal grossness or sensuality; in a manner conformed to the spirit of true religion; with purity of spirit or heart. Spiritually minded, under the influence of the Holy Spirit or of holy principles; having the affections refined and elevated above sensual objects, and placed on God and his law; Rom. viii.—Spiritually discerned, known, not by carnal reason, but by the peculiar illumination of the Holy Spirit; 1 Cor. ii.

SPIR'ITUAL MIND'EDNESS, n. The state of having spiritual exercises and holy affections; spirituality.

SPIR'ITUALITY, † n. Ecclesiastics.

SPIR'ITUOSITY, † n. Spirituousness.

SPIR'ITUOSO, in music, with spirit.

SPIR'ITUOUS, a. [Fr. spiritueux.] 1. Containing spirit; consisting of refined spirit; ardent; as, spirituous liquors. [This might well be written spiritous.]—2. Having the quality of spirit; fine; pure; active; as, the spirituous part of a plant.—3. † Lively; gay; vivid; airy.

SPIRITUOUSNESS, n. The quality of being spirituous; ardent; heat; stimulating quality; as, the spirituousness of liquors.—2. Life; tenuity; activity.

SPIRITTING, n. In ship-building, the strake wrought on the ends of the beams; or where there are ports, it is the two strakes worked up to the portsills.

SPIRORBIS, n. A genus of shells belonging to the family of the Serpulacea. This little white shell is coiled round into a spiral disc-like form, and is common on the shell of lobsters.

SPIRT, v. t. [Sw. spruta; Dan. spruder and sproyter, to spout, to squirt, to syringe. The English word has suffered a transposition of letters. It is from the root of sprout,—which see.] To throw out, as a liquid in a stream; to drive or force out with violence, as a liquid from a pipe or small orifice; as, to spirt water from the mouth, or other liquid from a tube.

SPIRT, v. i. To gush or issue out in a stream, as liquor from a cask; to rush from a confined place in a small stream. Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock, Spirts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock.

Pope.

SPIRT, n. A sudden or violent ejection or gushing of a liquid substance from a tube, orifice, or other confined place; a jet.—2. A sudden or short occasion or exigency; sudden effort. [Vulgar.]

SPIRTLE, v. t. To spirt in a scattering manner.

SPIRTLED, pp. Spirted scatteringly.

SPIRULIDÆ, n. A family of polythalamous, decapodous, dibranchiate cephalopods, of which the genus spirula is the type. Some of the species of spirula inhabit tropical seas, where they float on the surface of the ocean; others are only found fossil.

1. Spirula Australis. 2. The shell shown separately.

SPIRULITE, n. A fossil spirula.

SPIRY, a. [from spire.] Of a spiral form; wreathed; curled; as, the spiry volumes of a serpent.—2. Having the form of a pyramid; pyramidal; as, spiry turrets.

SPISS, † a. [L. spissus.] Thick; close; dense.

SPISSATED, a. Thickened; rendered close or dense.

SPISSITUDE, n. [supra.] Thickness of soft substances; the denseness or compactness which belongs to substances not perfectly liquid nor perfectly solid; as, the spissitude of coagulated blood or of any coagulum.

SPIIT, n. [Sax. spitu; D. spit; G. spies; Ice. spiet, a spear. It is from thrusting, shooting.] 1. An iron prong or bar pointed, on which meat is roasted.—2. Such a depth of earth as is pierced by the spade at once. [D. spit, a spade.]—3. In America, a small point of land running into the sea, or a long narrow shoal extending from the shore into the sea; as, a spit of sand.

SPIIT, v. t. [from the noun.] To thrust a spit through; to put upon a spit; as, to spit a loin of veal.—2. To thrust through; to pierce.—3. To spade; to dig.

SPIIT, v. t. pret. and pp. Spit. Spit is obsolete, and also spitten. [Sax. spitan; G. spitzen. The sense is to throw or drive.] 1. To eject from the mouth; to thrust out, as saliva or other matter from the mouth.—2. To eject or throw out with violence.

SPIIT, v. i. To throw out saliva from the mouth. It is a dirty trick to spit on the floor or carpet.

SPIIT, n. [Dan. spyt.] What is ejected from the mouth; saliva.

SPIIT'AL, } † n. [corrupted from hospit'AL, } vital.] A charitable foundation; a place for the reception and entertainment of strangers; for the care of the poor and needy; and for the care and cure of the sick and diseased. [See HOSPITAL.]

SPIIT'AL-HOUSE, † n. An hospital.

SPIIT'BOX, n. A vessel to receive discharges of spittle.

SPIIT'COCK, v. t. To split an eel lengthwise and broil it.

SPIIT'COCK, n. An eel split and broiled.

SPIIT, n. [D. spyt, spite, vexation; Ir. spid. The Fr. has depit, Norm. despite. The It. dispetto, and Sp. despecho, seem to be from the L. despectus; but spite seems to be from a different root.] Hatred; rancour; malice; malignity; malevolence.—Spite, however, is not always synonymous with these words. It often denotes a less deliberate and fixed hatred than malice and malignity, and is often a sudden fit of ill will excited by temporary vexation. It is the effect of extreme irritation, and is accompanied with a desire of revenge, or at least a desire to vex the object of ill will.

Be gone, ye critics, and restrain your spite,
Codrus writes on, and will for ever write.

Pope.

In spite of, in opposition to all efforts; in defiance or contempt of. Sometimes spite of is used without in, but not elegantly. It is often used without expressing any malignity of meaning.

Whom God made use of to speak a word in season, and saved me in spite of the world, the devil, and myself.

South.

In spite of all applications, the patient grew worse every day.

Arbutnot.

To owe one a spite, to entertain a temporary hatred for something.

SPIIT, v. t. To be angry or vexed at. 2. To harm; to vex; to treat maliciously; to thwart.—3. To fill with spit or vexation; to offend; to vex.

Darius, spited at the Magi, endeavoured to abolish not only their learning but their language.†

Temple.

SPIITED, pp. Hated; vexed.

SPIIT'FUL, a. Filled with spit; having a desire to vex, annoy, or injure; malignant; malicious.

A wayward son,
Spit'ful and wrathful.

Shak.

SPIIT'FULLY, adv. With a desire to vex, annoy, or injure; malignantly; maliciously.

SPIIT'FULNESS, n. The desire to vex, annoy, or do mischief, proceeding from irritation; malice; malignity.

It looks more like spitefulness and ill nature, than a diligent search after truth.

Keil.

SPIIT'FIRE, n. A violent or passionate and vulgar person. [Familiar.]

SPIIT'-FULL, n. A spadeful.

SPIIT'-RACK, n. A rack to hang spits upon.

SPIIT'ED, pp. [from spit.] Put upon a spit.—2. Shot out into length.

angle with another; as, when the opening through a wall for a door, window, &c., widens inwards. A large chamfer is called a splay.

SPLÄY, a. Displayed; spread; turned outward.

SPLÄYED, pp. Dislocated, as a horse's shoulder-bone.—2. In arch., a term applied to whatever has one side or surface making an oblique angle with another. Thus the jambs or sides of a window are frequently splayed.

SPLAYFOOT, } a. Having the foot
SPLAYFOOTED, } turned outward; having a wide foot.

SPLAYMOUTH, n. A wide mouth; a mouth stretched by design.

SPLEEN, n. [L. spleen; Gr. σπλην.] 1. The milt; a spongy viscus situated in the left hypochondrium, near the fundus of the stomach, between the eleventh and twelfth false ribs. It has an oval figure. Its use is not known. The ancients supposed this to be the seat of melancholy, anger, or vexation, and sometimes of perverse mirth. Hence,—2. Anger; latent spite; ill humour. Thus we say to vent one's spleen.

In noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purged off, of spleen and sour disdain. Pope.

3. A fit of anger.—4. † A fit; a sudden motion.—5. Melancholy; hypochondriacal affections. A fashionable name for what was, in the time of Pope and Addison, also called vapours, and which is now by various phrases attributed to the nerves.
Bodies changed to recent forms by spleen.

Pope.
6. † Immoderate merriment.

SPLÉENED, a. Deprived of the spleen.
SPLÉENFUL, } a. Angry; peevish;
SPLÉENISH, } fretful.

SPLICE, v. t. [Sw. splissa; D. splissen; G. spleissen; Dan. splidser; from splider, splitter, to split, to divide.] To separate the strands of the two ends of a rope, and unite them by a particular manner of interweaving them; or to unite the person on board an extra glass of grog, in cases of cold, wet, &c.

SPLICE, n. The union of ropes by interweaving the strands.

SPLICED, pp. United, as a rope, by a particular manner of interweaving the two ends. In sailor phrase, to get spliced, is to get married. [The term is also used as a cant word by the vulgar.]

SPLICING, ppr. Separating the strands of two ends of a rope, and uniting them by interweaving.

SPLICING, n. The process of joining the ends of a rope together, or of uniting the end of a rope to any part thereof by interweaving the strands in a regular manner. The particular kind of splicing depends on the purpose which it is intended to serve. This term is also much used among various classes of artizans, as a general expression for joining or making good any defective work.

SPLINT, } n. [D. splinter; G. splint
SPLINTER, } or splitter; Dan. splint.
Qu. is a radical?]

1. A piece of wood split off; a thin piece (in proportion to its thickness,) of wood or other solid substance, rent from the main body; as, splinters of a ship's side or mast, rent off by a shot.—2. In sur., a thin piece of wood or other substance, used to hold or confine a broken bone when set, or to maintain any part of the body in a fixed position.—3. A piece of bone rent off in a fracture.—4. Splint; in vet. surg., a hard excrescence growing on the shank-bones of horses; sometimes written splent.

SPLINT, } v. t. To split or rend
SPLINTER, } into long thin pieces; to shiver; as, the lightning splinters a tree.—2. To confine with splinters, as a broken limb.

SPLINT'ARMOUR, n. A name given to that kind of armour which is made of several overlapping plates. The French named suits of mail of this kind ecrevisses, from their resemblance to the lobster. This kind of armour never came into very general use, Splint Armour.

because the convexity of the breast-plate would not allow the body to bend, unless the plates were made to overlap upwards, and this rendered them liable to be struck into, and drawn off by the martel-de-fer of an antagonist. Mention of splint armour first occurs about the reign of Henry VIII.

SPLINT'-BONE, n. A name for the fibula.

SPLINTER, v. i. To be split or rent into long pieces.

SPLINTER-BAR, n. A cross-bar in a coach which supports the springs.

SPLINTERED, pp. Split into splinters; secured by splints.

SPLINTERING, ppr. Splitting into splinters; securing by splints.

SPLINTER-NETTING, n. Rope-yarn made into nets and nailed upon the inner part of a ship's sides, to lessen the effect of the splinters knocked off by the shot in an engagement.

end of a rope to any part of another by a like interweaving of the strands. There are different modes of splicing, as the short splice, long splice, eye splice, &c.—To splice the main brace, in seamen's phrase, is to give each SPLINT'ERY, a. Consisting of splinters, or resembling splinters.—2. In mineral, a term applied to a particular fracture of minerals. The fracture is said to be splintery, when the surface produced by breaking a mineral is nearly even, but exhibits little splinters or scales, somewhat thicker at one extremity than the other, and still adhering to the surface by their thicker extremities.

SPLIT, v. t. pret. and pp. Split. [D. splitten; G. splittren or spleissen; Eth. falt, to separate, to divide, the same verb which in other Semitic languages, Heb. Ch. and Syr. פָּלַט, phalat, signifies to escape. See SPALT.] 1. To divide longitudinally or lengthwise; to separate a thing from end to end by force; to rive; to cleave; as, to split a piece of timber; to split a board. It differs from crack. To crack is to open or partially separate; to split is to separate entirely.—2. To rend; to tear asunder by violence; to burst; as, to split a rock or a sail.

Cold winter splits the rocks in twain.

Dryden.

3. To divide; to part; as, to split a hair. The phrases, to split the heart, to split a ray of light, are now inelegant and obsolete, especially the former. The phrase, to split the earth, is not strictly correct.—4. To dash and break on a rock; as, a ship stranded and split.—5. To divide; to break into discord; as, a people split into parties.—6. To strain and pain with laughter; as, to split the sides.—To split a vote. In parliamentary and municipal elections, when a voter divides his vote among the number of candidates to be elected, he is said to split his vote; on the other hand, when he gives his vote to one candidate only, he is said to pump his vote.—To split a sail, to rend it asunder.

SPLIT, v. i. To burst; to part asunder; to suffer disruption; as, vessels split by the freezing of water in them. Glass vessels often split when heated too suddenly.—2. To burst with laughter. Each had a gravity would make you split.

Pope.

3. To be broken; to be dashed to pieces. We were driven upon a rock, and the ship immediately split.—To split on a rock, to fail; to err fatally; to have the hopes and designs frustrated.—To split, in felons' English, is to inform against one's accomplices.

SPLIT-CLOTH, n. In sur., a bandage which consists of a central portion and six or eight tails. It is chiefly used for the head.

SPLIT'TER, n. One who splits.

SPLIT'TING, ppr. Bursting; riving; rending.

SPLIT'TING, n. The act of bursting, rending, or dividing.—Splitting of votes, in electioneering phrase, the act of dividing votes by the electors, among the number of candidates, when more than one are to be elected.

SPLORE, n. A frolic; a noise; a riot. [Scotch.]

SPLUT'TER, v. i. A bustle; a stir. [Familiar.]

SPLUT'TER, v. i. To speak hastily and confusedly. [Low.]

SPLUT'TERER, n. One who splutters.

SPODUMENE, n. [Gr. σποδωω, to reduce to ashes.] A mineral, hard, brittle, and translucent, called by Häüy triphane. It occurs in laminated masses, easily divisible into prisms with rhomboidal bases; the lateral faces smooth, shining and pearly; the cross fracture uneven and splintery. Before the blowpipe it exfoliates into little yellowish or grayish scales; whence its name. It is found at Uto in Sweden, in the Tyrol, in Ireland, and North America. It consists of silica and alumina, with 8 to 10 per cent. of lithia, and a little protoxide of iron.

SPOIL, v. t. [Fr. spolier; L. spolio; W. yspeliaw. The sense is probably to pull asunder, to tear, to strip; coinciding with L. vello, or with peel, or with both.] 1. To plunder; to strip by violence; to rob; with of; as to spoil one of his goods or possessions. My sons their old unhappy sire despise, Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes.

Pope.

2. To seize by violence; to take by force; as, to spoil one's goods.

This mount

With all his verdure spoil'd. Milton.

3. [Sax. spillan.] To corrupt; to cause to decay and perish. Heat and moisture will soon spoil vegetable and animal substances.—4. To corrupt; to vitiate; to mar.

Spiritual pride spoils many graces.

Taylor.

5. To ruin; to destroy. Our crops are sometimes spoiled by insects.—6. To render useless by injury; as, to spoil paper by wetting it.—7. To injure fatally; as, to spoil the eyes by reading.

SPOIL, v. i. To practise plunder or robbery.

Outlaws, which, lurking in woods, used to break forth to rob and spoil. Spenser.
2. To decay; to lose the valuable qualities; to be corrupted; as, fruit will soon spoil in warm weather. Grain will spoil, if gathered when wet or moist.

SPOIL, n. [L. spoliium.] 1. That which is taken from others by violence; particularly in war, the plunder taken from an enemy; pillage; booty.—2. That which is gained by strength or effort.

Each science and each art his spoil.

Bentley.

3. That which is taken from another without license.

Gentle gales

Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole

Their balmy spoils. Milton.

4. The act or practice of plundering; robbery; waste.

The man that hath not music in himself, Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,

Is fit for treason, stratagems, and spoils.

Shak.

5. Corruption; cause of corruption. Villanous company hath been the spoil of me.

Shak.

6. The slough or cast skin of a serpent or other animal.

SPOIL'ABLE, a. That may be spoiled.
SPOIL'BANK, or SPOIL, n. The surplus excavated material which is laid down by the side of a line of railway, canal, or other work, to save the expense of removal. This occurs in cases where the amount of cutting upon the line exceeds the amount of embanking.
SPOIL'ED, pp. Plundered; pillaged; corrupted; rendered useless.

SPOIL'ER, n. A plunderer; a pillager; a robber.—2. One that corrupts, mars, or renders useless.

SPOIL'FUL, a. Wasteful; rapacious. [Little used.]

SPOIL'ING, ppr. Plundering; pillaging; corrupting; rendering useless.—2. Wasting; decaying.

SPOIL'ING, n. Plunder; waste.—2. In mastmaking, the act of taking the greatest distance of the inequalities between any two pieces of timber to be fayed.

SPOKE, pret. of Speak.

SPOKE, n. [Sax. spuca; G. speiche. This word, whose radical sense is to shoot or thrust, coincides with spike, spigot, pike, and G. speien, contracted from speichen, to spew.] 1. The radius or ray of a wheel; one of the small bars which are inserted in the hub or nave, and which serve to support the rim or felly.

SPOKEN, pp. of Speak; pron spo'kn.

SPOKE-SHAVE, n. A sort of small plane used for dressing the spokes of wheels, and other curved work, where the common plane cannot be applied.

SPOKESMAN, n. [speak, spoke, and man.] One who speaks for another. He shall be thy spokesman to the people; Exod. iv.

SPO'LIA OPI'MA, n. plur. [L.] Spoil taken from an enemy; booty; any prey or pillage. [Used by English writers in a sportive or burlesque sense.]

SPO'LIATE, v. t. [L. spolio.] To plunder; to pillage.

SPO'LIATE, v. i. To practise plunder; to commit robbery. In time of war, rapacious men are let loose to spoliare on commerce.

SPO'LIATED, pp. Plundered; robbed.

SPO'LIATION, n. The act of plundering, particularly of plundering an enemy in time of war.—2. The act or practice of plundering neutrals at sea under authority.—3. In eccl'es. affairs, the act of an incumbent in taking the fruits of his benefice without right, but under a pretended title.—Writ of spoliation, a writ obtained by one of the parties to a suit in the ecclesiastical courts, suggesting that his adversary has wasted the fruits of a benefice, or received them to his prejudice.

SPO'LIATOR, n. One who commits spoliation.

SPO'LIATORY, a. Causing spoliation; destructive.

SPONDA'IC, } a. [See SPONDEE.]

SPONDA'ICAL, } Pertaining to a spondee; denoting two long feet in poetry.—Spondaic verse, an hexameter line in which the two last feet are spondees; instead of the usual termination, a dactyl and a spondee.

SPON'DEE, n. [Fr. spondée; L. spondaeus.] A poetic foot of two long syllables, used in Greek and Latin poetry.

SPON'DYL, } n. [L. spondylus; Gr. σπονδυλος.] A joint of the back bone; a vertebra.

SPON'DYLUS, n. A genus of rough, inequivalved marine bivalves, with unequal beaks; the hinge with two recurved teeth, separated by a small hollow. Spondyli are found only in the ocean, attached to rocks, corals, &c. They are remarkable for their spines, and the richness of colouring of the shells. The spring oysters, water-clam, &c., belong to this genus. It is made the type of a nat. family, Spondyliæ, of marine conchifers.

SPONGE, n. (spünj.) [L. spongia; Gr. σπογγια; Fr. eponge; It. spugna; Sp. esponja; Sax. spongea; D. spons.] 1. A porous marine substance, found adhering to rocks, shells, &c. under water, and on rocks about the shore at low water, particularly in the Mediterranean sea, about the islands of the Archipelago, and in the Red Sea. It was formerly supposed to be a vegetable production, but it is now generally classed among the zoophytes, and it consists of a fibrous reticulated substance, covered by a soft gelatinous matter, but in which no polypes have hitherto been observed. The only symptom of vitality is that the gelatinous matter appears to be susceptible of a slight contraction or trembling on being touched. [See SPONGIA.] Sponge is very soft, light, and porous, easily compressible, readily imbibing fluids, and thereby distending, and as readily giving them out again upon compression. Sponges assume a great variety of shapes, resembling shrubs, globes, tubes, fans, vases, &c. Sponge is used in surgery, and for a variety of purposes in the arts. The sponges of commerce are usually prepared before they come into the market, by being beaten and soaked in dilute muriatic acid, with a view to bleach them and dissolve any adherent portions of carbonate of lime. Three kinds are commonly sold, and known as the Turkey; the variety of the same which is very rare; and the West Indian. The finer sorts are brought from Nicaria, an island in the Mediterranean, and from Constantinople.—Burnt sponge, sponge burnt until it becomes black, when it is reduced to a fine powder. This preparation is administered with bark in the cure of scrofulous complaints, and forms the basis of a lozenge which has been known to cure the bronchocele. Burnt sponge is now superseded by iodine.—2. In gunnery, an instrument for cleaning cannon after a discharge. It consists of a cylinder of wood, covered with lamb skin. For small guns, it is commonly fixed to one end of the handle of the rammer.—3. In the manege, the extremity or point of a horse-shoe, answering to the heel.—Pyrotechnical sponge is made of mushrooms or fungi, growing on old oaks, ash, fir, &c., which are boiled in water, dried, and beaten, then put in a strong lye prepared with saltpetre, and again dried in an oven. This makes the black match or tinder brought from Germany. SPONGE, v. t. (spūnj.) To wipe with a wet sponge; as, to sponge a slate.—2. To wipe out with a sponge, as letters or writing.—3. To cleanse with a sponge; as, to sponge a cannon.—4. To wipe out completely; to extinguish or destroy. SPONGE, v. i. (spūnj.) To suck in or imbibe, as a sponge.—2. To gain by mean arts, by intrusion or hanging out; as, an idler who sponges on his neighbour. SPONGE-CAKE, n. A sweet cake: so called from its light make. SPONG'ED, pp. Wiped with a sponge; wiped out; extinguished. SPONGELET, n. A spongiote,—which see. SPONG'EOUS, a. Of the nature of sponge; full of small pores. SPONG'ER, n. One who uses a sponge; a hanger on. SPONGE TENT, n. In sur., a preparation of sponges. It is formed by dipping sponge into hot melted wax plaster, and pressing it till cold between two iron plates. It is then cut into pieces, and was formerly used for dilating wounds, fistulous cancers, &c. SPONG'IA, n. A genus of Zoophytes, belonging to the order Coralliferi, and family Corticati of Cuvier. The species yield the sponges of commerce. S. officinalis is the common sponge. The true nature of sponges, however, is doubtful, and some refer them to the vegetable kingdom.

SPONG'IFORM, a. [sponge and form.] Resembling a sponge; soft and porous; porous.—Spongiform quartz, float-stone,—which see.

SPONG'INESS, n. The quality or state of being spongy, or porous, like sponge. SPONG'ING-HOUSE, n. A bailiff's house to put debtors in.

SPONGIOLE, n. [See SPONGE.] In bot., spongiotes are the little spongy organs situated at the extremities of roots. It is by the spongiotes thus situated, that plants are enabled to absorb fluids. They are constructed of cellular spongy tissue, and they imbibe the fluids that are in contact with them, partly by capillary action, and partly by hyroscopic power. They are sometimes called spongelets.

SPONG'IOUS, or SPONG'EOUS, a. Full of small cavities, like a sponge; as, spongiuous bones.

SPONG'Y, a. Soft and full of cavities; of an open, loose, pliable texture; as, a spongy excrescence; spongy earth; spongy cake; the spongy substance of the lungs.—2. Full of small cavities; as, spongy bones.—3. Wet; drenched; soaked and soft, like sponge.—4. Having the quality of imbibing fluids.—Spongy stem, in bot., a stem internally composed of elastic cellular tissue.

SPONK, n. [a word probably formed on punk.] Touchwood. [See SPUNK.]

SPONS'AL, a. [L. sponsalis, from spondeo, to betroth.] Relating to marriage or to a spouse.

SPONS'ION, n. [L. sponsio, from spondeo, to engage.] The act of becoming surety for another. Sponsions, in international law, are acts and engagements made on behalf of states by agents not specially authorized. Such conventions must be confirmed by express or tacit ratification.

SPONS'OR, n. [L. supra.] A surety; one who binds himself to answer for another, and is responsible for his default. In the Roman Catholic, Greek, and Lutheran churches, in the Calvinistic churches on the Continent, and in the Church of England, the sponsors in baptism are sureties for the education of the child baptized. In the Presbyterian church baptism is administered without sponsors.

SPONSORIAL, a. Pertaining to a sponsor.

SPONSORSHIP, n. State of being a sponsor.

SPONTANEITY, n. [Fr. spontanité; L. sponte, of free will.] Voluntariness; the quality of being of free will or accord.

SPONTA'NEOUS, a. [L. spontaneus, from sponte, of free will.] 1. Voluntary; proceeding from one's own will, without other cause; applied to persons; as, a spontaneous gift or proposition.—2. Acting by its own impulse, energy, or natural law, without external force, as spontaneous motion; spontaneous growth; spontaneous combustion.—3. Produced without being planted, or without human labour; as, a spontaneous growth of wood.—Spontaneous combustion, a taking fire of itself. Thus, oiled canvas, oiled wool, and many other combustible substances, when suffered to remain for some time in a confined state, suddenly take fire, or undergo spontaneous combustion. [See COMBUSTION.]—Spontaneous rotation. [See ROTATION.]

SPONTA'NEOUSLY, adv. Voluntarily; of his own will or accord; used of animals; as, he acts spontaneously.—2. By its own force or energy; without the impulse of a foreign cause; used of things.

They turns spontaneously acid.

Arbutnot.

SPONTA'NEOUSNESS, n. Voluntariness; freedom of will; accord unconstrained; applied to animals.—2. Freedom of acting without a foreign cause; applied to things.

SPONTOON, n. [Fr. and Sp. esponzon; It. spontaneo.] A kind of half pike; a military weapon formerly borne by officers of infantry.

SPOOL, n. [G. spule; D. spoel; Dan. and Sw. spole.] A piece of cane or reed, or a hollow cylinder of wood with a ridge at each end; used by weavers to wind their yarn upon in order to slae it and wind it on the beam. The spool is larger than the quill on which yarn is wound for the shuttle. But in manufactories the word may be differently applied.

SPOOL, v. t. To wind on spools.

SPOOL'ED, pp. Wound on a spool.

SPOOL'ER, n. One who uses a spool.

SPOOL'ING, ppr. Winding on spools.

SPOOL-STAND, n. An article holding spools of fine thread, turning on pins, used by ladies at their work.

SPOOM, v. i. To be driven swiftly; probably a mistake for spoon. [See SPOON, the verb.]

SPOON, n. [Ir. spoonag.] 1. A small domestic utensil, with a bowl or concave part and a handle, used at table for taking up and conveying to the mouth liquids and liquid food; as, a tea-spoon; a table-spoon. Spoons, when made of silver or plated metal, are generally formed by stamping with dies, with more or less of ornamenting and finishing by hand. Spoons of Britannia metal, and similar fusible alloys, are formed by casting in brass moulds.

—Medical spoon, a spoon for administering liquid medicines to patients, especially to those in a recumbent position, and to such as are disposed to resist the taking of medicine. It has a hollow handle with a small aperture at the end, and when the bowl, which is covered, except a small opening at the end, is filled with the medicine, the thumb is placed on the aperture at the end of the handle, by which means the medicine is prevented from running out until the spoon is secured in the patient's mouth. On removing the thumb the medicine immediately flows out, and is swallowed with very little annoyance from its disagreeable taste.—2. An instrument, consisting of a bowl or hollow iron and a long handle, used for taking earth out of holes dug for setting posts.

SPOON,† v. i. To put before the wind in a gale.

SPOON-BILL, n. [spoon and bill.] A fowl of the grallie order, and genus Platalea, so named from the shape of its bill, which is somewhat like a spoon or spatula. The spoon-bills belong to the tribe of herons; they live in society in wooded marshes, generally not far from the mouths of rivers, and are rarely seen on the sea-shore. The white spoon-bill inhabits Europe generally; but as winter approaches it migrates to more southern regions, till the milder weather recalls it. The best known species are the common white spoon-bill, Platalea leucorodia, Linn.,

European Spoonbill (Platalea leucorodia).

and the roseate spoon-bill, P. ajaja; the latter is an inhabitant of Guiana, Mexico, &c.

SPRAICH, n. A cry; a shriek; the noise made by a child when weeping; the cry of a fowl.—To spraich, to cry; to shriek. [Scotch.]

SPRAIN, v. t. [probably Sw. spranga, to break or loosen; Dan. sprenger, to spring, to burst or crack; or from the same root.] To weaken the motive power of a part by sudden and excessive exertion; to overstrain the muscles or ligaments of a joint; to stretch the muscles or ligaments so as to injure them, but without luxation or dislocation.

SPRAIN, n. The weakening of the motive power of a part, by sudden and excessive exertion; an excessive strain of the muscles or ligaments of a joint, without dislocation. The ordinary consequence of a sprain, is to produce some degree of swelling and inflammation in the injured part. Hence it becomes necessary to apply leeches and cold lotions, or hot fomentations, as circumstances require, to remove the inflammation. When this is effected, stimulating liniments should be applied.

SPRAINED, pp. Injured by excessive straining.

SPRAINING, ppr. Injuring by excessive extension.

SPRANTS, n. The dang of an otter.

SPRANG, pret. of Spring; but sprung is more generally used.

SPRAT, n. [D. sprot; G. sprotte; Ir. sproth.] A small fish, the Clupea Sprattus. It is hardly distinguishable at first sight from the herring, but it is smaller and more slender. It is found in the North Atlantic and Mediterranean. It is also found on the British coasts, and in the Frith of Forth. It is generally considered as a delicious, well flavoured, and wholesome fish. It is also known by the name of Garvie herring.

SPRAT, n. In Scotland, the name given to a coarse reedy kind of grass, which grows on marshy ground. It is the Juncus articulatus of Smith, or sharp-flowered jointed-rush. It is used for fodder and for thatch.

Bacon.

3. A feast; a meal. [Familiar, and used in contempt.]

SPREAD EAGLE, n. In her., the same as an eagle displayed, or having the wings and legs extended on each side of the body.

Spread Eagle.

One that spreads, extends, expands, or propagates; as, a spreader of disease.—2. One that divulges; one that causes to be more generally known; a publisher; as, a spreader of news or reports.

SPREADING, ppr. Extending; expanding; propagating; divulging; dispersing; diffusing.—2. a. Extending or extended over a large space; wide; as, the spreading oak.—Spreading branches, in bot., those which come off at a right angle, or at an angle approaching to a right angle.—Spreading leaves, those which form a moderately acute angle with the stem.—Spreading stamens, those which spread out at right angles to the axis of the flower.

SPREADING, n. The act of extending, dispersing, or propagating.

SPREE, n. Innocent merriment; sport; a frolic; a drunken frolic; an uproar. [Scottch.]

SPRENT, † pp. Sprinkled. [See SPRINKLE.]

SPREW, n. [D. spreuw or spreuw, the disease called thrush.] In America, the name given to a disease of the mucous membrane, consisting in a specific inflammation of the muciparous glands, with an elevation of the epithelium in round, oval, or irregular, whitish or ash-coloured vesicles. It is confined to the mouth and alimentary canal, and terminates in curd-like sloughs.

SPRIG, n. [W. ysbrig; ys, a prefix, and brig, top, summit; that is, a shoot, or shooting to a point.] 1. A small shoot or twig of a tree or other plant; a spray; as, a sprig of laurel or of parsley.—2. A brad or nail without a head. [Local.].—3. The representation of a small branch in embroidery.

—4. An offshoot; a relative; as, a sprig of nobility. [Used contemptuously.]

SPRIG, v. t. To mark or adorn with the representation of small branches; to work with sprigs; as, to sprig muslin.

SPRIG-BOLT, n. See RAG-BOLT.

SPRIG'-CRYSTAL, n. Crystal found in the form of a hexangular column, adhering to the stone, and terminating at the other end in a point.

SPRIG'GED, pp. Wrought with representations of small twigs.

SPRIG'GING, ppr. Working with sprigs.

SPRIG'GY, a. Full of sprigs or small branches.

SPRIGHT, } n. [G. spriet, spirit. It } should be written Sprite.]

SPRITE, } 1. A spirit; a shade; a soul; an incorporeal agent.

Forth he call'd, out of deep darkness dread,
Legions of sprights, Spenser.
And gaping graves receiv'd the guilty spright. Dryden.

2. A walking spirit; an apparition.—3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.

Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights. [Not in use.] Sidney.

4. † An arrow.

SPRIGHT, † v. t. To haunt, as a spright.
SPRIGHTFUL, a. [This word seems to be formed on the root of sprag, a local word. It belongs to the family of spring and sprig.] Lively; brisk; nimble; vigorous; gay.

Spoke like a sprightful noble gentleman.

Shak.

Steeds sprightful as the light.

Cowley.

SPRIGHTFULLY, adv. Briskly; vigorously.

SPRIGHTFULNESS, n. Briskness; liveliness; vivacity.

SPRIGHTLESS, a. Destitute of life; dull; sluggish; as, virtue's sprightless cold.

SPRIGHTLINESS, n. [from sprightly.] Liveliness; life; briskness; vigour; activity; gayety; vivacity.

In dreams, with what sprightliness and alacrity does the soul exert herself!

Addison.

SPRIGHTLY, a. Lively; brisk; animated; vigorous; airy; gay; as, a sprightly youth; a sprightly air; a sprightly dance.

The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green.

Pope.

And sprightly wit and love inspires.

Dryden.

SPRING, v. i. pret. Sprung, [sprung, not wholly obsolete;] pp. Sprung.

[Sax. springan; D. and G. springen. The primary sense is to leap, to shoot.] 1. To vegetate and rise out of the ground; to begin to appear; as vegetables.

To satisfy the desolate ground and cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth; Job xxxviii.

In this sense, spring is often or usually followed by up, forth, or out.—2. To begin to grow.

The teeth of the young not sprung. Riv.

3. To proceed, as from the seed or cause.

Much more good of sin shall spring. Milton.

4. To arise; to appear; to begin to appear or exist.

When the day began to spring, they let her go; Judges xxi.

Do not blast my springing hopes. Rowe.

5. To break forth; to issue into sight or notice.

O spring to light; auspicious babe, be born.

Pope.

6. To issue or proceed, as from ancestors or from a country. Aaron and Moses sprung from Levi.—7. To proceed, as from a cause, reason, principle, or other original. The noblest title springs from virtue.

They found new hope to spring out of despair.

Milton.

8. To grow; to thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,

At whose command we perish and we spring.

Dryden.

9. To proceed or issue, as from a fountain or source. Water springs from reservoirs in the earth. Rivers spring from lakes or ponds.—10. To leap; to bound; to jump.

The mountain stag that springs from height to height, and bounds along the plains.

Philips.

11. To fly back; to start; as, a bow, when bent, springs back by its elastic power.—12. To start or rise suddenly from a covert.

Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring.

Otway.

13. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.

And sudden light Spring through the vaulted roof.

Dryden.

To spring at, to leap toward; to attempt to reach by a leap.—To spring in, to rush in; to enter with a leap or in haste.—To spring forth, to leap out; to rush out.—To spring on or upon, to leap on; to rush on with haste or violence; to assault.

SPRING, v. t. To start or rouse, as game; to cause to rise from the earth or from a covert; as, to spring a pheasant.—2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.

The nurse, surprised with fright,
Starts-up and leaves her bed, and springs a light.

Dryden.

3. To start; to contrive, or to produce, or propose on a sudden; to produce unexpectedly.

The friends to the cause sprang a new project.

Swift.

In this sense start is now generally used.—4. To cause to explode; as, to spring a mine.—5. To burst; to cause to open; as, to spring a leak. When it is said, a vessel has sprung a leak, the meaning is, the leak has then commenced.—6. To crack; as, to spring a mast or a yard.—7. To cause to close suddenly, as the parts of a trap; as, to spring a trap.—To spring a butt, in seamen's lan., to loosen the end of a plank in a ship's bottom.—To spring a leak, to commence leaking; to begin to leak.—To spring the luff, when a vessel yields to the helm, and sails nearer to the wind than before.—To spring a fence, to leap a fence.—To spring an arch, to set off, begin, or commence an arch from an abutment or pier.—To spring a rattle, to give the alarm, as is done by a night policeman, or watchman.

SPRING, n. A leap; a bound; a violent effort; a sudden struggle; a jump; as of an animal.

The pris'ner with a spring from prison broke. Dryden.

2. A flying back; the resilience of a body recovering its former state by its elasticity; as, the spring of a bow.—3. Elastic power or force. The soul or the mind requires relaxation, that it may recover its natural spring.

Heav'n! what a spring was in his arm. Dryden.

4. In mech., an elastic plate, rod, or wire of steel or other substance, which, when bent or forced from its natural state, has the power of recovering it again in virtue of its elasticity. Springs are employed as moving powers, as the main-spring of a watch; as regulators of the motions of wheel-work, as in watches; also to ascertain the weights of bodies, to diminish the effects of concussion, as in wheel-carriages, and for various other purposes. The spring is not only a very useful auxiliary, but an indispensable requisite in many pieces of mechanism.—5. Any active power; that by which action or motion is produced or propagated.

Like nature letting down the springs of life. Dryden.

Our author shuns by vulgar springs to move

The hero's glory. Pope.

6. A fountain of water; an issue of water from the earth, or the basin of water at the place of its issue. The rain which falls from the atmosphere is absorbed in three different ways. One part of it collects in rills on the surface of the ground; these unite in streams or rivulets, which, flowing into one another, form rivers, and thus it is conveyed to the ocean. A second part is taken up in giving humidity to the soil, from which it is returned to the atmosphere by evaporation. A third portion descends into the earth through soils of a spongy or porous nature, or through crevices and interstices in the strata, but being obstructed by other strata, forms subterraneous reservoirs, at various depths. When confined in this manner, it is subject to the pressure of the water which fills the channels through which it has descended, and when this pressure is sufficient to overcome the resistance of the superincumbent mass of earth, the water breaks through the superficial strata, and gushes forth in a spring. In descending downwards, and rising upwards through various mineral masses, the water of springs becomes impregnated with gaseous, saline, earthy, or metallic admixtures, as carbonic acid gas, sulphuretted hydrogen gas, nitrogen, muriate of soda, sulphate of lime, carbonate of lime, silica, carbonate of iron, &c. Warm and hot springs are common, especially in volcanic countries, where they are sometimes distinguished by violent ebullitions. Springs are most common on the sides and at the bottoms of mountains, as the copious rains which fall on the mountains, descending through the crevices and fissures, easily find a passage out at the bottom. As a general rule, springs are permanent in proportion to the depth to which the water which supplies them has descended from the surface. The temperature of deep seated springs is generally the same with the mean temperature of the atmosphere. Some springs run for a time and then stop altogether, and after a time, run again, and again stop; these are called intermitting springs. [See under INTERMITTING.] Others do not cease to flow, but only discharge a much smaller quantity of water for a certain time, and then give out a greater quantity; these are called variable or reciprocating springs. Lakes and ponds are usually fed by springs.—7. The place where water usually issues from the earth, though no water is there. Thus we say, a spring is dry.—8. A source; that from which supplies are drawn. The real Christian has in his own breast a perpetual and inexhaustible spring of joy.

9. Rise; original; as, the spring of the day; 1 Sam. ix.—10. Cause; original. The springs of great events are often concealed from common observation.

—11. In astron., one of the four seasons of the year; the season in which plants begin to vegetate and rise; the vernal season. For the northern hemisphere, the spring season commences when the sun enters Aries, or about the 21st of March, and ends at the time of the summer solstice, or about the 22d of June. In common lan., spring commences in February and ends in April.—12. In seamen's lan., a crack in a mast or yard, running obliquely or transversely. [In this sense of leak, we believe, it is not used.]

—13. A rope passed out of a ship's stern, and attached to a cable proceeding from her bow, when she is at anchor. It is intended to bring her broadside to bear upon some object. A spring is also a rope extending diagonally from the stern of one ship to the head of another, to make one ship sheer off to a greater distance.—14. † A plant; a shoot; a young tree.—15. † A youth. 16. † A hand; a shoulder of pork.—

Spring bevel of a rail, in arch., the angle which the top of the plank makes with a vertical plane which has its termination in the concave side, and touches the ends of the rail-piece.

SPRING, n. A quick and cheerful tune on a musical instrument. [Scotch.] SPRING'AL, † n. A youth.

SPRING'ALD, n. An ancient warlike engine, used for shooting large arrows, pieces of iron, &c. It is supposed to have resembled the cross-bow in its construction. The word is evidently derived from Fr. espringalle, an ancient war engine for throwing stones, great arrows, &c.

SPRING'-BACK, n. In book-binding, the cover of a book which is not made fast to the back, but which springs back when the book is opened.

SPRING'-BALANCE, n. A contrivance for determining the weight of any article by observing the amount of deflection or compression which it produces upon a helical steel spring properly adjusted and fitted with an index working against a graduated scale. The spring-balance is much used for regulating the pressure upon the safety-valves of locomotive engines, as on account of the jolts and oscillations to which they are liable, weights are altogether inapplicable.

SPRING'-BOK, n. [D. spring and boh, a buck or he goat.] A ruminant mammal of the caprid tribe, the Antelope euchore, or Springer Antelope, which inhabits the plains of South Africa.

Spring-bok (Antelope euchore).

SPRING'-BOX, n. The box which contains the main-spring of a watch. The axis about which the spring is wound is called the spring-arbor.

SPRING'-CAR'RIAGE, n. A wheel carriage mounted upon springs. The chief use of springs in carriages is to diminish the effects of concussions arising from the motion of the wheels over prominences and inequalities on the surface of roads.

SPRING'E, n. (spring.) [from spring.] A gin; a noose of horse-hair or fine wire to catch birds, rabbits, game, &c.

SPRING'E, v. t. To catch in a springe; to ensnare.

SPRING'ER, n. One who springs; one that rouses game.—2. A name given to the grampus.—3. In arch., the impost or place where the vertical support to an arch terminates, and the curve of the arch begins. The term is sometimes applied to the rib of a groined roof or vault. [See IMPOST.]

SPRING'-FEED, n. In agriculture, herbage produced in the spring.

SPRING'-GRASS, n. A British grass, of the genus Anthoxanthum, the A. odoratum, which grows in pastures and meadows. It is one of the most early grasses, flowering early in April; hence the name. The sweet scent of new-made hay is in a great measure owing to this plant. It is one of the sweetest as well as one of the most useful of our pasture grasses.

SPRING'-GUN, n. A gun which is discharged by means of a spring attached to the lock. Spring guns may be set in dwelling-houses at night to ward off the attacks of robbers, &c., but it is illegal to set them anywhere else.

SPRING'-HALT, n. [spring and halt.] A kind of lameness in which a horse suddenly latches up his legs.

SPRING'-HEAD, n. A fountain or source; an originating source where several springs unite to form a stream.

SPRING'INESS, n. Elasticity; also, the power of springing.—2. The state of abounding with springs; wetness; sponginess; as of land.

SPRING'ING, ppr. Arising; shooting up; leaping; proceeding; rousing. In her., a term applicable to beasts of chase in the same sense as salient to beasts of prey. It is also applied to fish when placed in bend.—Springing use, in law, a contingent use; a use which may arise upon a contingency.

SPRING'ING, n. The act or process of leaping, arising, issuing, or proceeding.—2. Growth; increase; Ps. lxx.—3. In arch., the point from which an arch springs or rises.—Springing course, the horizontal course of stones from which an arch springs or rises.—In carpentry, in boarding a roof, the setting the boards together with bevel joints for the purpose of keeping out the rain.

SPRING' LATCH, n. A latch with a spring for fastening a gate.

SPRING'GLE,† n. A springe; a noose.

SPRING'-RYE, n. Rye that is sown in the spring.

SPRING'-TIDE, n. [spring and tide.] The tide which happens at or soon after the new and full moon, which rises higher than common tides. At these times the sun and moon are in a straight line with the earth, and their combined influence in raising the waters of the ocean is the greatest; consequently, the tides thus produced are the highest. [See TIDE.]

SPRING'-TIME, n. The spring.

SPRING'-WATER, n. Water issuing from a natural source; in contradistinction to river water, rain water, &c.

SPRING'-WHEAT, n. [spring and wheat.] A species of wheat to be sown in the spring; so called in distinction from winter wheat.

SPRING'Y, a. [from spring.] Elastic; possessing the power of recovering itself when bent or twisted.—2. Having great elastic power.—3. Having the power to leap; able to leap far.—4. Abounding with springs or fountains; wet; spongy; as, springy land.

SPRINK'LE, v. t. [Sax. sprengan; D. sprengelen, sprengen; G. sprengen; Ir. spreighim. The L. spargo may be the same word with the letters transposed, n being casual.] 1. To scatter; to disperse; as a liquid or a dry substance composed of fine separable particles; as, Moses sprinkled handfuls of ashes toward heaven; Ex. ix.—2. To scatter on; to disperse on in small drops or particles; to wet or besprinkle; as, to sprinkle the earth with water; to sprinkle a floor with sand; to sprinkle paper with iron filings.—3. To wash; to cleanse; to purify.

Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience; Heb. x.

SPRINK'LE, v. i. To perform the act of scattering a liquid or any fine substance, so that it may fall in small particles.

The priest shall sprinkle of the oil with his fingers; Lev. xiv.

Baptism may well enough be performed by sprinkling or effusion of water. Ayiffe.

2. To rain moderately; as, it sprinkles.

SPRINK'LE, n. A small quantity scattered; also, an utensil for sprinkling.

SPRINK'LED, pp. Dispersed in small particles, as a liquid or as dust.—2. Having a liquid or a fine substance scattered over.

aftermost corner, which it is used to extend and elevate. The lower end of the sprit rests in a sort of wreath, called the snotter, which encircles the mast at that place.

SPRITE, n. [If from G. spriet, this is the more correct orthography. The Welsh has sprid, a spirit.] A spirit.

SPRITEFUL. See SPRITFUL.

SPRITEFULLY. See SPRITFULLY.

SPRITELINESS. See SPRITLINESS.

SPRITELY. See SPRITLY.

SPRIT'-SAIL, n. [sprit and sail.] The sail extended by a sprit, chiefly used in small boats.—2. A sail, now disused, attached to a yard which hangs under the bowsprit of large vessels. It is furnished with a large hole at each of Spritsails.

a, Spritsail; b, Spritsail topsail; c, Spritsail top-gallant sail.

its lower corners, to evacuate the water with which the cavity or belly of it is frequently filled by the surges of the sea, when the ship pitches.—Sprit-sail, topsails, and sprit-sail top-gallant sails were also formerly used, but not now.

SPROD, n. A salmon in its second year.

SPRONG,† old pret. of Spring. [Dutch.]

SPROUT, v. i. [D. spruiten; G. sprossen; Sax. spryttan; Sp. brotar, the same word without s. See SPRIT.] 1. To shoot, as the seed of a plant; to germinate; to push out new shoots.

A grain that sprouts in ordinary temperature in ten days, may, by an augmentation of heat, be made to sprout in forty-eight hours. The stumps of trees often sprout, and produce a new forest.

—2. To shoot into ramifications.

Vitriol is apt to sprout with moisture.

Bucon.

3. To grow, like shoots of plants. And on the ashes sprouting plumes appear. Ticked.

SPRUCE, v. i. To dress one's self with affected neatness.

SPRUCE, or SPRUCE FIR, n. The name given to several species of trees of the genus Abies. The Norway spruce fir is the A. excelsa, or Pinus abies, Norway Spruce (Abies excelsa).

Linn., which yields the valuable timber known under the name of white or Christiania deal. The white spruce is the A. alba, which grows in the colder regions of North America. The black or red spruce fir is the A. nigra, which is a native of the most inclement regions of North America, and attains the height of 70 or 80 feet, with a diameter of from 15 to 20 inches. Its timber is of great value on account of its strength, lightness, and elasticity. It is employed for the yards of ships, and from the young branches is extracted the essence of spruce, so well known as a useful antiscorbutic in long voyages. The red spruce is thought by some to be a distinct species (A. rubra), but the researches of Michaux show that it is merely a variety of the black spruce. The hemlock spruce fir is the A. canadensis, a noble species, rising to the height of 70 or 80 feet, and measuring from 2 to 3 feet in diameter. It grows abundantly near Quebec, in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Vermont, and the upper parts of New Hampshire. The wood is employed for laths, and for coarse in-door work. The bark is exceedingly valuable for tanning.

SPRUCE-BEER, n. A fermented liquor made from the leaves and small branches of the spruce fir (Abies excelsa, Abies nigra, or red spruce), with sugar, molasses, or treacle. There are two kinds, the brown and the white, of which the latter is considered the best, as being made from white sugar instead of molasses. Spruce beer forms an agreeable and wholesome beverage, and is useful as an antiscorbutic.

SPRÜCE LEATHER, n. A corruption of Prussian leather.

SPRÜCELY, adv. With extreme or affected neatness.

SPRÜCENESS, n. Neatness without taste or elegance; trimness; fineness; quaintness.

SQUABBLER, n. A contentious person; a brawler.

SQUABBLING, ppr. Scuffling; contending; wrangling.

SQUAB'PIE, n. [squab and pie.] A pie made of squabs or young pigeons.

SQUAC'CO, n. A species of heron.

SQUAD, n. [Fr. escouade.] 1. In a military sense, a division of a company. Companies are generally divided into three or four squads, each having a serjeant and corporal.—2. Any small party; a set of people. [Colloq.]

SQUADRON, n. [Fr. escadron; It. squadra, a squadron, a square; from L. quadratus, square; quadro, to square; allied to quatuor, four.] 1. In its primary sense, a square or square form; and hence, a square body of troops; a body drawn up in a square. So Milton has used the word.

Those half rounding guards Just met, and closing stood in squadron joint'd.

[This sense is probably obsolete, unless in poetry.]—2. The principal division of a regiment of cavalry. The number forming a squadron has varied at different times, but at present it consists of 160 men, of whom about one-sixth are not under arms. A squadron is divided into two troops, each of which is commanded by its captain, who has under him a lieutenant, and a cornet. Each regiment of cavalry consists of three or four squadrons.—3. A division of a fleet; a detachment of ships of war, employed on a particular expedition; or one third part of a naval armament.

SQUADRONED, a. Formed into squadrons or squares.

SQUALID, a. [L. squalidus, from squalo, to be foul. Qu. W. qual, vile.] Foul; filthy; extremely dirty.

Uncomb'd his locks, and squalid his attire. Dryden.

SQUALIDÆ, n. A family of chondropterygious fishes, which includes the various species of sharks. The type of this family is the genus squalus, Linn., or true sharks. [See SHARK.]

SQUALIDITY, } n. Foulness; filthy-

SQUALIDNESS, } ness.

SQUALIDLY, adv. In a squalid, filthy manner.

Spur-Wheel.

SQUALL, v. i. [Sw. sqvåla; Dan. squadrer, to prate. These words are probably of one family; but squall, like squal, is probably from the root of Sax. gyllan, to creak, or Heb. לָקַח, hol, D. gillen, to yell; or is formed from wail.] To cry out; to scream or cry violently; as a woman frightened, or a child in anger or distress; as, the infant squalled.

SQUALL, n. A loud scream; a harsh cry.—2. [Sw. sqval.] The sea term for a gust of wind; or for a short temporary increase in the force of the wind.—A black squall, one attended with a dark cloud, diminishing the usual quantity of light.—A white squall, one which produces no diminution of light.—A thick squall, one accompanied with hail, sleet, &c.

SQUALLER, n. A screamer; one that cries loud.

SQUALLING, ppr. Crying out harshly; screaming.

SQUALLY, a. Abounding with squalls; disturbed often with sudden and violent gusts of wind; as, squally weather.

SQUALOID, a. [L. squalus, a shark, and Gr. ὄδωρ, likeness.] Like a shark, or resembling a shark. The squaloid division of fossil fishes, or those which resemble sharks, are found in the tertiary strata.

SQUALOR, n. [L.] Foulness; filthiness; coarseness.

SQUALUS, n. The name given by Linn., to the genus of fishes, commonly called sharks, as the white shark, the basking shark, spotted shark, &c. [See SHARK.]

SQUAMA, n. plur. Squamæ. [L. a scale.] In bot., the bractæe of an amentum or catkin. The term is applied to parts which are arranged upon a plant, in the same manner as the scales of fishes and other animals; as the undeveloped external leaves of the buds of most plants.—2. In anat., an opaque and thickened lamina of the cuticle.

SQUAMIFORM, a. [L. squamæ, a scale, and form.] Having the form or shape of scales.

SQUAMIGEROUS, a. [L. squamiger; squamæ, a scale, and gero, to bear.] Bearing or having scales.

SQUAMPENNES, n. [L. squamæ, a scale, and penna, a wing or fin.] A family of acanthopterygious fishes, so named on account of their fins being covered with scales, not only on the parts which have soft rays, but frequently also on those that have spinous ones. They were all included by Linnæus in the genus Chætodon. They are chiefly small fishes, abundant in the seas of hot climates, and of the most beautiful colours. They frequent rocky shores, and their flesh is, generally speaking, very wholesome and palatable.

SQUAMOUS, or SQUAMOSE, a. [L. squamosus.] Scaly; covered with scales; as, the squamous cones of the pine. Squamous bulb, a bulb in which the outer scales are distinct, fleshy, and imbricated, like the inner scales; as, in the white and orange lilies.—Squamous bones, in anat., the bones of the skull behind the ear, so called because they lie over each other like scales.—Squamous suture, the suture which connects the squamous portion of the temporal bone with the parietal.

SQUAMULÆ, n. [L. diminutive of squamæ.] In bot., the minute scales in the flower of a grass.

SQUANDER, v. t. [G. verschwenden, probably from wenden, to turn.] 1. To spend lavishly or profusely; to spend prodigally; to dissipate; to waste without economy or judgment; as, to squander an estate.

The crime of squandering health is equal to the folly. Savage.
2. To scatter; to disperse. Rambler.

Our squandered troops he rallies. Dryden.
[In this application not now used.]

SQUANDERED, pp. Spent lavishly and without necessity or use; wasted; dissipated, as property.

SQUANDERER, n. One who spends his money prodigally, without necessity or use; a spendthrift; a prodigal; a waster; a lavisher.

SQUANDERING, ppr. Spending lavishly; wasting.

SQUANDERINGLY, adv. By squandering.

SQUARE, a. [W. cwâr; Fr. carré, quarré; perhaps Gr. εἰς, contracted from εὐαῖον. This is probably not a contraction of L. quadratus.] 1. Having four equal sides and four right angles; as, a square room; a square figure.—

2. Forming a right angle; as, an instrument for striking lines square.—3. Parallel; exactly suitable; true.

She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her. [Unusual.] Shak.

4. Having a straight front; or a frame formed with straight lines; not curving; as, a man of a square frame; a square built man.—5. That does equal justice; exact; fair; honest; as, square dealing.—6. Even; leaving no balance.

Let us make or leave the accounts square.—Three square, five square, having three or five equal sides, &c.; an abusive use of square.—Square measures, the squares of lineal measures, as a square inch; a square foot, a square yard, &c.—Square number, the product of a number multiplied into itself. Thus the squares of the natural numbers, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c. are respectively, 1, 4, 9, 16, 25, &c.—Square root. In arith. and alge., the square root of a number or quantity, is that which being multiplied into itself produces the given number or quantity. Thus 8 is the square root of 64, for $8 \times 8 = 64$; $\frac{2}{3}$ is the square root of $\frac{4}{9}$, for $\frac{2}{3} \times \frac{2}{3} = \frac{4}{9}$.

Also x^2 is the square root of x^4 , for $x^2 \times x^2 = x^4$; $a + x$ is the square root of $a^2 + 2ax + x^2$, for $(a + x) \times (a + x) = a^2 + 2ax + x^2$. When a given number or quantity is not an exact square, its square root can only be found by approximation. Thus the square root of 2 is 1.41421, &c.—In seamen's language, the yards are square, when they are arranged at right angles with the mast or the keel. When the yards hang at right angles to the masts, they are said to be square by the lifts; when they hang perpendicularly to the ship's length, they are said to be square by the braces; but when they lie in a direction perpendicular to the plane of the keel, they are said to be square by the lifts and braces. The yards are said to be very square, when they are of extraordinary length, and the same epithet is then applied to their sails with respect to their breadth.

Square shoot, in arch., a wooden trough for discharging water from a building. Square staff, a piece of wood placed at the external angle of a projection in a room to secure the angle, which if of plaster, would be liable to be broken, and at the same time to allow a good finish for the papering.—Square stem, in bot., a stem with four sides, as in peppermint.

SQUARE, n. In geom., a four-sided plane rectilinear figure, having all its sides equal, and all its angles right angles.—2. In arch., a mass of buildings in the form of a square, or the area enclosed by them.—3. The content of the side of a figure squared.—4. Among carpenters, joiners, &c., an instrument consisting of two rules or branches fastened perpendicularly at one end of their extremities so as to form a right angle. It is used for measuring and describing right angles and perpendiculars, and also for trying up wood. When one ruler joins the other in the middle in the form of a T, it is called a T square.—5. In arith. and alge., the number or quantity produced by multiplying a number or quantity by itself. Thus 64 is the square of 8, for $8 \times 8 = 64$.—6. Rule; regularity; exact proportion; justness of workmanship and conduct.

They of Galatia much more out of square.

Hooker.

I have not kept my square. [Not in use.]

Shak.

7. In military tactics, a body of infantry formed into a square. This is done on critical occasions, particularly to resist the charge of cavalry. The square is either solid, hollow, or oblong.—8. † A quaternion; four.—9. Level; equality. We live not on the square with such as these. Dryden.

10. † In astrol., quartile; the position of planets distant ninety degrees from each other.—11. Rule; conformity; accord. I shall break no squares with another for a trifle.—Geometrical square, a quadrant,—which see.—Magic square. [See MAGIC.]—Square of an anchor, the upper part of the shank of an anchor.—Square of flooring, a measure of 100 superficial feet.—Squares go. Let us see how the squares go, that is, how the game proceeds; a phrase taken from the game of chess, the chess board being formed with squares.

SQUARE, v. t. [Fr. quarrir and carrer.]

1. To form with four equal sides and four right angles.—2. To reduce to a square; to form to right angles; as, to square masons' or carpenters' work.—3. To reduce to any given measure or standard.—4. To adjust; to regulate; to mould; to shape; as, to square our actions by the opinions of others; to square our lives by the precepts of the gospel.—5. To accommodate; to fit; as, square my trial to my strength.—6. To respect in quartile.—7. To make even, so as to leave no difference or balance; as, to square accounts; a popular phrase.—8. In arith., to multiply a number by itself; as, to square the number.—9. In seamen's language, to square the yards, is to place them at right angles with the mast or keel.

SQUARE, v. i. To suit; to fit; to quadrate; to accord or agree. His opinions do not square with the doctrines of philosophers.—2. To quarrel; to go to opposite sides; to take an attitude of offence or defence.

Are you such fools

To square for this? Shak.

3. To take the attitudes of a boxer.

SQUARED, pp. or a. Made in the form of a square, or with right angles; adjusted; regulated; multiplied by itself.

SQUAREFRAMED. In joinery, a work is said to be square framed, or framed square, when the framing has all the angles of its styles, rails, and mountings square without being moulded.

SQUARELY. adv. In a square form.

SQUARENESS. n. The state of being square; as, an instrument to try the squareness of work.

SQUARER. † n. A hot headed contentious fellow.

Is there no young squarer now. Shak.

2. One who squares his elbows for fighting; a sparrer. [Scotch.]

SQUARE-RIGGED. a. In seamen's language, a vessel is square-rigged when her principal sails are extended by yards suspended by the middle, and not by stays, gaffs, booms, and lateen yards. Thus a ship and a brig are square-rigged vessels.

SQUARE-SAIL. n. Any sail extended to a yard suspended by the middle, and hanging parallel to the horizon, as distinguished from other sails which are extended obliquely. Square-sail, is also the name of a sloop's or cutter's sail, which hauls out to the lower yard, called the square-sail-yard, square-sail-boom, a boom lashed across the deck of a vessel with one mast, and used to spread the foot of the square sail.

SQUARING. n. The act of forming a square; the act of reducing to a square or forming to right angles; the act of adjusting, regulating, &c.—Squaring a handrail, in arch., the method of cutting a plank for a rail to a staircase, so that all the vertical sections may be rectangular.—Squaring a piece of stuff, the act of trying by the square in order to make the angles right angles.—Squaring the circle. [See QUADRATURE.]

SQUARING. ppr. or n. Making in the form of a square, or with right angles; adjusting; regulating; multiplying by itself.

SQUARROUS. a. [Qu. Gr. σκαρρος, SQUARROSE,] scurf.] In bot., ragged, or full of loose scales; rough; jagged. A squarrous calyx consists of scales very widely divaricating; a squarrous leaf is divided into shreds or jags, raised above the plane of the leaf, and not parallel to it.—2. In conchology, consisting of scales spreading every way, or standing upright, or at right angles to the surface.

SQUASH. v. t. [from the root of quash, L. quasso, Fr. casser.] To crush; to beat or press into pulp or a flat mass.

SQUASH. n. Something soft and easily crushed.—2. [Qu. Gr. κισσοειδής.] A plant of the genus Cucurbita, the C. melopepo, and its fruit; cultivated in America as an article of food. [See GOURD.]
3. Something unripe or soft; in contempt.

This squash, this gentleman. Shak.

4. A sudden fall of a heavy soft body.
5. A shock of soft bodies.

My fall was stopp'd by a terrible squash.

[Vulgar.] Swift.

SQUASHY. adv. Like a squash; also muddly.

SQUAT. v. i. [W. yswatiaw, from yswad, a falling or throw; It. quatto, squat, close; quattare, to squat, to cower, to lurk. It may perhaps be allied to It. quattare, to watch, Fr. quetter, to wait, to watch.] 1. To sit down upon the hams or heels; as a human being.—2. To sit close to the ground; to cower; as an animal.—3. In the United States, to settle on another's land without pretence of title; a practice very common in the wilderness.—4. To stoop or lie close to escape observation, as a partridge or rabbit.

SQUAT. † v. t. To bruise or make flat by a fall.

SQUAT. a. Sitting on the hams or heels; sitting close to the ground; cowering.

Him there they found,

Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve. Milton.

SQUATTER. n. One that squats or sits close.—2. In America, one that settles on new land without a title.

SQUAW. n. Among some tribes of American Indians, a female or wife.

SQUEAK. v. i. [Sw. sqvika, to cry like a frog; G. quieken; W. gwiçian, to squeak. This word probably belongs to the family of quack.] 1. To utter a sharp, shrill cry, usually of short duration; to cry with an acute tone, as an animal; or to make a sharp noise, as a pipe or reed, a wheel, a door and the like. Wheels squeak only when the axle-tree is dry.

Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans squeaking through the mouth of an eunuch? Addison.

Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Homer. Pope.

2. To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain; to speak.

SQUEAK. n. A sharp shrill sound suddenly uttered, either of the human voice or of any animal or instrument, such as a child utters in acute pain, or as pigs utter, or as is made by carriage wheels when dry, or by a pipe or reed.

SQUEAKER. n. One that utters a sharp shrill sound.—2. A pigeon under six months of age.

SQUEAKING. ppr. Crying with a sharp voice; making a sharp sound; as, a squeaking wheel.

SQUEAL. v. i. [This is only a different orthography of squall; Ir. sgal, a squealing. See SQUALL.] To cry with a sharp shrill voice. It is used of animals only, and chiefly of swine. It agrees in sense with squeak, except that squeal denotes a more continued cry than squeak, which is not limited to animals. We say, a squealing hog or pig, a squealing child; but more generally a squalling child.

SQUEALING. ppr. Uttering a sharp, shrill sound or voice; as, a squealing pig.

SQUEAMISH. a. [probably from the root of wamble.] Literally, having a stomach that is easily turned, or that readily nauseates any thing; hence, nice to excess in taste; fastidious; easily disgusted; apt to be offended at trifling improprieties; scrupulous.

Quoth he, that honour's very squeamish
That takes a basting for a blemish.

Hudibras.

His muse is rustic, and perhaps too plain
The men of squeamish taste to entertain.

SQUILL. n. [Fr. squille, L. squilla, a squill, a lobster or prawn; It. squilla, a squill, a sea-onion, a little bell; squillare, to ring; Sp. esquila, a small bell, a shrimp.] 1. Scilla, a genus of plants, nat. order Liliacæ; but the term squill is more particularly applied to the Scilla maritima, or sea-onion, which has a large acrid bulbous root like an onion. It is common on the sandy shores of the Mediterranean, Portugal, and the Levant. The bulb has been known as a medicine from the earliest ages; it is still held in great estimation, and is of very frequent use. It acts as an emetic, purgative, expectorant, or diuretic, in proportion to the dose in which it is given. [See SCILLA.]—2. A stomapodous crustaceous animal, of the genus Squilla. [See SQUILLA.]—3. An insect, called squill insect from its resemblance to the preceding, having a long body covered with a crust, the head broad and squat. SQUILLA, n. A genus of crustaceous animals, order Stomapoda, and a division of the genus Cancer, having the body long and semi-cylindric, somewhat resembling that of a lobster. The shell consists of a single shield of an elongated quadrilateral form, covering the head, the antennæ and eyes excepted, which are placed on a common anterior articulation. The eyes are placed on very short footstalks. The species are chiefly inhabitants of the seas of warm climates.

SQUIN'ANCY, † n. [It scquinanzia; Fr. scquinancie; L. cynanche; Gr. κυνανχης.] The quinsy,—which see.

SQUIN'ANCY, n. A British plant of the genus Asperula, the A. cynanchica, called also squinancy wort, and small woodruff. It is a perennial plant with white flowers in terminal panicles, and grows on dry banks. [See WOODRUFF.]

SQUINCH, or SCONCE, n. [See SCONCE.] In arch., the small penden-Squinch, Maxstoke Priory, Warwickshire.

tive arch formed across the angle of a square tower to support the side of a superimposed octagon. The application of the term to these pendentives may have been suggested by their resemblance to a corner cupboard, which was also called a squinch or sconce.

SQUINT, a. [D. schuin, oblique, sloping; schuinte, a slope; W. ysgeiniaw, to spread, to sprinkle, to squint, from ysgain to spread, to sprinkle. We see the sense is to deviate from a direct line, to wander or shoot off.] 1. Looking obliquely.—2. Optic axes of both eyes not coinciding; occasioned by a permanent shortening of one of the lateral straight muscles, and a permanent elongation of its antagonist.—3. Looking with suspicion.

SQUINT, v. i. To see obliquely; to look with the eyes differently directed.

Some can squint when they will. Bacon.
2. To have the axes of the eyes not coincident.—3. To slope; to deviate from a true line; to run obliquely.

SQUINT, v. t. To turn the eye to an oblique position; as, to squint an eye. 2. To look with non-coincident optic axes.

He gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip. Shak.

SQUINT, n. An oblique look; an affection of the eyes in which the optic axes do not coincide; the act or habit of squinting; as, one that has a squint.—In arch., a name given to oblique openings in the walls of a church; in mediæval architecture, they were generally so placed as to afford a view of the high altar from the transept or aisles.

SQUINT-EYE, n. An eye that squints. SQUINT-EYED, a. Having eyes that squint; having eyes with non-coincident axes.—2. Oblique; indirect; malignant; as, squint-eyed praise.—3. Looking obliquely or by side glances; as, squint-eyed jealousy or envy.

SQUIRESHIP, n. Office of a squire.

SQUIRM, v. t. or i. (squirm.) To move like a worm or eel, with writhing or contortions. [Local.]

SQUIRM. See SWARM.

SQUIR'REL, n. (squirrel.) [Fr. écureuil; L. sciurus; Gr. σκίουρος, a compound of σκια, shade, and ουρα, tail.] A small rodent mammal. The squirrels are formed into a family, Sciuridae, the type of which is the genus Sciurus, Linn., or true squirrels. This family comprehends three groups; the true squirrels (Sciurus), the ground squirrels (Tamias), and the flying squirrels (Pteromys). The true squirrels are distinguished by their strongly compressed inferior incisors, and by their long bushy tail. They have four toes before, and five behind. The thumb of the fore foot is sometimes marked by a tubercle. They have in all four grinders, variously tuberculated, and a very small additional one above in front, that very soon falls. The head is large, and the eyes projecting and lively. Several species are enumerated, as the common squirrel, which inhabits Europe and the north of Asia; the cat-squirrel, and grey squirrel, both American species. These animals are remarkably nimble, running up trees and leaping from branch to branch with surprising agility. They subsist on nuts, of which they lay up a store for winter, some of them in hollow trees, others in the earth. Their flesh is delicate food.

Common Squirrel (Sciurus vulgaris).

SQUIR'REL-FISH, n. A sort of perch. SQUIR'REL-HUNT, n. In America, the hunting and shooting of squirrels by a company of men.

SQUIRT, v. t. (squart.) [from squir,—which see.] 1. To eject or drive out of a narrow pipe or orifice, in a stream; as, to squirt water.

SQUIRT; † v. i. To throw out words; to let fly.

SQUIRT, n. An instrument with which a liquid is ejected in a stream with force; a syringe.—2. A small quick stream.

SQUIRT'ER, n. One that squirts. [This word, in all its forms, is vulgar.]

SQUIRT'ING CUCUMBER, one of the popular names of the fruit of Ecballium Elaterium, which, when nearly ripe, separates suddenly from its peduncle, at the same time ejecting its juices and seeds.

SRAD'HA, or SHRADDA, n. In East Indies, obsequies paid by the Hindoos to the manes of deceased ancestors, to effect, by means of oblations, the re-embodiment of the soul of the deceased after burning his corpse, and to raise his shade from this world up to heaven, and then deify him, as it were, among the manes of departed ancestors.

STAB, v. t. [This word contains the elements and is probably from the primary sense of the L. stabilis, stabilio, stipo, D. stippen, to point or prick, Eng. stiff, and a multitude of others in many languages. The radical sense is to thrust; but we know not to what Oriental roots they are allied, unless to the Heb. צב, yatzab, Ar. watsaba.] 1. To pierce with a pointed weapon; as, to be stabbed by a dagger or spear; to stab fish or eels.—2. To wound mischievously or mortally; to kill by the thrust of a pointed instrument.—3. To injure secretly or by malicious falsehood or slander; as, to stab reputation. STAB, v. i. To give a wound with a pointed weapon.

Hence,—5. Figuratively, martyrdom. The stake was prepared for those who were convicted of heresy.—6. That which is pledged or wagered; that which is set, thrown down, or laid, to abide the issue of a contest, to be gained by victory or lost by defeat.—7. The state of being laid or pledged as a wager. His honour is at stake.—8. A small anvil to straighten cold work, or to cut and punch upon.—

Stake-net, in Scotland, a machine for the capture of salmon. It consists of a sheet of net-work, stretched upon stakes fixed into the ground, generally in rivers or friths, where the sea ebbs and flows, with contrivances for entangling and securing the fish.—Stake and rice, a fence composed of stakes driven into the ground, and interwoven with branches of trees retaining their spray, or with rods without their spray. The latter is frequently called a wattled fence.

STAKE, v. t. To fasten, support, or defend with stakes; as, to stake vines or plants.—2. To mark the limits by stakes; with out; as, to stake out land; to stake out a new road, or the ground for a canal.—3. To wager; to pledge; to put hazard upon the issue of competition, or upon a future contingency. I'll stake you lamb that near the fountain plays. Pope.

4. To point or sharpen stakes.—5. To pierce with a stake.

STAKED, pp. Fastened or supported by stakes; set or marked with stakes; wagered; put to hazard.

STAKE-HEAD, n. In rope-making, a stake with wooden pins in the upper side to keep the strands apart.

STAKE-HOLDER, n. One with whom the bets are deposited when a wager is laid, or when a prize-fight, &c., takes place.

STAKING, ppr. Supporting with stakes; marking with stakes; wagering; putting to hazard.—2. Sharpening; pointing.

STALACTIC, } a. [from stalactite.]
STALACTICAL, } Pertaining to stalactite; resembling an icicle.

STALACTIFORM, } a. Like stalactite.
STALACTITIFORM, } lactite; resembling an icicle.

STALACTITE, n. plur. Stalac'tites, originally Stalactites. [Gr. σταλακτις, σταλακτι, from σταλαζω, to drop, from σταλας, L. stillo.] A subvariety of carbonate of lime, usually in a conical or cylindrical form, pendent from the roofs and sides of caverns like an icicle; produced by the filtration of water containing calcareous particles, through fissures and pores of rocks.

Cave with Stalactites and Stalagmites.

STALACTITIC, or STALACTITIC-AL, a. In the form of stalactite, or pendent substances like icicles.

STALAGMITE, n. [L. stalagmium, a drop; Gr. σταλαγμιος, supra.] Stalactical formations of carbonate of lime found upon the floors of calcareous caverns. It originates from the same cause as stalactite, but is formed upon the floor of the cavern by the dropping of the lime water from the roof, which, under these circumstances, is usually covered with stalactites.

STALAGMITES, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Guttiferæ. The species are trees natives of the East Indies and Ceylon, and belong to the family which produces the gamboge of commerce.—S. ovifolia, a native of Ceylon, is said to yield a true gamboge, which is employed in commerce.

STALAGMITIC, or STALAGMITICAL, a. Having the form of stalagmite.

STALAGMITICALLY, adv. In the form or manner of stalagmite.

STALDER, † n. A wooden frame to set casks on.

STALE, a. [Probably from the root of still, G. stellen, to set, and equivalent to stagnant.] 1. Vapid or tasteless from age; having lost its life, spirit, and flavour from being long kept; as, stale beer. It is sometimes used in a favourable sense; as, stale (that is, old) beer or ale. Stale bread is that which has been baked at least twenty-four hours before.—2. Having lost the life or graces of youth; worn out; decayed; as, a stale virgin.—3. Worn out by use; trite; common; having lost its novelty and power of pleasing; as, a stale remark.

STALE, n. [Probably that which is set; G. stellen. See STALL.] 1. Something set or offered to view as an allurements to draw others to any place or purpose; a decoy; a stool-fowl.

Still as he went, he crafty stales did lay.

Spenser.

A pretence of kindness is the universal stale to all base projects. Gon. of the Tongue. [In this sense obsolete.]—2. † A prostitute.—3. † Old vapid beer. [See the adj., No. 1.].—4. Old wine; urine, as of horses and cattle.—5. A long handle; as, the stale of a rake. [Sax. stel, stete; G. stiel.]—6. A word applied to the king in chess when stalled or set; that is, when so situated that he cannot be moved without going into check, by which the game is ended.

STALE, v. t. To make vapid or useless; to destroy the life, beauty, or use of; to wear out.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale Her infinite variety. Shak.

STALE, v. i. [G. stallen; Dan. stallen; Sw. stalla.] To make water; to discharge urine; as horses and cattle.

STALELY, † adv. Of old; of a long time.

STALE-MATE, n. At chess, the position of the king, when, though not in check, he cannot move without being placed in check.

STALENESS, n. The state of being stale; vapidness; the state of having lost the life or flavour; oldness; as, the staleness of beer or other liquors; the staleness of provisions.—2. The state of being worn out; triteness; commonness; as, the staleness of an observation.

STALK, n. [stauk.] [Sw. stielk; G. stiel, a handle, and a stalk or stem; Sax. staelg, a column; Gr. στειλεος, from the root of stall and G. stellen, to set.] 1. The stem or main axis of a plant; that part of a plant which rises immediately from the root, and which usually supports the leaves, flowers, and fruit.

[See STEM.] Thus we speak of a stalk of wheat, rye, or oats, the stalks of hemp. The stalk denotes that which is set, the fixed part of a plant, its support; or it is a shoot.—2. The pedicel of a flower, or the peduncle that supports the fructification of a plant, called the flower-stalk.—3. The stem of a quill; any thing resembling the stalk or stem of a plant; as, the stalk of a spoon; the stalk of a tobacco pipe, &c.—4. In arch., an ornament in the Corinthian capital which resembles the stalk of a plant, and which is sometimes fluted; from it the volutes and helices spring.

STALK, v. i. [Sax. stælcæn.] 1. To walk with high and proud steps; usually implying the affectation of dignity, and hence the word usually expresses dislike. The poets, however, use the word to express dignity of step.

With manly mien he stalk'd along the ground. Dryden.

Then stalking through the deep

He fords the ocean. Addison.

2. It is used with some insinuation of contempt or abhorrence.

Bertran

Stalks close behind her like a witch's fiend, Pressing to be employed. Dryden.

'Tis not to stalk about and draw fresh air From time to time. Addison.

3. To walk behind a stalking horse or behind a cover.

The king crept under the shoulder of his led horse, and said, I must stalk. Bacon.

STALK, n. A high, proud, stately step or walk.

STALK'ED, a. Having a stalk.—Stalked glands, in bot., glands elevated upon a stalk.

STALK'ER, n. One who walks with a proud step; also, a kind of fishing net.

STALK'ING, ppr. Walking with proud or lofty steps.

STALK'ING, n. Among sportsmen, the act of going gently step by step under cover of a horse, a screen, &c., till the sportsman gets within shot of the game; as, deer-stalking.

STALK'ING-HORSE, n. A horse, real or factitious, behind which a fowler conceals himself from the sight of the game which he is aiming to kill; hence, a mask; a pretence.

Hypocrisy is the devil's stalking-horse, under an affectation of simplicity and religion. I' Etrange.

STALK'LESS, a. Having no stalk.

STALK'Y, a. Hard as a stalk; resembling a stalk.

STALL, n. [Sax. stal, stal, stall, a place, a seat, or station, a stable, state, condition; G. stall, a stable, a sty; Fr. stalle and etal; W. ystal, from the root of G. stellen, to set, that is, to throw down, to thrust down; Sans. stala, a place. See STILL.] 1. Primarily, a stand; a station; a fixed spot; hence, the stand or place where a horse or an ox is kept and fed; the division of a stable, or the apartment for one horse. The stable contains eight or ten stalls.—2. A stable; a place for cattle.

At last he found a stall where oxen stood. Dryden.

3. In 1 Kings iv. 26, stall is used for horse. "Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots." In 2 Chron. ix. 25, stall means stable. "Solomon had four thousand stalls for horses and chariots." These passages are reconciled by the definition given above; Solomon had four thousand stables, each containing ten stalls; forty thousand stalls.—4. A bench, form, or frame of shelves in the open air, where any thing is exposed to sale. It is curious to observe the stalls of books in the boulevards and other public places in Paris.—5. A small house or shed in which an occupation is carried on; as, a butcher's stall.—6. In arch., an elevated seat in the choir to some dignitary of such churches. In Roman Catholic times they were appropriated to the canons or prebendaries in a secular, and to the monks in a regular community. At St. George's chapel, Windsor, a stall is appropriated to every knight of the garter, after his election and installation.

STALL, v. t. To put into a stall or stable, or to keep in a stall; as, to stall an ox. Where king Latinus then his oxen stall'd. Dryden.

2. To install; to place in an office with the customary formalities. [For this, install is now used.]

STALL, v. i. To dwell; to inhabit. We could not stall together in the world. Shak.

2. To kennel.—3. To be tired of eating, as cattle.

STALL'AGE, n. The right of erecting stalls in fairs; or rent paid for a stall.—2. In old books, laystall; dung; compost.

STALLA'TION, n. Installation.

STALL'ED, pp. Put or kept in a stable.

STALL'-FED, pp. Fed on dry fodder, or fattened in a stall or stable. [See STALL-FEED.]

STALL'-FEED, v. t. [stall and feed.] To feed and fatten in a stall or stable, or on dry fodder; as, to stall-feed an ox. [This word is used to distinguish this mode of feeding from grass-feeding.]

STALL'-FEEDING, ppr. Feeding and fattening in the stall.

STALL'-FEEDING, n. The practice of keeping cattle in houses, tying them up separately, and bringing their food to them for the purpose of fattening them, in distinction from the mode of feeding cattle by grazing, or of feeding them by putting them two or three together into small yards, with a shed at one end for shelter. In stall-feeding much less food is wasted, and a much greater quantity of manure is produced than by grazing; but, on the other hand, more manual labour is required, and the flesh of the animals is not considered so wholesome or high-flavoured as that of cattle which have pastured at large, or which have been fed in yards.

STALL'INGER, n. One who keeps a stall. [Local.]

STALL'ION, n. (stal'yun.) [G. hengst; Dan. staldhingst; Fr. etalon; It. stallone; from stall, or its root, as we now use stud horse, from the root of stud, stead; W. ystal, a stall, stock, produce; ystalu, to form a stock; ystalwyn, a stallion.] A stone horse; a seed horse; or any male horse not castrated, whether kept for mares or not. According to the Welsh, the word signifies a stock horse, a horse intended for raising stock.

STALL'-WORN, in Shakespeare, Johnson thinks a mistake for stalwart, stout. His stall-worn steed the champion stout bestrode. Shak.

STAL'WART, } a. [Scot. stalwart; STAL'WORTH, } Sax. stal-weorth, worth taking.] Brave; bold; strong; redoubted; daring; vehement; violent.

STAMEN, n. plur. Stamens or Stamina. [L. This word belongs to the root of sto, stabilis, or of stage.] 1. In a general sense, usually in the plural, the fixed, firm part of a body, which supports it or gives it its strength and solidity. Thus we say, the bones are the stamina of animal bodies; the ligneous parts of trees are the stamina which constitute their strength. Hence,—2. Whatever constitutes the principal strength or support of any thing; as, the stamina of a constitution or of life; the stamina of a state.—3. In bot., the male organ of fructification in plants, formed principally of cellular tissue. It is situated immediately within the petals, and is composed, in most cases, of three parts, the filament, the anther, and the pollen, of which the two latter are essential, the other not. The stamens and pistils constitute the sexual or reproductive organs of plants. Generally they both exist in the same flower, which is thus said to be hermaphrodite or perfect. The number of stamens varies in different plants, from one to a hundred or more. With respect to their directions they are named, erect, inflected, reflected, spreading, pendulous, ascending, declinate; and their insertions with regard to the ovary are said to be hypogynous, epigynous, or perigynous. [See these terms.] It was on the number of stamens, and their arrangements and relations, that Linnæus founded the classes of his sexual system of plants.

STAMENED, a. Furnished with stamens.

STAM'IN, n. A slight woollen stuff.

STAM'INA, n. plur. of Stamen. The materials or principle of strength. [See STAMEN, No. 2.]

STAM'INAL, a. Pertaining to stamens or stamina; consisting in stamens or stamina.

STAM'INATE, a. Furnished with stamens.

STAM'INATE, v. t. To endue with stamina.

STAMIN'EOUS, a. [L. stamineus.] 1. Consisting of stamens.—2. Possessing stamens. Stamineous flowers have no corol; they want the coloured leaves called petals, and consist only of the style and stamina. Linnæus calls them apetalous; others, imperfect or incomplete.—3. Pertaining to the stamen, or attached to it; as, a stamineous nectary.

STAMINID'IUM, n. plur. Staminidia. An organ in cryptogamic plants considered as equivalent to a stamen. Also a rudimentary stamen, or a process occupying the place of a stamen, as the so-called fifth stamen in scrophularia.

STAMINIF'EROUS, a. [L. stamen and fero, to bear.] A staminiferous flower is one which has stamens without a pistil. A staminiferous nectary is one that has stamens growing on it.

STAM'MEL, n. A species of red colour.—2. A kind of woollen cloth. [See STAMIN.]

STAM'MER, v. i. [Sax. stamer, one who stammers; Goth. stammis, stammering; G. stammeln; Dan. stammer; from the root stam or stem. The primary sense is to stop, to set, to fix. So stutter is from the root of stead, stud.] Literally, to stop in uttering syllables or words; to stutter; to hesitate or falter in speaking; and hence, to speak with stops and difficulty. Demosthenes is said to have stammered in speaking, and to have overcome the difficulty by persevering efforts.

STAM'MER, v. t. To utter or pronounce with hesitation or imperfectly.

STAM'MER, n. The terms stammer

Stalls, Higham Ferrers Church, Northamptonshire.

or chancel of a cathedral, collegiate church, &c., and mostly appropriated and stutter are used synonymously to denote that involuntary interruption of utterance arising from difficulty, and often total inability to pronounce certain syllables, the organs of speech being frequently affected with spasm in the effort to speak. Stammer in some cases is curable, in others it is incurable. [See STUTTERING.]

STAMMERER, n. One that stutters or hesitates in speaking.

STAMMERING, ppr. Stopping or hesitating in the uttering of syllables and words; stuttering.—2. a. Apt to stammer.

STAMMERING, n. The act of stopping or hesitating in speaking; impediment in speech; articulation disturbed by irregular intermissions or snatches.

STAMMERING, a. That stammers; hesitating in speech.

STAMMERINGLY, adv. With stops or hesitation in speaking.

STAMP, v. t. [D. stampen; G. stampfen; Fr. estamper. We know not which is the radical letter, m or p.] In a general sense, to strike; to beat; to press. Hence, 1. To strike or beat forcibly with the bottom of the foot, or by thrusting the foot downward; as, to stamp the ground.

He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground. Dryden.

2. To impress with some mark or figure; as, to stamp a plate with arms or initials.—3. To impress; to imprint; to fix deeply; as, to stamp virtuous principles on the heart. [See ENSTAMP.]—4. To fix a mark by impressing it; as, a notion of the Deity stamped on the mind.

God has stamped no original characters on our minds, wherein we may read his being. Locke.

5. To make by impressing a mark; as, to stamp pieces of silver.—6. To coin; to mint; to form.—7. To set a mark upon; as, to stamp cloth; to stamp a newspaper.—8. To cut into various forms with a stamp.—9. To crush by the downward action of a kind of pestle, as ore in a stamping-mill.—10. To put post-marks on letters.

STAMP, v. i. To strike the foot forcibly downward.

But starts, exclains, and stamps, and raves, and dies. Dennis.

STAMP, n. Any instrument for making impressions on other bodies.

'Tis gold so pure,
It cannot bear the stamp without alloy. Dryden.

2. A mark imprinted; an impression. That sacred name gives ornament and grace, And, like his stamp, makes basest metals pass. Dryden.

3. That which is marked; a thing stamped.

Hanging a golden stamp about their necks Shak.

4. † A picture cut in wood or metal, or made by impression; a cut; a plate. At Venice they put out very curious stamps of the several edifices which are most famous for their beauty and magnificence. Addison.

5. An impression of a public mark or seal made upon paper or parchment by the government, or its officers, for the purposes of revenue; as, the stamp upon a bond or indenture; the stamp on a newspaper. Stamps always denote the price of the particular stamp; or, in other words, the tax levied upon a particular instrument stamped, and sometimes they denote the nature of the instrument itself. If the instrument is written upon paper, the stamp is impressed upon the paper itself; but to a parchment instrument, the stamp is attached by paste and a small piece of lead, which itself forms part of the impression.—6. An instrument for cutting out materials (as paper, leather, &c.) into various forms by a downward pressure.—7. A character of reputation, good or bad, fixed on anything. These persons have the stamp of impiety. The Scriptures bear the stamp of a divine origin.—8. Authority; current value derived from suffrage or attestation.

Of the same stamp is that which is obtruded on us, that an adamant suspends the attraction of the loadstone. Brown.

9. Make; cast; form; character; as, a man of the same stamp, or of a different stamp.—10. In metallurgy, a kind of pestle raised by a water-wheel, for beating ores to powder; any thing like a pestle used for pounding or beating.—11. A kind of receipt ticket, sold by the post-office authorities, for attaching to letters, as an evidence of prepayment. Penny stamps are printed in red, and twopenny stamps in blue.

STAMP-ACT, n. An act of the British parliament, imposing a duty on all paper, vellum, and parchment used in her American colonies, and declaring all writings on unstamped materials to be null and void. This act roused a general opposition in the colonies, and was one cause of the revolution.

STAMP-DUTIES, n. Duties imposed on pieces of parchment or paper, on which many species of legal instruments are written; on newspapers, advertisements, cards, dice, &c. Stamp-duties on legal instruments, such as conveyances, deeds, legacies, &c., are chiefly secured by prohibiting the reception of them in evidence unless they bear the stamp required by the law.

STAMP'ED, pp. Impressed with a mark or figure; coined; imprinted; deeply fixed.

STAMP'ER, n. An instrument for pounding or stamping.—2. One who applies a stamp, or a post-mark; as, in the Glasgow post-office there are four stampers.

STAMP'ING, ppr. or n. Impressing with a mark or figure; coining; imprinting. In the stamp-office there are two kinds of stamping used; the wet and dry. In the former the stamp is printed in red, on newspapers, &c.; the latter is the impression of the bare stamp on bills, receipts, &c.

STAMP'ING-MACHINE, n. A machine for manufacturing metal spoons, forks, and other articles, by means of dies and a heavy hammer; and so constructed that the spoon, ladle, or fork is made perfect at one blow.

STAMP'ING-MILL, n. An engine by which ores are pounded by means of a stamp.

STAMP-LAWS, n. Laws enacted with a view to provide a revenue to the crown, by requiring that all contracts, bills of exchange, bonds, deeds, and many other writings of a similar nature, should be written upon stamped paper, a duty being payable to the crown on every stamp. The stamp-laws are carried into effect by the board of stamps and taxes, consisting of commissioners appointed by the crown, during pleasure.

STAMP'-OFFICE, n. An office where stamps are issued, and stamp duties, and also taxes are received.

STAN, as a termination, is said to have expressed the superlative degree; as in Athelstan, most noble; Dunstan, the highest. But qu. Stan, in Saxon, is stone.

STANCE, n. [from L. sto, stare, to stand.] A site; a station; an area for building. [Scotch.] STANCH, v. t. [Fr. étancher; Arm. stançoa; Sp. and Port. estancar, to stop, to stanch, to be overtired; It. stancare, to weary; Sp. and Port. estancia, a stay or dwelling for a time, an abode, and a stanza; Sp. estanco, a stop; hence, Fr. etang, a pond, and Eng. tank.] In a general sense, to stop; to set or fix; but applied only to the blood; to stop the flowing of blood. Cold applications to the neck will often stanch the bleeding of the nose.

STANCH, v. i. To stop, as blood; to cease to flow.

Immediately the issue of her blood stanch'd; Luke viii.

STANCH, a. [This is the same word as the foregoing, the primary sense of which is to set; hence the sense of firmness.] 1. Sound; firm; strong and tight; as, a stanch ship.—2. Firm in principle; steady; constant and zealous; hearty; as, a stanch churchman; a stanch republican; a stanch friend or adherent.

In politics I hear you're stanch. Prior.
3. Strong; not to be broken.—4. Firm; close.

A stanch hound is one that follows the scent closely without error or remissness.

STANCH'ED, pp. Stopped or restrained from flowing.

STANCH'EL, n. In arch., a stanchion. STANCH'ER, n. He or that which stops the flowing of blood.

STANCH'ING, ppr. Stopping the flowing of blood.

STANCH'ION, n. [Fr. étançon; Arm. stançonu and stançoni, to prop. See STANCH.] A prop or support; a piece of timber in the form of a stake or post, used for a support. In ship-building, stanchions of wood or iron are of different forms, and are used to support the deck, the quarter-rails, the nettings, awnings, and the like.

Also a name given to the upright pieces of timber in a bulk-head, breast-work, &c., of a ship.—2. In arch., a prop or piece of timber giving support to one of the main parts of a roof; also one of the upright bars, wood or iron, of a window, screen, railing, &c. STANCH'LESS, a. That cannot be stanch'd or stopped.

STANCH'NESS, n. Soundness; firmness in principle; closeness of adherence.

STAND, v. i. pret. and pp. Stood. [Sax. standan; Goth. standan. This verb, if from the root of G. stehen, Dan. staaer, Sans. sta, L. sto, is a derivative from the noun, which is formed from the participle of the original verb. In this case, the noun should properly precede the verb. It may be here remarked that if stan is the radical word, stand and L. sto, cannot be from the same stock. But stand in the pret. is stood, and sto forms steti. This induces a suspicion that stan is not the root of stand, but that n is casual.

These words, after all, may be from different roots. The Russ. stoyu, to stand, is the L. sto, but it signifies also to be, to exist, being the substantive verb. So in It. stare, Sp. and Port. estar.] 1. To be upon the feet, as an animal; not to sit, kneel, or lie.

The absolute to be pronounced by the priest alone, standing. Com. Prayer.

And the king turned his face about and blessed all the congregation of Israel, and all the congregation of Israel stood; 1 Kings viii. 2. To be erect, supported by the roots, as a tree or other plant. Notwithstanding the violence of the wind, the tree yet stands.—3. To be on its foundation; not to be overthrown or demolished; as, an old castle is yet standing.—4. To be placed or situated; to have a certain position or location. Paris stands on the Seine. London stands on the Thames.—5. To remain upright, in a moral sense; not to fall.

To stand or fall, Free in thy own arbitrament it lies. Milton.

6. To become erect. Mute and amaz'd, my hair with horror stood. Dryden.

7. To stop; to halt; not to proceed. I charge thee, stand, And tell thy name. Dryden.

8. To stop; to be at a stationary point. Say, at what part of nature will they stand? Pope.

9. To be in a state of fixedness; hence, to continue; to endure. Our constitution has stood for ages. It is hoped it will stand for ages longer. Commonwealths by virtue ever stood. Dryden.

10. To be fixed or steady; not to vacillate. His mind stands unmoved.—11. To be in or to maintain a posture of resistance or defence. Approach with charged bayonets; the enemy will not stand.

The king granted the Jews to stand for their life; Esth. viii.

12. To be placed with regard to order or rank. Note the letter that stands first in order. Wilberforce stood highest in public estimation. Christian charity stands first in the rank of gracious affections.—13. To be in any particular state; to be, emphatically expressed, that is, to be fixed or set; the primary sense of the substantive verb. How does the value of wheat stand? God stands in no need of our services, but we always stand in need of his aid and mercy.

Accomplish what your signs foreshow; I stand resign'd. Dryden.

14. To continue unchanged or valid; not to fail or become void.

No conditions of our peace can stand. Shak. My mercy will I keep for him, and my covenant shall stand fast with him; Ps. lxxxix.

15. To consist; to have its being and essence.

Sacrifices... which stood only in meats and drinks; Heb. ix.

16. To have a place. This excellent man, who stood not on the advantage-ground before, provoked men of all qualities. Clarendon.

17. To be in any state. Let us see how our matters stand.

As things now stand with us. Calamy.

18. To be in a particular respect or relation; as, to stand godfather to one. We ought to act according to the relation we stand in toward each other.—19. To be, with regard to state of mind. Stand in awe, and sin not; Ps. iv.

20. To succeed; to maintain one's ground; not to fail; to be acquitted; to be safe.

Readers by whose judgment I would stand or fall. Spectator.

21. To hold a course at sea; as, to stand from the shore; to stand for the harbour.

From the same parts of heav'n his navy stands. Dryden.

22. To have a direction. The wand did not really stand to the metal, when placed under it. Boyle.

23. To offer one's self as a candidate. He stood to be elected one of the proctors of the university. Savanderson.

24. To place one's self; to be placed. I stood between the Lord and you at that time; Deut. v.

25. To stagnate; not to flow. Or the black water of Pomptina stands. Dryden.

26. To be satisfied or convinced. Though Page be a secure fool, and stand so firmly on his wife's frailty. Shak.

27. To make delay. I cannot stand to examine every particular.—28. To persist; to persevere.

Never stand in a lie when thou art accused. Taylor.

29. To adhere; to abide. Despair would stand to the sword. Daniel.

30. To be permanent; to endure; not to vanish or fade; as, the colour will stand.—To stand by, to be near; to be a spectator; to be present. I stood by when the operation was performed. This phrase generally implies that the person is inactive, or takes no part in what is done. In seamen's lan., to stand by is to attend and be ready. Stand by the halyards.—2. To be aside; to be placed aside with disregard.

In the mean time, we let the commands stand by neglected. Decay of Piety.

3. To maintain; to defend; to support; not to desert. I will stand by my friend to the last. Let us stand by our country. "To stand by the Arundelian marbles," in Pope, is to defend or support their genuineness.—4. To rest on for support; to be supported. This reply standeth by conjecture. Whitgift.

To stand for, to offer one's self as a candidate.

How many stand for consulships?—Three. Shak.

2. To side with; to support; to maintain, or to profess or attempt to maintain. We all stand for freedom, for our rights or claims.—3. To be in the place of; to be the substitute or representative of. A cipher at the left hand of a figure stands for nothing.

I will not trouble myself, whether these names stand for the same thing, or really include one another. Locke.

4. In seamen's lan., to direct the course toward.—To stand from, to direct the course from.—To stand one, to cost. The coat stands him four pounds.—To stand in, or stand in for, in seamen's lan., is to direct a course toward land or a harbour.—To stand it, to be able to support one's self in trials of strength or suffering.—To stand off, to keep at a distance.—2. Not to comply.—3. To keep at a distance in friendship or social intercourse; to forbear intimacy.

We stand off from an acquaintance with God. Atterbury.

4. To appear prominent; to have relief. Picture is best when it standeth off, as if it were carved. Wotton.

To stand off, or off from, in seamen's lan., is to direct the course from land.—To stand off and on is to sail toward land and then from it.—To stand out, to project; to be prominent.

Their eyes stand out with fatness; Ps. lxxiii.

2. To persist in opposition or resistance; not to yield or comply; not to give way or recede.

His spirit is come in. That so stood out against the holy church. Shak.

3. With seamen, to direct the course from land or a harbour.—To stand to, to ply; to urge efforts; to persevere. Stand to your tackles, mates, and stretch your oars. Dryden.

2. To remain fixed in a purpose or opinion. I will stand to it, that this is his sense. Stillingfleet.

3. To abide by; to adhere; as to a contract, assertion, promise, &c.; as, to stand to an award; to stand to one's word.—4. Not to yield; not to fly; to maintain the ground.

Their lives and fortunes were put in safety, whether they stood to it or ran away. Bacon.

To stand to sea, to direct the course from land.—To stand under, to undergo; to sustain.—To stand up, to rise from sitting; to be on the feet.—2. To arise in order to gain notice.

Against whom when the accusers stood up, they brought no accusation of such things as I supposed; Acts xxv.

3. To make a party. When we stood up about the corn. Shak.

To stand up for, to defend; to justify; to support, or attempt to support; as, to stand up for the administration.—To stand upon, to concern; to interest. Does it not stand upon them to examine the grounds of their opinion? This phrase is, we believe, obsolete; but we say, it stands us in hand, that is, it is our concern, it is for our interest.—2. To value; to pride.

We highly esteem and stand much upon our birth. Roy.

3. To insist; as, to stand upon security.—To stand with, to be consistent. The faithful servants of God will receive what they pray for, so far as stands with his purposes and glory.

It stands with reason that they should be rewarded liberally. Davies.

To stand together is used, but the last two phrases are not in very general use, and are perhaps growing obsolete.—To stand against, to oppose; to resist.—To stand fast, to be fixed; to be unshaken or immovable.—To stand in hand, to be important to one's interest; to be necessary or advantageous. It stands us in hand to be on good terms with our neighbours.—To stand fire, to receive the fire of an enemy without giving way.—It stands to reason, it is reasonable to suppose. [Colloquialism in partial currency.]

STAND, v. t. To endure; to sustain; to bear. I cannot stand the cold or the heat.—2. To endure; to resist without yielding or receding.

He stood the furious foe. Pope.

3. To await; to suffer; to abide by. Bid him disband the legions... And stand the judgment of a Roman senate. Addition.

To stand one's ground, to keep the ground or station one has taken; to maintain one's position; in a literal or figurative sense; as, an army stands its ground, when it is not compelled to retreat. A man stands his ground in an argument, when he is able to maintain it, or is not refuted.—To stand it, to bear; to be able to endure; or to maintain one's ground or state; a popular phrase.—To stand fire, to receive the fire of arms from an enemy without giving way.—To stand trial, is to sustain the trial or examination of a cause; not to give up without trial.

STAND, n. [Sans. stana, a place, a mansion, state, &c.] 1. A stop; a halt; as, to make a stand; to come to a stand, either in walking or in any progressive business.

The horse made a stand, when he charged them and routed them. Clarendon.

2. A station; a place or post where one stands; or a place convenient for persons to remain for any purpose. The sellers of fruit have their several stands in the market.

I took my stand upon an eminence.

Spectator.

3. Rank; post; station.

Father, since your fortune did attain

So high a stand, I mean not to descend.

Daniel.

[In lieu of this, standing is now used. He is a man of high standing in his own country.]—4. The act of opposing.

We have come off

Like Romans; neither foolish in our stands, Nor cowardly in retire. Shak.

5. The highest point; or the ultimate point of progression, where a stop is made, and regressive motion commences. The population of the world will not come to a stand, while the means of subsistence can be obtained. The prosperity of the Roman empire came to a stand in the reign of Augustus; after which it declined.

Vice is at stand, and at the highest flow.

Dryden.

6. A young tree, usually reserved when the other trees are cut.—7. A small table; as, a candle-stand; or any frame on which vessels and utensils may be laid.—8. In com., a weight of from two hundred weight and a half to three hundred weight of pitch.—9. Something on which a thing rests or is laid; as, a hay-stand.—10. The place where a witness stands to testify in court.—To put to a stand, to put into difficulty, embarrassment, or perplexity.—Stand of arms, in milit. affairs, a musket with its usual appendages, as a bayonet, cartridge-box, &c.—To be at a stand, to stop on account of some doubt or difficulty; hence, to be perplexed; to be embarrassed; to hesitate what to determine, or what to do.—11. An erection, or raised station for spectators, at a horse-race.—Stand still, a standing without moving.

STANDARD, a. Having a permanent quality; fixed; settled; superior; as, a standard work; a standard measure; standard weight, &c.

STANDARD, n. [It. standardo; Fr. etendard; G. standarte; stand and ard, sort, kind] 1. An ensign of war; a staff with a flag or colours, borne as a signal for the joining together of several troops belonging to the same body. The troops repair to their standard. The standard is usually a piece of silk, one foot and a half square, on which are embroidered the arms, device, or cipher of the prince or colonel. It is carried in the centre of the first rank of a squadron of horse by the cornet. The standards borne by infantry are usually called colours. The royal standard of Great Britain is a flag, in which the imperial ensigns of England, Scotland and Ireland are quartered with the armorial bearings of Hanover.

His armies, in the following day, On those fair plains their standards proud display. Fairfax.

In her., a standard is an ensign, carried at the funerals of great personages. It is usually fifteen feet long, and split at the points; at the top is the arms of the union, then the crests and motto of the defunct.—2. In com., the original weight, measure, or coin sanctioned by government, and committed to the keeping of a magistrate, or deposited in some public place, to regulate, adjust, and try weights and measures, used by particular persons in traffic. Thus the imperial gallon is the standard measure of capacity in this country; the imperial yard is the standard of lineal measure; and the pound troy is the standard of weight. [See MEASURE, WEIGHT.] The standards of weights and measures, in England, were appointed by Magna Charta to be kept in the exchequer, by a special officer, called the clerk or controller of the market.—3. That which is established as a rule or model, by the authority of public opinion, or by respectable opinions, or by custom or general consent; as, writings which are admitted to be the standard of style and taste. Homer's Iliad is the standard of heroic poetry. Demosthenes and Cicero are the standards of oratory. Of modern eloquence, we have an excellent standard in the speeches of Lord Chatham. Addison's writings furnish a good standard of pure, chaste, and elegant English style. It is not an easy thing to erect a standard of taste.—4. In coinage, the proportion of weight of fine metal and alloy established by authority. The standard fineness of gold coins is at present 22 carats, that is, 22 parts of fine gold, and 2 of alloy. The pound troy of standard gold is coined into 46½ sovereigns, or into £46 14s. 6d. The mint or standard price of gold is therefore said to be £46 14s. 6d. per pound troy, or £3 17s. 10½d. an ounce. The standard fineness of silver coins is 11 ounces 2 dwts. of pure silver, and 18 dwts. of alloy, making together 1 pound troy, which is coined into 66 shillings.—5. A tree or shrub which stands singly, without being attached to any wall or support. In gardening and planting, they are distinguished into three kinds; the full standard, whose stem is suffered to grow up seven or eight feet, or more, before it is allowed to branch out; the half standard, which is allowed to run up three or four feet, and then permitted to branch out; and the dwarf standard, whose stem is only allowed to reach a height of one or two feet before it is permitted to branch.—6. In ship-building, an inverted knee placed upon the deck instead of beneath it, with its vertical branch turned upward from that which lies horizontally.—7. In bot., the upper petal or banner of a papilionaceous corol.—8. In joinery, any upright in a framing, as the quarters of partitions, the frame of a door, and the like.—Standard is also an old term for a candlestick of large size, standing on the ground, with branches for several lights.—9. In milit. affairs, the measure of height for such as enlist into the army.

STANDARD-BEARER, n. [standard and bear.] An officer of an army, company, or troop, that bears a standard; an ensign of infantry or a cornet of horse.

STAND'EL, n. A tree of long standing. STAND'ER, n. One who stands.—2. † A tree that has stood long.

STAND'ER, or STAND'ARD-GRASS, n. Satyrion.

STAND'ER-BY, n. One that stands near; one that is present; a mere spectator. [We now more generally use by-stander.]

STAND'ER-UP, n. One who takes a side. STAND'ING, ppr. Being on the feet; being erect. [See STAND.]—2. Moving in a certain direction to or from an object.—3. a. Settled; established, either by law or by custom, &c.; continually existing; permanent; not temporary; as, a standing army. Money is the standing measure of the value of all other commodities. Legislative bodies have certain standing rules of proceeding. Courts of law are or ought to be governed by standing rules. There are standing rules of pleading. The gospel furnishes us with standing rules of morality. The Jews, by their dispersion and their present condition, are a standing evidence of the truth of revelation and of the prediction of Moses. Many fashionable vices and follies ought to be the standing objects of ridicule.—Standing orders, the orders made by either house of parliament respecting the manner in which business shall be conducted in it.—4. Lasting; not transitory; not liable to fade or vanish; as, a standing colour.—5. Stagnant; not flowing; as, standing water.—6. Fixed; not movable; as, a standing bed; distinguished from a truckle bed.—7. Remaining erect; not cut down; as, standing corn.—Standing rigging, of a ship. This consists of the cordage or ropes which sustain the masts and remain fixed in their position. Such are the shrouds and stays.—Standing part of the sheet, that part of it which is made fast to a ring at the ship's quarter.—Standing part of a tackle, the end of the rope where the block is fastened.—Standing ropes, those which do not run in any block, but are set taught, or let slack, as occasion serves; as the sheet-stays, back-stays, &c.

STAND'ING, n. Continuance; duration or existence; as, a custom of long standing.—2. Possession of an office, character, or place; as, a patron or officer of long standing.—3. Station; place to stand in.

I will provide you with a good standing to see his entry. Bacon.

4. Power to stand.

I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing; Ps. lxiix.

5. Rank; condition in society; as, a man of good standing or of high standing among his friends.—Standing off, sailing from the land.—Standing on, sailing to land.

STAND'ISH, n. [stand and dish.] A case for pen and ink.

I bequeath to Dean Swift my large silver standish. Swift.

STAND'-PIPE, n. A vertical pipe erected at a well or reservoir, into which water is forced by mechanical means, in order to obtain a head pressure sufficient to convey it to a distance.

Stand-cock, the outlet of such a pipe.—2. Also a small pipe inserted into an opening in the water main in a street.

STAND'-POINT, n. [Ger. standpunkt.]

A fixed point or station; a basis or fundamental principle; a position from which things are viewed.

STANG, n. [Sax. stang, steng, a pole or stick; G. stange; W. ystang, a pole or perch; allied to sting and stanchion; from shooting.] 1. † A pole, rod, or perch; a measure of land.—2. A long bar; a pole; a shaft.—To ride the stang, is to be carried on a pole on men's shoulders, in derision: a punishment inflicted in former times on such husbands as beat their wives. [Local.]

STANG, v. i. To shoot with pain. [Local.]

STAN'HOPE, n. A light two-wheeled carriage, without a top; so called from Lord Stanhope, for whom it was contrived.

STANK, † v. Weak; worn out.

STANK, † v. i. To sigh.

STANK, old pret. of Stink. Stunk is now used.

STANK, n. [W. ystanc. See STANCH.] A pool; a pond; a ditch. [Scotch.]

STANNARY, a. [from L. stannum, tin; Ir. stan; W. ystaen. See TIN.] Relating to the tin works; as, stannary courts. The stannary courts of Devon and Cornwall are courts of record for the administration of justice among the tinners. They are held before the lord warden and his substitutes.

STANNARY, n. A tin mine. Stannaries are the mines and works from which tin is dug and purified; but the term is used as including by one general designation the tin mines within a particular district, the tinners employed in working them, and the customs and privileges attached to the mines, and to those employed in digging and purifying tin. The great stannaries of England are those of Devon and Cornwall.

STANNATE, n. [L. stannum, tin.] A salt formed of stannic acid united with a base.

STANNEL, } n. The kestrel, a species
STANNYEL, } of hawk; called also stone-gall and wind-hover.

STANNIC, a. [L. stannum, tin.] Pertaining to tin; procured from tin; as, the stannic acid.

STANNIC ACID, n. The peroxide of tin, which performs the functions of an acid, uniting with bases and forming salts called stannates.

STANNIFEROUS, a. [L. stannum, tin; and fero, I bear.] Containing or affording tin.

STANNYEL, † n. The common stone hawk.

STANZA, n. [It. stanza, an abode or lodging, a stanza, that is, a stop; Sp. and Port. estancia, from estancar, to stop; Fr. stance. See STANCH.] In poetry, a number of lines or verses connected with each other, and ending in a full point or pause; a part of a poem containing every variation of measure in that poem. A stanza may contain verses of a different length or number of syllables, and a different number of verses; or it may consist of verses of equal length. Stanzas are said to have been first introduced from the Italian into French poetry about the year 1580, and thence they were introduced into England. The principal Italian stanza is the ottava rima, which consists of six lines in alternate rhyme, ended by a couplet, the lines being decasyllabic, or rather hendecasyllabic. The Spenserian stanza consists of eight decasyllabic and an Alexandrian at the end; the first and third verses forming the first rhyme; the second, fourth, fifth, and seventh, and the eighth and ninth a third rhyme. There is a great variety of stanzas in the poetry of modern languages, according to the rhythm and structure of the poem.

Horace confines himself to one sort of verse or stanza in every ode. Dryden.

2. In arch, an apartment or division in a building. [Ital.]

STANZATIC, a. Consisting in stanzas.
STAPELIA, n. An extensive and curious genus of plants, nat. order Asclepiadaceæ. Most of the species are natives of the Cape of Good Hope. They are succulent plants without leaves, frequently covered over with dark tubercles, giving them a very Stapelia variegata.

grotesque appearance. In most instances the flowers give off very unpleasant odours, inasmuch that the name of carrion-flower has been given to some of these plants. They are, nevertheless, cultivated on account of their singular and beautiful forms.

STAPES, n. [L. a stirrup.] One of the bones of the internal ear, so called from its shape.

STAPHISINE, n. A substance found along with delphine in Delphinium Staphysagria. It is said to be composed of 23 equivalents of hydrogen, 32 of carbon, 4 of oxygen, and 1 of nitrogen. It is acrid and poisonous, but is probably only a compound of delphine.

STAPHYLEA, n. Bladder-nut, a genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Staphyleaceæ. Six species have been enumerated, one a native of Europe, one of North America, one of Japan, two of Jamaica, one of Peru, and one of Himalaya. S. pinnata, or common bladder-nut, is a native of the middle and south of Europe, and occurs occasionally in hedges and thickets in Yorkshire. The wood is used for various kinds of turning. The seeds are edible, and act as a mild aperient.

STAPHYLEACEÆ, n. A small nat. order of plants belonging to the syncarpous group of polypetalous exogens. The species are shrubs, with opposite pinnate leaves, and both common and partial stipules. The flowers are arranged in terminal stalked racemes. There are only three genera belonging to the order, which inhabit the warmer and temperate parts of the earth. Only one species is found in Europe, the Staphylea pinnata. The seeds of all contain a mild oil, which may be expressed.

STAPHYLINÆ, a. [Gr. σταφυλή, a bunch of grapes.] In mineral, having the form of a bunch of grapes; botryoidal.

STAPHYLINIDÆ, n. A family of coleopterous insects.

STAPHYLOMA, or STAPHYLOSIS, n. [Gr. σταφυλή, a grape.] A disease of the eye-ball, in which the cornea loses its natural transparency, rises above the level of the eye, and successively even projects beyond the eyelids, in the form of an elongated, whitish, or pearl-coloured tumour, which is sometimes smooth, sometimes uneven, and is attended with a total loss of sight.

STAPHYLORAPHY, n. [Gr. σταφυλή, and ραφή, a suture, from εραται.] A surgical suture of the palate, for the purpose of uniting the edges of a fissure.

STAPHYSINE. See STAPHISINE.

STAPLE, n. [Sax. stapel, stapul, a stake; D. stapel, a pile, stocks, staple; stapelen, to pile; G. stapel, a stake, a pile or heap, a staple, stocks, a mart; Sw. stapel; Dan. stabel, a staple; stabler, to pile; stabe, a block or log; stab, a staff. We see this word is from the root of staff. The primary sense of the root is to set, to fix. Staple is that which is fixed, or a fixed place, or it is a pile or store.] 1. A settled mart or market; an emporium. In England, formerly, the king's staple was established in certain ports or towns, and certain goods could not be exported, without being first brought to these ports to be rated and charged with the duty payable to the king or public. The principal commodities on which customs were levied, were wool, skins, and leather, and these were originally the staple commodities. Hence the words staple and staple commodities, came in time to signify the principal commodities grown or manufactured in a country or town, either for exportation or home consumption. Thus cotton is the staple commodity of several of the Southern States of America; the manufacture of cotton is the staple trade of Manchester; the manufacture of hardwares is the staple of Birmingham; the manufacture of shawls is the staple of Paisley; and the manufacture of muslin and other fabrics, and the production of iron, form the staple of Glasgow.—2. A city or town where merchants agree to carry certain commodities.—3. The thread or pile of wool, cotton, or flax. Thus we say, this is wool of a coarse staple, or a fine staple; this is cotton of a short staple, long staple, fine staple, &c.—4. [W. ystwfol.] A loop of iron, or a bar or wire bent and formed with two points to be driven into wood, to hold a hook, pin, &c.—Staple of land, the particular nature and quality of land.

STAPLE, a. Settled; established in commerce; as, a staple trade.—2. According to the laws of commerce; marketable; fit to be sold. [Not much used].—3. Chief; principal; regularly produced or made for market; as, staple commodities. [This is now the most general acceptance of the word.]

STAPLER, n. A dealer; as, a wool stapler.

STAR, n. [Sax. storra; G. stern; D. star; Gr. αστρα; Sans. tara; W. seren.] 1. An apparently small luminous body in the heavens, that appears in the night, or when its light is not obscured by clouds or lost in the brighter effulgence of the sun. Stars are fixed or planetary. The fixed stars are known by their perpetual twinkling, and by their being always in the same position in relation to each other. The planets do not twinkle; they shine with a steady light; they revolve round the sun, and are continually changing their positions with regard to the other heavenly bodies, their motions being sometimes direct, and sometimes retrograde. In astron., the word star is chiefly applied to those luminous heavenly bodies which are situated beyond the solar system. The principal points which form the subjects of astronomical inquiries regarding the stars, are, their apparent and relative magnitudes, their distribution, their number, their distances, motions, and nature. In order to distinguish the stars one from another, the ancients divided the heavens into different spaces called constellations, which they supposed to be occupied by the figures of animals and other objects, as a lion, a bear, a man, a lyre, &c. Each of these figures was made to comprehend a group of stars, and to a few of the brightest stars they gave particular names. These ancient figures have been retained by the moderns, who, in order to distinguish the stars in the same constellation from each other, have either numbered or marked them with certain letters of the Greek and other alphabets. The stars are divided into different magnitudes, according to their apparent size, the largest being said to be of the first magnitude, the next largest of the second magnitude, and so on to the sixth or seventh magnitude, which last class comprehends the least stars that are visible to the naked eye. All the stars beyond the sixth or seventh magnitude are called telescopic stars, as they cannot be seen without the aid of the telescope. Those stars which lie in spaces between the constellations, and are therefore not included in them, are called unformed stars. The gradations of magnitude among the telescopic stars are continued by astronomers from the eighth down to the sixteenth. The stars are very irregularly distributed over the celestial sphere. In some regions scarcely a star is to be seen, while in others they seem crowded together, especially in the milky way, where they appear, when viewed through a powerful telescope, to be crowded almost beyond imagination. Of the stars visible to the naked eye at any one time, the number probably does not exceed a few thousands, but in the telescope their number is so great as to defy all calculation; and, besides, there is every reason to believe that there are countless hosts which lie beyond the reach of the most powerful telescopes. The distances of the fixed stars from the earth are so great, that if we except one or two instances, perhaps still doubtful, all the attempts of astronomers to determine these distances have hitherto been fruitless. The double star 61 Cygni, is reckoned the nearest of the fixed stars, and its distance is computed to be 592,000 times the mean radius of the earth's orbit. The stars are observed to have motions of their own, and it is concluded that their proper motions are performed in circular or elliptic orbits, round some very remote centre. Many stars have been observed whose light appears to undergo a regular periodic increase and diminution of brightness, amounting, in some instances, to a complete extinction and revival. These are called variable and periodic stars. It is found that some stars, formerly distinguished by their splendour, have entirely disappeared; others have shone forth with extraordinary brilliancy, and, after a longer or shorter period, have gradually died away and become extinct. These are called temporary stars. Many of the stars are found, when observed with telescopes of high magnifying powers, to be composed of two, and some of them of three or more stars in close juxtaposition. These are termed double and multiple stars. There are certain irregular spots of pale light, and ill-defined figure, which occur frequently in the heavens. These are termed nebulae. Some of these are, by the aid of the telescope, resolvable into clusters of small stars; but there are others which are not wholly resolvable into separate stars; and there are others again in which there is no appearance whatever of stars. The stars are considered by astronomers to be suns, each of them forming the centre of a system, round which planets revolve. Their immense numbers exhibit the astonishing extent of creation and of divine power.—2. The pole-star. [A particular application, not in use.]—3. In astrol., a configuration of the planets, supposed to influence fortune. Hence the expression, "You may thank your stars for such and such an event."

A pair of star-cross'd lovers. Shak.
4. The figure of a star; a radiated mark in writing or printing; an asterisk; thus *; used as a reference to a note in the margin, or to fill a blank in writing or printing where letters are omitted.—5. In Scripture, Christ is called the bright and morning star, the star that ushers in the light of an eternal day to his people; Rev. xxii.—Ministers are also called stars in Christ's right hand, as, being supported and directed by Christ, they convey light and knowledge to the followers of Christ; Rev. i.—The twelve stars which form the crown of the church, are the twelve apostles; Rev. xii.—6. The figure of a star; a decoration worn by knights.—7. A person or thing shining above others. Specially, a distinguished and brilliant theatrical performer.—8. In her., the estolle, a charge frequently borne on the shield, which differs only from the mullet, in having its rays or points waved instead of straight. It usually has six points; but when the number is greater, the points are waved and straight alternately.—9. In pyrotechny, a composition of combustible matter, which, exploding high in the air, presents the appearance of a real star.—Shooting or falling stars, luminous meteors which dart through the sky in the form of a star.—Star-fort, or star, in fort., a small fort having five or more points, or salient and entering angles flanking one another.

Star Forts.
Hexagonal Star Fort. Octagonal Star Fort.

A star-redoubt is of the same form.—The pole-star, a bright star in the tail of Ursa minor, so called from its being very near the north pole.—Star of Bethlehem, the English name of three British plants of the genus Ornithogalum. They grow in pastures and woods. [See ORNITHOGALUM.] There is also the star of Alexandria, and of Naples, and of Constantinople, of the same genus.

STAR, v. t. To set or adorn with stars or bright radiating bodies; to bespangle; as, a robe starred with gems.

STAR-ANISE, n. The seeds of the Illicium anisatum, a plant inhabiting India, belonging to nat. order Magnoliaceae. They are considered in India to be powerfully stomachic and carminative. A very fragrant volatile oil is obtained from them. The Chinese burn them in their temples, and Europeans employ them to aromatize certain liquors, such as the Anisette de Bordeaux.

STAR-APPLE, n. The popular name of several species of Chrysophyllum, whose fruit is esculent. Chrysophyllum Caimito is the most important species. It is a native of the West Indies. The fruit resembles a large apple, which in the inside is divided into ten cells, each containing a black seed, surrounded by a gelatinous pulp. It is eaten in the warm climates of America by way of dessert.

Star Apple (Chrysophyllum Caimito).

STAR-BLIND, a. Purlind; blinking.

STARBOARD, n. [Sax. steor-board; G. steuerbord, as if from steuer, the rudder or helm; D. stuur-bord, as if from stuur, helm; Sw. and Dan. styrbord. But in Fr. stribord, Sp. estribor, Arm. strybourz or stribourh, are said to be contracted from dexter-bord, right-side. Star-bord is from steer-bord, the tiller being on the right hand of the steersman.] The right hand side of a ship or boat, when a spectator stands with his face toward the head, stem, or prow.

STARBOARD, a. Pertaining to the right hand side of a ship; being or lying on the right side; as, the starboard shrouds; starboard quarter; starboard tack. In seamanship, starboard, uttered by the master of a ship, is an order to the helmsman to put the helm to the starboard side. The term larboard, uttered in like manner, would imply an order to put the helm to the larboard side; but as the words starboard and larboard are apt to be mistaken, from their resemblance in sound,

It is usual to substitute the words to part, for larboard.

STÄRCH, n. [Sax. stearc, rigid, stiff; G. stärke, strength, starch, stark, strong. See STARE and STEEB.] A proximate principle of plants, universally diffused in the vegetable kingdom, and of very great importance. It occurs in seeds, as in those of wheat and other cereal grains, and also in leguminous plants; in roots, as in the tubers of the potato; in the stem and pith of many plants, as in the sago plant; in some barks, as in that of cinnamon; and in pulpy fruits, such as the apple. Finally, it is contained in the expressed juice of most vegetables, such as the carrot, in a state of suspension, being deposited on standing. The starch of commerce is chiefly extracted from wheat flour. When pure, it is a snow-white powder, of a glistening appearance, which makes a crackling noise when pressed with the finger. It is composed of transparent rounded grains, the size of which varies in different plants; those of the potato being the largest, and those of wheat and rice the smallest. It is insoluble in cold water, alcohol, and ether; but when heated with water, it is converted into a kind of solution, which, on cooling, forms a stiff semi-opaque jelly. If dried up, this yields a translucent mass, which softens and swells into a jelly with water. The solution or mixture of starch and water strikes a deep blue colour with free iodine. Hence the solution of starch becomes an admirable test of the presence of iodine. Pure starch consists of 12 equivalents of carbon, 10 of hydrogen, and 10 of oxygen. It is employed for stiffening linen and other cloth. When roasted at a moderate heat in an oven, it is converted into a species of gum employed by calico printers; potato starch answers best for this purpose. Starch is convertible into sugar by dilute sulphuric acid. Starch forms the greatest portion of all farinaceous substances, particularly of wheat flour, and it is the chief ingredient of bread.—2. A stiff formal manner; starchiness.

STÄRCH, a. Stiff; precise; rigid.
STÄRCH, v. t. To stiffen with starch.
STÄR-CHAMBER, n. Formerly, a court of civil and criminal jurisdiction at Westminster, so named, it is said, from the roof of the apartment where it was held being ornamented with gilt stars. It was under the direction of the chancellor, and had jurisdiction of forgery, perjury, riots, maintenance, fraud, libel, and conspiracy, and, in general, of every misdemeanour, especially those of public importance, for which the law had provided no sufficient punishment. Its criminal jurisdiction (after its civil jurisdiction had gone into disuse) rendered it a powerful and odious auxiliary of a despotic administration. Its process was summary, and often iniquitous, and the punishment it inflicted often arbitrary and cruel. This court was abolished by statute 16 Charles I. STÄRCHED, pp. Stiffened with starch.—2. a. Stiff; precise; formal.

STÄRCHEDNESS, n. Stiffness in manners; formality.
STÄRCHER, n. One who starches, or whose occupation is to starch. [Little used, except in the compound word clear-starcher,—which see.]

STÄR-HYACINTH, n. A plant of the genus Scilla, the S. autumnalis.

STÄRING, ppr. Gazing; looking with fixed eyes.

STÄRINGLY, adv. Gazingly.

STÄR-JELLY, n. A plant, a species of Tremella, one of the Fungi; also, starshoot, a gelatinous substance, which is also a Tremella.

STÄRK, a. [Sax. sterc, stearc; G. stark, stiff, strong; formed on the root of the G. starr, stiff, rigid, Eng. stær; from straining, stretching. See STARCH and STEEB.] 1. Stiff; strong; rugged.

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff, Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies. Shak.

The north is not so stark and cold.† B. Jonson.

2. Deep; full; profound; absolute. Consider the stark security The commonwealth is in now.† B. Jonson.

3. Mere; gross; absolute. He pronounces the citation stark nonsense. Collier.

STÄRK, adv. Wholly; entirely; absolutely; as, stark mad; stark blind; stark naked. These are the principal applications of this word now in use. The word is in popular use, but not an elegant word in any of its applications.

STÄRKLY,† adv. Stiffly; strongly.

STÄR-LED, a. Guided by the stars.

STÄRLESS, a. Having no stars visible or no starlight; as, a starless night.

STÄRLIGHT, n. [star and light.] The light proceeding from the stars.

Nor walk by moon Or glittering starlight, without thee is sweet. Milton.

STÄRLIGHT, a. Lighted by the stars, or by the stars only; as, a starlight evening.

STÄRLIKE, a. [star and like.] Resembling a star; stellated; radiated like a star; as, starlike flowers.—2. Bright; illustrious.

The having turned many to righteousness shall confer a starlike and immortal brightness. Boyle.

STÄRLING, n. [Sax. stær; Sw. stare.] Sturnus, a genus of insectorial birds, belonging to the conirostral family of Cuvier's great order Passeres. The common starling, Sturnus vulgaris, is found in almost all parts of Europe; it is between eight and nine inches in length, and weighs about three ounces. The bill is nearly an inch and a half long; the colour is blackish, with blue, purplish, or cupreous reflections, and each feather is marked at the extremity with a whitish triangular speck, and these specks are the stars from which the name of the bird is derived.

The starlings are partly migratory and partly not. In the breeding season they are distributed in pairs, but in the winter season they assemble in flocks. They are often found on the tops of towers along with the pigeons; they nestle in holes of lonely walls, crannies of rocks, and openings in hollow trees. They are often kept in cages, and may be taught to whistle some tunes, and even to pronounce words and sentences.—Starlings or sterlings, in arch., an assemblage of piles driven round the piers of a bridge to give it support. They are sometimes called stills.

STÄRLIT, a. Lighted by stars.

STÄR-MÖN"GER, n. An astrologer; a quack.

STÄR"OST, n. In Poland, a feudatory; one who holds a fief.

STÄR"OSTY, n. A fief; an estate held by feudal service.

STÄR-PÄVED, a. [star and paved.] Studded with stars.

The road of heaven star-paved. Milton.

STÄR-PROOF, a. [star and proof.] Impervious to the light of the stars; as, a star-proof elm.

STÄR-READ,† n. [star and read.] Doctrine of the stars; astronomy.

STÄRRED, pp. or a. [from star.] Adorned or studded with stars; as, the starred queen of Ethiopia.—2. Influenced in fortune by the stars.

My third comfort,

Starr'd most unluckily. Shak.

The powers of their minds are starved by disuse. [Unusual.] Locke.

STARVED, pp. Killed with hunger; subdued by hunger; rendered poor by want.—2. Killed by cold.—3. In her., a term used to denote a branch of a tree when stripped of all its leaves.

STARVELING, a. (stärbling.) Hungry; lean; pining with want.

STARVELING, n. (stärbling.) An animal or plant that is made thin, lean, and weak through want of nutriment.

And thy poor starveling bountifully fed.

Donne.

STARVING, ppr. Perishing with hunger; killing with hunger; rendering lean and poor by want of nourishment.—2. Perishing with cold; killing with cold.

STÄR-WÖRT, n. The popular name of three British annual plants of the genus Callitriche; known also by the name of water star-wort. They are obscure floating plants, of no known use.—Sea star-wort, a British herbaceous plant of the genus Aster, the A. tripolium. It has large purple flowers with a yellow disk, and grows in salt-marshes.

STÄTANT, ppr. In her., a term for beasts when borne in a standing position, with all four legs upon the ground; as, a lion stättant.

Stättant.

STÄTARY, † a. [from stätt.] Fixed; settled.

STÄTE, n. [L. status, from sto, to stand, to be fixed; Fr. état. Hence G. stät, fixed; stätt, place, abode, stead; stätt, state; stätt, a town or city; D. stätt, condition, state; stätt, a city, Sans.

stidaha, to stand. State is fixedness or standing.] 1. Condition; the circumstances of a being or thing at any given time. These circumstances may be internal, constitutional, or peculiar to the being, or they may have relation to other beings. We say, the body is in a sound state, or it is in a weak state; or it has just recovered from a feeble state. The state of his health is good. The state of his mind is favourable for study. So we say, the state of public affairs calls for the exercise of talents and wisdom. In regard to foreign nations, our affairs are in a good state. So we say, single state, and married state.

Declare the past and present state of things. Dryden.

2. Modification of any thing.

Keep the state of the question in your eye. Boyle.

3. Crisis; stationary point; height; point from which the next movement is regression.

Tumors have their several degrees and times, as beginning, augment, state and declination. Wiseman.

4. † Estate; possession. [See ESTATE.]

5. A political body, or body politic; the whole body of people united under one government, whatever may be the form of the government.

Municipal law is a rule of conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state.

Blackstone.

More usually the word signifies a political body governed by representatives; a commonwealth; as, the States of Greece; the States of America. In this sense, state has sometimes more immediate reference to the government, sometimes to the people or community. Thus when we say, the state has made provision for the paupers, the word has reference to the government or legislature; but when we say, the state is taxed to support paupers, the word refers to the whole people or community.—6. State or estate, any body of men united by profession, or constituting a community of a particular character, who partake either directly or by representation in the government of their country. In European governments the whole body politic is divided into states or estates. The number of these has varied in different countries. In France and most other feudal kingdoms, there have been three estates, nobles, clergy, commonalty, the last of which is called tiers état, (third estate). In Sweden there are four estates, nobility, clergy, citizens, peasants. In modern monarchical constitutions, the English system of government, by king, lords, and commons, or analogous powers, has prevailed. Church and state, the ecclesiastical, and civil communities, as distinct from each other.—7. Rank; condition; quality; as, the state of honour.—8. Pomp; appearance of greatness.

In state the monarchs march'd. Dryden.
Where least of state, there most of love is shown. Dryden.

9. Dignity; grandeur.

She instructed him how he should keep state, yet with a modest sense of his misfortunes. Bacon.

10. A seat of dignity.

This chair shall be my state. Shak.

11. A canopy; a covering of dignity.

His high throne, under state
Of richest texture spread. [Unusual.] Milton.

12. † A person of high rank.—13. The principal persons in a government.

The bold design

Pleas'd highly those infernal states.

Milton.

14. The bodies that constitute the legislature of a country; as, the states general.—15. Joined with another word, it denotes public, or what belongs to the community or body politic; as, state affairs; state policy.

STATE, v. t. To set; to settle. [See STATED.]—2. To express the particulars of any thing in writing; to set down in detail or in gross; as, to state an account; to state debt and credit; to state the amount due.—3. To express the particulars of any thing verbally; to represent fully in words; to narrate, to recite. The witnesses stated all the circumstances of the transaction. They are enjoined to state all the particulars. It is the business of the advocate to state the whole case. Let the question be fairly stated.

STATE'-CRAFT, n. Statesmanship. [In contempt.]

STATE-CRIM'NAL, n. A political offender.

STATED, pp. Expressed or represented; told; recited.—2. a. Settled; established; regular; occurring at regular times; not occasional; as, stated hours of business.—3. Fixed; established; as, a stated salary.

STATEDLY, adv. Regularly; at certain times; not occasionally. It is one of the distinguishing marks of a good man, that he statedly attends public worship.

STATELESS, a. Without pomp.

STÄTELIER, a. More lofty or majestic.

STÄTELINESS, n. [from stately.] Grandeur; loftiness of mien or manner; majestic appearance; dignity.

For stateliness and majesty, what is comparable to a horse? More.

2. Appearance of pride; affected dignity.

STÄTELY, a. Lofty; dignified; majestic; as, stately manners; a stately gait.—2. Magnificent; grand; as, a stately edifice; a stately dome; a stately pyramid.—3. Elevated in sentiment.

STÄTELY, adv. Majestically; loftily.

STÄTEMENT, n. The act of stating, reciting, or presenting verbally or on paper.—2. A series of facts or particulars expressed on paper; as, a written statement.—3. A series of facts verbally recited; recital of the circumstances of a transaction; as, a verbal statement.

STÄTE-MÖNGER, n. [state and monger.] One versed in politics, or one that dabbles in state affairs.

STÄTE-PA'PER, n. A paper relating to the political interests or government of a state.

STÄTE-PRIS'ON, n. A jail for political offenders only.—A prison or penitentiary in one of the United States.

STÄTE PRIS'ONER, n. One confined for a political offence.

STÄTER, n. One who states.—2. Another name of the daric, an ancient silver coin, weighing about four Attic drachms, value three shillings sterling. The Attic gold stater, which was in general circulation in the republican times of Greece, weighed two drachms, and its value was estimated at twenty silver drachms, or 16s. 3d. of our money, but the value of the stater varied greatly in different states. The term stater was also applied to weight, meaning apparently, any standard of weight.

STATE-ROOM, n. [state and room.] A magnificent room in a palace or great house.—2. An apartment for lodging in a ship's cabin.

STATES, n. plur. Nobility. [See STATE]—States General, in French history, the assembly of the three orders of the kingdom, viz. the clergy, the nobility, and the third estate or commonalty. But the term is generally understood of the estates of the kingdom of the Netherlands, which at present consist of two chambers, and are called States General to distinguish them from the states of the several provinces.—States of the Church, the pope's dominions in Italy.

STATESMAN, n. [state and man.] A man versed in the arts of government; usually, one eminent for political abilities; a politician.—2. A small landholder. [Local.]—3. One employed in public affairs.

STATESMANLIKE, a. Having the manner or wisdom of statesmen.

STATESMANSHIP, n. The qualifications or employments of a statesman.

STATESWOMAN, n. A woman who meddles in public affairs. [In contempt.]

STATE-TRIAL, n. A trial of a person or persons for political offences.

STATIC, } a. [See STATICS.] RE-STATICAL, } relating to the science of weighing bodies; as, a static balance or engine.—2. Pertaining to statics, or the science of forces in equilibrium; as, static pressure.

STATICE, n. Thrift, a genus of plants of the class Pentandria, and order Pentagynia, Linn.; nat. order Plumbaginaceæ. The species are perennial herbs, mostly natives of the South of Europe. Five belong to Britain. S. armeria, (or Armeria maritima), common thrift, or sea gillyflower, grows on muddy sea shores, among rocks by the sea side, and upon tops of our highest mountains. It has heads of flowers of a rose colour. S. limonium, spreading-spiked thrift or sea lavender, grows on the muddy sea shores and salt marshes of England and Ireland; rare in Scotland. It has blue flowers, and is used as edgings to flower borders. Many of the statics are amongst the most lovely herbaceous plants known, and are therefore much prized as garden plants.

STATICS, n. [Fr. statique; L. statice; Gr. staticon.] 1. That branch of mechanics which considers bodies as acted on by forces which are in equilibrium, or which produce equilibrium; or it has for its object the investigation of the conditions under which several forces or pressures applied to a rigid body mutually destroy each other. It thus stands opposed to dynamics, in which the effects of forces producing motion are investigated. Statics is subdivided into the statics of rigid and of fluid bodies, the latter being called hydrostatics. The two great propositions in statics are that of the lever, and that of the composition of forces, but it also comprehends all the doctrines of the excitement and propagation of forces or pressures, through the parts of solid bodies by which the energies of machines are produced. It teaches us the intensities and directions of all such pressures; and how much remains at the working point of a machine unbalanced by resistance. It comprehends every circumstance which influences the stability of heavy bodies; the investigation and properties of the centre of gravity; the theory of the construction of arches, vaults, and domes; the attitudes of animals. It also comprehends the strength of materials, and the principles of construction, so as to make the proper adjustment of strength and strain in every part of a machine, edifice, or structure of any kind.—2. The science which considers the weights of bodies.—3. In med., a kind of epileptics, or persons seized with epilepsy.

STATING, n. An act of making a statement; a statement.

STATION, n. [Fr. from L. statio, from sto, status; It. stazione; Sp. estacion.] 1. The act of standing.

Their manner was to stand at prayer... on which their meetings for that purpose received the name of stations.† Hooker.
2. A state of rest.

All progression is performed by drawing on or impelling forward that was before in station or at quiet. [Rare.] Brown.

3. The spot or place where one stands, particularly where a person habitually stands, or is appointed to remain for a time; as, the station of a sentinel. Each detachment of troops had its station.—4. Post assigned; office; the part or department of public duty which a person is appointed to perform. The chief magistrate occupies the first political station in a nation. Other officers fill subordinate stations. The office of bishop is an ecclesiastical station of great importance. STAT'URED, a. Arrived at full stature. [Little used.]

STAT'US, n. [L.] A standing; state, circumstance, rank, or condition.—Statu quo; the condition in which the thing or things were at first; as, a treaty between belligerents, which leaves each party in statu quo ante bellum; that is, with the same possessions and rights they had before the war began.

STAT'UTABLE, a. [from statute.] Made or introduced by statute; proceeding from an act of the legislature; as, a statutable provision or remedy.—2. Made or being in conformity to statute; as, statutable measures.

STAT'UTABLY, adv. In a manner agreeable to statute.

STAT'UTE, n. [Fr. statut; L. statutum; from statuo, to set.] 1. An act of parliament made by the king by and with the advice of the lords and commons. Statutes are either public or private; but the term is usually restricted to public acts, of a general and permanent character. Statutes are said to be declaratory of the law as it stood before their passing; remedial, to correct defects in the common law, and penal, imposing prohibitions and penalties.—Statutes of the realm, a body of enactments contained in three volumes, preserved in the court of exchequer, and now in the custody of the master of the rolls. One volume contains the statutes passed before the beginning of the reign of Edward III.; and the other two, those from 1 Edward III. to 7 Henry VIII., all very fairly written.—Statutes of limitation, statutes for establishing the limitations of actions in the English law. Statutes are distinguished from common law. The latter owes its binding force to the principles of justice, to long use, and the consent of a nation. The former owe their binding force to a positive command or declaration of the supreme power. Statute is commonly applied to the acts of a legislative body consisting of representatives. In monarchies not having representative bodies, the laws of the sovereign are called edicts, decrees, ordinances, rescripts, &c.—2. A special act of the supreme power, of a private nature, or intended to operate only on an individual or company.—3. The act of a corporation or of its founder, intended as a permanent rule or law; as, the statutes of a university.

—Statute labour, in Scots law, is the amount of work appointed by law to be furnished annually for the repair of highways not turnpike. The joint board of justices of peace and commissioners of supply, has full powers in determining the roads to be repaired, and in apportioning and commuting statute labour.

STAT'UTE-BOOK, n. A register of laws or legislative acts.

STAT'UTE-FAIR, n. A fair held by regular legal appointment, in contradistinction to one authorized only by use and wont.

STAT'UTE-MERCHANT, n. In English law, a bond of record pursuant to the Stat. 13 Edward I. acknowledged before one of the clerks of the statutes-merchant and the mayor or chief warden of London, or before certain persons appointed for the purpose; on which, if not paid at the day, an execution may be awarded against the body, lands, and goods of the obligor.

STAT'UTE-STAPLE, n. A bond of record acknowledged before the mayor of the staple, by virtue of which the creditor may forthwith have execution against the body, lands, and goods of the debtor, on non-payment.

STAT'UTORY, a. Enacted by statute; depending on statute for its authority; as, a statutory provision or remedy.

STAY, v. i. pret. Staid, for Stayed. [Ir. stadam; Sp. estay, a stay of a ship; estada, stay, a remaining; estiar, to stop; Port. estada, abode; estaes, stays of a ship; estear, to stay, to prop; W. ystad, state; ystadu, to stay or remain; Fr. etai, etayer. This word seems to be connected with state, and if so, is a derivative from the root of L. sto, to stand. But from the orthography of this word in the Irish, Spanish, and Portuguese, and of steti, the preterit of sto, in Latin, may be the elementary word stad or stat. The sense is to set, stop, or hold. It is to be observed further, that stay may be easily deduced from the G. and D. stag, a stay;

stay-segel, stay-sail; W. tagu, to stop.]
 1. To remain; to continue in a place; to abide for any indefinite time. Do you stay here, while I go to the next house. Stay here a week. We staid at the Hotel Montmorenci in Paris.

STEALTH'FULNESS, n. State of being stealthful.

STEALTH'ILY, adv. By stealth. STEALTHY, a. (stelth'y.) Done by stealth; clandestinely; unperceived.

Now wither'd murder with his stealthy pace

Moves like a ghost.

STEAM, n. [Sax. steam, stem; D. stoom.] 1. The vapour of water; or the elastic aëriform fluid generated by heating water to the boiling point.

When water in an open vessel is heated to the temperature of 212°, or to the boiling point, globules of steam are formed at the bottom, and rise to the surface; and the continued application of heat, even though increased indefinitely, will only cause a more copious and rapid formation of steam, and will finally evaporate the whole of the water, without raising the temperature of either. In this case, all the heat which enters into the water is solely employed in converting it into steam of the temperature of boiling water. But if the water be confined in a strong close vessel, both it and the steam which it produces may be brought to any temperature; and as steam at 212° occupies nearly 1700 times the space of the water from which it is generated, it follows that, when thus confined, it must exercise an enormous elastic or expansive force; which may also be shown to be proportional to its temperature. When the temperature is considerably above 212°, the steam formed under such circumstances is termed high pressure steam; at 212° it is termed low pressure steam, and its pressure is equal to that of the atmosphere, or 15 lbs. on the square inch. Steam in its perfect state is transparent, and constantly invisible; but when it has been deprived of part of its heat by coming into contact with cold air, it suddenly assumes a cloudy appearance, and is condensed into water. Hence appears another important property of steam, its condensibility; so that whenever cold is applied to it, it suddenly returns to the liquid state, and thus can be employed to produce a vacuum. From the properties above briefly adverted to, steam constitutes an invaluable agent for the production of mechanical force, as exemplified in the vast and multiplied uses of the steam-engine. Steam is also employed as an agent in distributing the heat used for warming buildings, in heating baths, evaporating solutions, distilling, brewing, drying, dyeing, and even for domestic cookery. It is also the means of extracting wholesome and nutritious food from most unpromising and unpalatable substances.—2. In popular usage, the visible moist vapour which rises from water, and from all moist and liquid bodies, when subjected to the action of heat; as, the steam of boiling water, of malt, of a tan-bed, &c. This is properly water in a minute state of subdivision arising from the condensation of steam.

STEAM, v. i. To rise or pass off in vapour by means of heat; to fume.

Let the crude humours dance
In heated brass, steaming with fire intense.

2. To send off visible vapour. Ye mists that rise from steaming lake.

3. To pass off in visible vapour. The dissolved amber...steamed away into the air.

STEAM, v. t. To exhale; to evaporate. [Not much used.]—2. To expose to steam; to apply steam to for softening, dressing, or preparing; as, to steam cloth; to steam potatoes instead of boiling them; to steam food for cattle.

STEAM-BOAT, } n. A vessel moved
STEAM-VESSEL, } by the power of a steam-engine acting upon paddle wheels, a screw propeller, or other mechanism for propelling it through the water.

STEAM-BOILER, n. A vessel in which water is converted into steam for the purpose of supplying steam-engines, or for any of the other purposes for which steam is used in the arts, or in domestic economy. Steam-engine boilers are constructed of various forms, the most common being waggon-shaped, egg-shaped, cylindrical, and tubular. The best material for boilers is copper; but wrought-iron-plate is most commonly employed in this country on account of its cheapness.

STEAM-CAR, n. A locomotive car used on railroads.

STEAM-CARRIAGE, n. A name usually applied to a locomotive engine adapted to work on common roads.

STEAM-CASING, n. A vacuity surrounding any vessel into which steam may be admitted.

STEAMED, pp. or a. Exposed to steam; cooked or dressed by steam.

STEAM-ENGINE, n. An engine worked by steam; or an engine in which the mechanical force arising from the elasticity and expansive action of steam, or from its property of rapid condensation, or from the combination of these principles, is made available as a source of motive power in the arts and manufactures, and in locomotion. The invention of the steam-engine, which has exerted such a vast influence upon the state of society in modern times, by the impulse it has given to industry, and the facilities it has afforded for intercourse among men, whether by land or by sea, has been universally ascribed, by the English, to the Marquis of Worcester, who published an account of it about the middle of the 17th century. By the French, the invention has been ascribed to Papin, towards the close of the same century. There can be little doubt, however, that steam was employed as an impelling power, to some small extent, more than thirty years previous to the date of the Marquis of Worcester's invention. The first actual working steam-engine of which there is any record, was invented and constructed by Captain Savery, an Englishman; to whom a patent was granted for it in 1698. This engine was employed to raise water by the expansion and condensation of steam. The steam-engine received great improvements from the hands of Newcomen, Beighton, Blakey, and others. Still, however, it was imperfect and rude in its construction, and was chiefly applied to the draining of mines or the raising of water. The steam-engine was brought to its present high state of perfection by the celebrated James Watt, about the year 1782. The numerous and vital improvements introduced by him, both in the combination of its mechanism, and in the economy of its management, have rendered the steam-engine at once the most powerful, the most easily applied and regulated, and, generally speaking, the least expensive of all prime movers, for impelling machinery of every description. Steam-engines vary much in magnitude, form, and proportions, as well as in the details of the machinery by which the power of the steam is applied. In short, the form of the engine, the arrangement and construction of its parts, its power, &c., depend entirely on the purpose to which it is to be applied, and may be indefinitely diversified. The unjoined illustration represents a sectional elevation of a Portable Condensing Steam-Engine.

steam thus admitted is instantly deprived of its heat, and re-converted into its original form of water, thereby forming a vacuum. Thus it will be seen that, on the communication being opened up between the boiler and either side of the piston, the latter will ascend or descend in the cylinder unimpeded by the resistance of the atmosphere against the other side, and with a force proportional to the pressure of the steam; and as the motions of the steam valve l are regulated by the engine itself, the above action is kept up continuously. The alternating rectilinear motion thus generated within the cylinder is transmitted, by means of a rod attached to the piston, to a strong beam f, f, movable upon a central axis; a system of jointed rods e, e, called the parallel motion, being interposed for the purpose of neutralizing the disturbing action which the circular path of the beam would otherwise exert upon the piston. The reciprocating motion of the beam is now, through the intervention of the connecting rod g, and crank h, converted but if we supposed the condensing apparatus removed, and the waste steam allowed to escape into the atmosphere, it will then be equally applicable to that kind called high-pressure engines, which employ the elastic action of the steam alone. The latter class, on account of their greater simplicity of parts and lightness, are exclusively employed for the purposes of locomotion on railways; while the former, from their superior economy and safety, are generally preferred in this country as stationary engines for driving machinery, and marine engines for propelling steam-boats. The form of the steam-engine is susceptible of an endless variety, according to the purposes to which it is to be applied; its mechanical energy is usually estimated in horse power, [see HORSE POWER] and is proportioned to the pressure of the steam, the area of the piston, and the velocity at which it moves. The stupendous effects which have resulted from the application of the power of steam in recent times, are striking attestations of the immense value of the invention. By the agency of steam, the seas are now navigated in defiance of wind and tide; the earth is made to yield up in lavish abundance its metals and minerals; vast marshes are drained, and land before barren rendered fruitful; communities are brought into closer connection with communities; fresh and inexhaustible sources of wealth and comfort are elicited; new combinations of human industry and ingenuity are brought into requisition; knowledge is widely scattered abroad; distance is lessened by velocity of locomotion; and time itself become more precious. Thus by infinitely enlarging the sphere of useful action to whatsoever was useful before, and by diffusing among millions what previously was attainable only by the few, this agent has wrought a change of aspect in kingdoms, in commerce, and in the individual relations of society, to an extent so wide, and in a time so brief, that the history of the world bears no parallel to it in influence.

STEAMER, n. A vessel propelled by steam; a steam-ship.—2. A vessel in which articles are subjected to the action of steam, as in washing or cookery.

STEAM-GAUGE, n. An instrument for indicating the pressure within a steam-boiler, by means of a bent tube partially filled with mercury, one end of which springs from the boiler, while the other is exposed to the air; so that the steam, by its pressure, raises the mercury in the straight limb of the tube to a height above the common level, proportioned to that pressure. An iron float and index are usually added for the convenience of observation, as shewn in the annexed figure.

Steam-Gauge.

STEAM-GOVERNOR. See GOVERNOR.

STEAM-GUN, n. A contrivance for projecting balls or other projectiles used in warlike operations, by means Portable Condensing Steam-Engine.

The steam cylinder; h, the piston; c, the upper steam port or passage; d, the lower steam port; e, e, the parallel motion; f, f, the beam; g, the connecting rod; h, the crank; i, i, the fly-wheel; k, k, the eccentric and its rod for working the steam valve; l, the steam valve and valve casing; m, the throttle valve; n, the condenser; o, the injection cock; p, the air-pump; q, the hot well; r, the snifting-valve, for creating a vacuum in the condenser, previous to starting the engine; s, the feed pump for supplying the boiler; t, the cold water pump for supplying the condenser cistern; u, the governor.

The construction and action of the steam-engine will be readily understood from the above sketch. The pipe which conveys the steam from the boiler opens into the part marked l, which incloses a movable valve by means of which the steam may be alternately admitted into the cylinder a, by the upper port, c, and lower, d; between these points the piston b works steam tight. The valve l is so contrived, that while it allows steam to pass into the cylinder through one of the ports, it shall at the same time open a communication between the opposite side of the piston and the condenser n, which is a hollow vessel kept constantly immersed in cold water, a portion of which is admitted into it by the injection cock, o; consequently the into a circular or rotatory motion, which is rendered continuous and uniform by the fly-wheel i, to the axis of which the machinery to be impelled is connected. The air-pump p, for withdrawing the vapour and water from the condenser; the feed pump s, for supplying the boilers, and the cold water pump t, for supplying the condenser cistern, are all worked by rods from the beam; and the governor u, for maintaining uniformity of motion, is driven by a band from the crank shaft. The above description refers more immediately to that class of steam-engines called low pressure, or condensing engines, in which the power derived from the rapid condensation of the steam is made available in combination with that due to its elasticity; of steam in place of gunpowder. It bears some analogy to the air-gun. The invention is due to Mr. Jacob Perkins, but it has never been submitted to the test of actual experience either in military or naval operations, and it requires too much extraneous apparatus to be conveniently movable.

STEAMING, ppr. Exposing to steam; cooking or dressing by steam; preparing for cattle by steam, as roots.

STEAM-NAVIGATION, n. The art of applying the power of steam to the propulsion of boats and vessels in general, both for inland communication by rivers and lakes, and for the general purposes of national commerce on the seas and oceans.

STEAM-PACKET, n. A packet or vessel propelled by steam.

STEAM-PIPE, n. Any pipe used for conveying steam from a boiler to a steam-engine, or through a workshop for the purpose of heating, or for any other purpose.

STEAM-PLOUGH, n. A plough worked by a steam-engine instead of horses. Steam-ploughs have been wrought with success upon bog land.

STEAM-SHIP, n. A ship propelled by steam.

STEAM-TUG, n. A steamer used in towing ships.

STEAM-VESSEL, n. A vessel propelled through the water by the force of steam. [See STEAM-BOAT.]

STEAM-WHEEL, n. Another name for a rotary steam-engine.

STEAM-WHISTLE, n. A contrivance attached to locomotives for giving warning of the starting of the train, of its approach to a tunnel or station, &c. The annexed figure represents a section of a steam-whistle; a, a, is a tube fixed to the top of the boiler, and opening into its interior; it is commanded by a stop-cock, e; the tube is surmounted by a hollow piece b, perforated with holes, and surrounded by a thin brass cup c, c; the respective diameters of the piece b, and cup c, being so adjusted as to leave a very narrow orifice all round. Another thin brass cup d, is fixed in an inverted position at a short distance above the upper surface of the parts b and c, so as to present a sharp edge exactly opposite the orifice above mentioned. On opening the stop-cock, e, the steam, rushing with great violence through the circular orifice, encounters the edge of the cup, c, and thereby produces a loud and shrill sound which may be heard at the distance of several miles.

Steam-Whistle.

STE'ARATE, n. A compound formed by the union of stearic acid with a salifiable base. The neutral stearates of the alkalies are perfect soaps.

STEARIC ACID, n. A bibasic acid, perhaps the most important and most abundant of the fatty acids. It exists in combination with glycerine, as stearine, in beef and mutton fat, and in several vegetable fats, such as the butter of cacao. It is obtained from stearine by saponification, and also from mutton suet by a similar process. Stearic acid is in the form of brilliant white scaly crystals; it is inodorous, tasteless, insoluble in water, but soluble in alcohol and ether. It burns like wax, and is used in the formation of improved candles. It is composed of 68 equivalents of carbon, 66 of hydrogen, and 5 of oxygen. It forms compounds with the alkalies, earths, and metallic oxides, which are called stearates.

STE'ARINE, n. [Gr. στειν, suet.] The chief ingredient of suet and tallow, or the harder ingredient of animal fats, oleine or elaine being the softer one. It is obtained from mutton suet, melted with ten times its weight of ether in a water-bath. It may also be obtained by pressing tallow between hot plates, and afterwards dissolving in hot ether, which on cooling deposits the stearine. It has a pearly lustre, is soft to the touch, but not greasy. It is insoluble in water, but soluble in hot alcohol and ether. It is separable into stearic acid and glycerine, and when boiled with alkalies, is saponified; that is, the stearic acid combines with the alkali, forming soap, and glycerine is separated. When melted it resembles wax.

STE'ARONE, n. A substance obtained by the partial decomposition of stearic acid. It is a volatile liquid, and seems to be stearic acid deprived of two equivalents of carbonic acid.

STEAROPTENE, n. A crystalline substance contained in many essential oils.

STE'ATITE, n. [Gr. στειν, στειντος, fat.] Soapstone; so called from its smooth or unctuous feel; a subspecies of rhomboidal mica. It is of two kinds, the common, and the pagodite or lardstone. It is sometimes confounded with talc, to which it is allied. It is a compact stone, white, green of all shades, gray, brown or marbled, and sometimes herborized by black dendrites. It is found in metalliferous veins, with the ores of copper, lead, zinc, silver, and tin. It is a hydrated silicate of magnesia and alumina. It is used in the manufacture of porcelain, in polishing marble, &c.; as the basis of cosmetic powders; in the composition of crayons, &c.

STEATITIC, a. Pertaining to soapstone, of the nature of steatite, or resembling it.

STE'ATOCELE, n. [Gr. στειν, fat. and κελη, a tumour.] A tumour of the serotum, containing fat.

STEATOMA, n. [Gr.] A lupia or wen, i. e. an encysted tumour, containing matter like suet.

STEATOMATOUS, a. Of the nature of a steatoma.

STED, STED'FAST. See STEAD.

STEE, n. A ladder.

STED, n. [Sax. stede. Qn. stud. a stone-horse.] A horse, or a horse for state or war. [This word is not much used in common discourse. It is used in poetry and descriptive prose, and is elegant.]

Stout are our men, and warlike are our steeds. Waller.

STEEK, or STEIK, v. t. [Teut. stechen.] To close, to shut, to stop, or choke up. [Scotch.]

STEEK, or STEIK, v. t. [Sax. stican, or stician.] To pierce with a sharp pointed instrument; to stab; to stitch or sew with a needle; to fix; to fasten. As a noun, a stitch, or the act of stitching with a needle. [Scotch.]

STEEKAN, n. In Holland, a wine measure of about five gallons.

STEEL, n. [Sax. stye; G. stahl; probably from setting, fixing, hardness; G. stellen.] 1. Iron combined with a small but definite portion of carbon. It is called, in chemistry, carburet of iron. The relative proportions of iron and carbon vary in steel of different qualities; but in that used for ordinary purposes, the carbon rarely exceeds two per cent., and is generally below it. The best steel is manufactured from Swedish and Russian bar-iron, by a process called cementation. Steel is less malleable than iron, but it is harder, more sonorous, and elastic, susceptible of a higher polish, and less liable to rust. When heated to redness, it can be hammered into various forms, and it can also be welded to another piece of steel or iron. Steel formed from bar-iron by cementation is called blistered steel, from its surface acquiring a blistered character in the process. When blistered steel is rolled or beaten down into bars, it is called shear-steel, and if it be melted, cast into ingots, and again rolled out into bars, it forms cast-steel, which, when well prepared, is superior to the other kinds of steel. — Natural, or German-steel, is an impure and variable kind of steel procured from cast-iron, or obtained at once from the ore. The natural steel yielded by cast-iron, manufactured in the refining houses, is known by the general name of furnace-steel, and that which has only been once treated with a refining furnace is particularly called rough-steel. The peculiarity of steel, upon which its high value in the arts in a great measure depends, is its property of becoming hard after being heated to redness, and then suddenly cooled by being plunged into cold water, and of being again softened down to any requisite degree, by the application of a certain temperature. This process is called tempering. It is found that the higher the temperature to which steel is raised, and the more sudden the cooling, the greater is the hardness; and hence, any degree of hardness can be given to steel which is required for the various purposes to which it is applied. According to the degree of hardness to which steel is tempered, it assumes various colours, and formerly these colours served as guides to the workman. Now, however, a thermometer, with a bath of mercury or oil, is employed, and the operation of tempering is performed with a much greater degree of certainty. The uses of steel in forming various kinds of instruments, edge-tools, springs, &c., are well known.—Indian-steel. [See WOOTZ.]—2. Figuratively, weapons; particularly offensive weapons, swords, spears, and the like.

While doubting thus he stood, Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

3. Extreme hardness; as, heads or hearts of steel.—4. A kind of steel file for sharpening knives.

STEEL, a. Made of steel; as, a steel plate or buckle.

STEEL, v. t. To overlay, point, or edge with steel; as, to steel the point of a sword; to steel a razor; to steel an axe.—2. To make hard or extremely hard.

O God of battles, steel my soldiers' hearts. Shak.

Lies well steel'd with weighty arguments. Shak.

3. To make hard; to make insensible or obdurate; as, to steel the heart against pity; to steel the mind or heart against reproof or admonition.

STEEL-BOW GOODS, n. In Scots law, goods consisting in corn, cattle, straw, implements of husbandry, delivered by the landlord to his tenant, by means of which the tenant is enabled to stock and labour the farm, and in consideration of which he becomes bound to return articles equal in quantity and quality, at the expiration of the lease. The origin of the term is uncertain.

STEEL-CAP, n. Armour for the head; a head-piece.

STEEL-CLAD, a. Clad or armed with steel.

STEELED, pp. Pointed or edged with steel; hardened; made insensible.

STEEL ENGRAVING, n. The art of engraving upon steel plates, for the purpose of producing prints or impressions in ink, upon paper and other substances.—2. The design engraved upon the steel plate.—3. Collog., an impression or print taken from the engraved steel plate.

STEELE, n. In ship-building, the foremost or aftmost plank in a strake, which is dropped short of the stem or stern-post.

STEEL-GIRT, a. Girded with steel.

STEEL-HEARTED, a. Having the heart hard as steel.

STEELINESS, n. [from steely.] Great hardness.

STEEING, ppr. Pointing or edging with steel; hardening; making insensible or unfeeling.

STEEL-PEN, n. A pen made of steel.

STEEL-PLATED, a. Plated with steel.

STEEL-TRAP, n. A trap, set in grounds to catch predators.

STEELY, a. Made of steel; consisting of steel.

Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance. Shak.

Around his shop the steely sparkles flew. Gay.

2. Hard; firm.

That she would unarm her noble heart of that steely resistance against the sweet blows of love. Sydney.

STEELYARD, n. [steel and yard.] The Roman balance; an instrument for weighing bodies, consisting of a rod or bar marked with notches, designating the number of pounds and ounces, and a weight which is movable along this bar, and which is made to balance the weight of the body by being removed at a proper distance from the fulcrum.

Steelyard.

The principle of the steelyard is that of the lever; where an equilibrium is produced, when the products of the weights on opposite sides into their respective distances from the fulcrum, are equal to one another. Hence a less weight is made to indicate a greater, by being removed to a greater distance from the fulcrum. For weighing heavy loads, the steelyard is a convenient instrument, but for smaller weights it is less accurate than the common balance.

STEEN, } † n. A vessel of clay or STEAN, } stone.

STEENING, or STEANING, n. In arch., the brick or stone wall, or lining of a well or cess-pool, the use of which is to prevent the interruption of the surrounding soil.

STEENKIRK, † n. A kind of neckcloth.
STEEP, a. [Sax. steap; allied to steop and dip.] Making a large angle with the plane of the horizon; ascending or descending with great inclination; precipitous; as, a steep hill or mountain; a steep roof; a steep ascent; a steep declivity.

STEEP, n. A precipitous place, hill, mountain, rock, or ascent; any elevated object which slopes with a large angle to the plane of the horizon; a precipice.

We had on each side rocks and mountains broken into a thousand irregular steeps and precipices. Addison.

STEEP, v. t. [probably formed on the root of dip.] To soak in a liquid; to macerate; to imbue; to keep anything in a liquid till it has thoroughly imbibed it, or till the liquor has extracted the essential qualities of the substance. Thus cloth is steeped in dye or other liquid in bleaching or dyeing. But plants and drugs are steeped in water, wine, and the like, for the purpose of tincturing the liquid with their qualities.

STEEP, n. A liquid for steeping grain or seeds; also, a runnet bag. [Local.]

STEEPED, pp. Soaked; macerated; imbed.

STEPPER, n. A vessel, vat, or cistern in which things are steeped.

STEEPING, ppr. Soaking; macerating.

STEEPLE, n. [Sax. stapel, stypel.] A lofty erection attached to a church and generally intended to contain its bells. Steeple is a general term applied to every appendage of this description, whether in the form of a tower or a spire; or, as is usual, a tower surmounted by a spire. Steeples are attached to other buildings besides churches, such as town-halls, &c. They, far from steeples and their sacred sound. Dryden.

STEEPLE-CHASE, n. A fox hunt, in which the sportsmen agree to follow the fox directly over the country, regardless of all obstructions, as hedges, ditches, rivers, &c., or even steeples! —Horse-races are frequently got up on the same plan, and are also termed steeple-chases.

STEEPLED, a. Furnished with a steeple; adorned with steeples or towers.

STEEPLE-HOUSE, † n. A church; a term of contempt for an established church, used sometimes by dissenters.

STEEPLY, adv. With steepness; with precipitous declivity.

STEEPNESS, n. The state of being steep; precipitous declivity; as, the steepness of a hill, a bank, or a roof.

STEEPY, a. Having a steep or precipitous declivity; as, steepy crags; a poetical word.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb

The steepy cliffs. Dryden.

STEER, n. [Sax. steor, styre; D. stier.] A young male of the ox kind or common ox. [See Ox.]

With solemn pomp then sacrific'd a steer. Dryden.

STEER, v. t. [Sax. steoran, to steer, to correct or chide, to discipline; G. steuern, to hinder, restrain, repress, to curb, to steer, to pilot, to aid, help, support. The verb is connected with or derived from steuer, a rudder, a helm, aid, help, subsidy, impost, tax, contribution. D. stieren, to steer, to send, and stuur, a helm; stuuren, to steer, to send; Dan. styrer, to govern, direct, manage, steer, restrain, moderate, curb, stem, hinder; styre, a helm, rudder, or tiller; styr, moderation, a tax or assessment; Sw. styra, to steer, to restrain; styre, a rudder or helm; Arm. stur, id.; Ir. stiuram. We see the radical sense is to strain, variously applied, and this coincides with the root of starch and stark; stiffness being from stretching.] I. To direct; to govern; particularly, to direct and govern the course of a ship by the movements of the helm. Hence,—2. To direct; to guide; to show the way or course to.

That with a staff his feeble steps did steer. Spenser.

STEER, v. i. To direct and govern a ship or other vessel in its course. Formerly seamen steered by the stars; they now steer by the compass.

A ship...where the wind Veers oft, as oft so steers and shifts her sail. Milton.

2. To be directed and governed; as, a ship steers with ease.—3. To conduct one's steers; to take or pursue a course or way.

STEER, † n. A rudder or helm.

STEER, v. t. To stir; to touch; to meddle with so as to injure. [Scotch.]

STEEERAGE, n. The act or practice of directing and governing in a course; as, the steerage of a ship. [In this sense we believe the word is now little used.] 2. In seamen's lan., the effort of a helm, or its effect on the ship; or, the peculiar manner in which an individual ship is affected by the helm.—3. In a ship, an apartment forward of the great cabin, from which it is separated by a bulk-head or partition, or an apartment in the fore part of a ship for passengers. In ships of war it serves as a hall or antechamber to the great cabin. In steam vessels, the great cabin and steerage are separated by the whole space occupied by the machinery, &c.—4. The part of a ship where the tiller traverses.—5. Direction; regulation.

He that hath the steerage of my course. [Little used.] Shak.

6. Regulation or management. You raise the honour of the peerage, Proud to attend you at the steerage. Swift.

7. That by which a course is directed. Here he hung on high, The steerage of his wings. Dryden.

[Steerage, in the general sense of direction or management, is in popular use, but by no means an elegant word.]

STEEERAGE-WAY, n. In seamen's lan., that degree of progressive movement of a ship, which renders her governable by the helm.

STEEERED, pp. Directed and governed in a course; guided; conducted.

STEEERER, n. One that steers; a pilot. [Little used.]

STEERING, ppr. Directing and governing in a course, as a ship; guiding; conducting.

STEERING, n. The act or art of directing and governing a ship or other vessel in her course, by the movements of the helm, or by applying its efforts to regulate her course as she advances; the act of guiding or managing.

STEERING-WHEEL, n. The wheel by which the rudder of a ship is turned and the ship is steered.

STEERLESS, † a. Having no steer or rudder.

STEERSMAN, n. [steer and man.] One that steers; the helmsman of a ship. The steersman manages the helm by means of the steering-wheel, which is connected with the rudder.

STEERSMATE, † n. [steer and mate.] One who steers; a pilot.

STEEVE, n. In seamen's lan., the angle which the bowsprit makes with the horizon.—2. A long heavy spar, with a place to fix a block at one end, and used in stowing certain kinds of cargo, which need to be driven in close.

STEEVE, v. t. In ship-building, to give the bowsprit a certain angle of elevation, which is generally from 26° to 30°.

STEEVE, a. [Sax. stife, stiff, inflexible.] Firm, compacted, not easily bent or broken. [Scotch.]

STEEVING, n. In seamen's lan., the angle of elevation which a ship's bowsprit makes with the horizon.

STEG, n. [Ice. stegge.] A gander. [Local.]

STEGANOGRAPHIST, n. [Gr. στεγανος, secret, and γραφω, to write.] One who practises the art of writing in cipher.

STEGANOGRAPHY, n. [supra.] The art of writing in ciphers or characters which are not intelligible, except to the persons who correspond with each other.

STEGANOPODS, n. plur. [Gr. στεγανος, covered, and πους, foot.] A family of swimming birds with the four toes connected by the same web.

STEGNOTIC, a. [Gr. στεγνωτικος.] Tending to render costive; or to diminish excretions or discharges generally.

STEGNOTIC, n. A medicine which tends to produce costiveness; one that diminishes excretions or discharges generally.

STEINHEILITE, n. A mineral of a blue colour, a variety of iolite.

STELA, n. [Gr. στελη.] In arch., a small column without base or capital.

STELLE, † n. A stale or handle; a stalk.

STEL'CHITE, n. A fine kind of storax, in larger pieces than the calamite.

STEL'ENE, a. [Gr. στελη, a column.] Columnar.

STEL'LA, n. [L.] A star.

STEL'LAR, } a. [It. stellare; L. stel-
STEL'LLARY, } laris, from stella, a star.] 1. Pertaining to stars; astral; as, stellar virtue; stellar figure.—2. Starry; full of stars; set with stars; as, stellary regions.

STELLARIA, n. Stitch-wort, a genus of plants of the class and order Decandria trigynia, Linn.; nat. order Caryophyllaceae, sect. Alsineae. Most of the species are weeds, which are distributed over all parts of the world. Eight species are found in Britain. They possess no active properties, and few of them are thought worthy of cultivation.—S. holostea, a British species, called greater stitch-wort, is the handsomest plant of the genus. It is often planted in gardens as a border flower, on account of its early delicate white flowers.—S. media is the common chickweed.

STELLA'TÆ, n. In bot. [See GALIACEÆ.]

STEL'LATED, } a. [L. stellatus.] 1.
STEL'LATED, } Resembling a star;
radiated.—2. In bot., stellate or verticillate leaves are when more leaves than two surround the stem in a whorl, or when they radiate like the spokes of a wheel, or like a star. A stellate bristle is when a little star of smaller hairs is affixed to the end; applied also to the stigma. A stellate flower is a radiate flower.

Stellate Leaves.

STELLA'TION, † n. [L. stella, a star.] Radiation of light.

STEL'LED, † a. Starry.

STELLER'IDANS, or STELLER'IDÆ, n. [from Lat. stella, a star.] Star-fishes, or sea-stars; a family of Echinoderms, of which the Linnæan genus Asterias is the type.

STELLIF'EROUS, a. [L. stella, a star, and fero, to produce.] Having or abounding with stars.

STEL'LIFORM, a. [L. stella, star, and form.] Like a star; radiated.

STEL'LIFY, † v. t. To turn into a star.

STEL'LIO, n. [L.] Cuvier's name for a family of Iguanians. The stelliones are those lizards which have, along with the general characters of the Iguanians, the tail surrounded by rings, composed of great scales which are often spiny.

STEL'LION, n. See STALLIO.

STEL'LIONATE, † n. [Fr. stellionat, a cheating; Low L. stellionatus.] In the Roman law, a term used to denote all such crimes in which fraud is an ingredient, as have no special names to distinguish them, and are not defined by any written law; as, when one sells the same thing to two purchasers; when a debtor pledges to his creditors what does not belong to him; substituting base for precious metals; dealing in counterfeit or adulterated goods, &c. In the law of Scotland, the term is applied, either to any crime, which, though indictable, goes under no general denomination, and is punishable arbitrarily; or to any civil delinquency of which fraud is an ingredient; as fraudulent bankruptcy.

STEL'LITE, n. [L. stella, a star.] A name given by some writers to a white stone found on Mount Libanus, containing the lineaments of the star-fish.

—2. A zeolitic mineral, occurring in radiated acicular crystals or fibres, and of a snow-white colour.

STEL'LULAR, a. [L. stella, a star.] Having the appearance of little stars. In nat. hist., having marks resembling stella, or stars. The surface of the tabipora or organ-pipe coral is covered with a green fleshy substance, studded with stellular polypi.

STEL'OCHITE, n. A name given to the osteocolla.

STEOLOG'RAPHY, n. [Gr. στελογραφια; στελη, a pillar, and γραφω, to write.]

The art of writing or inscribing characters on pillars.

STEM, n. [Sax. stenn; G. stamm, stock, stem, race. The Latin has stemma, in the sense of the stock of a family or race. The primary sense is to set, to fix.] 1. The principal body of a tree, shrub, or plant of any kind; the main stock; the firm part which supports the branches; the ascending axis, which grows in an opposite direction to the root or descending axis. The stem is composed of fibrous, spirial, and cellular tissues, arranged in various ways, mostly assuming a cylindrical form, and having a perpendicular direction, and bearing upon it the various parts of the plant. Its form and direction, however, are subject to much variation in particular cases. In regard to internal structure, there are three principal modifications of stems characteristic of the three great natural classes into which the vegetable kingdom is divided, namely, exogens, endogens, and acrogens. [See these terms.] In some plants the stem is so short as to seem to be wanting, the leaves and flower-stalks appearing to spring from the top of the root. In this case, the plant is said to be stemless, (acaulis.) There are also stems, such as the rhizoma and tuber, which being subterranean, have been mistaken for roots. The direction, form, texture, consistency, and clothing of stems, produce an almost endless variety in this organ, of which the principal kinds, however, may be reduced to eight. Of these four are subterranean, namely, the cornus, tuber, rhizoma, and creeping-stem; and four aerial, namely, the stem, trunk, stipe, and culm. To these may be added the runner and sucker. Considered with respect to consistence, a stem may be herbaceous, woody, solid, spongy, succulent, stiff, brittle, &c.; with respect to the divisions, it may be branched, alternately branched, much branched, &c.; with respect to direction, it may be erect, prostrate, procumbent, creeping, reclining, trailing, climbing, twining, &c.; in regard to form, it may be round, compressed, square, angular, jointed, knotted, &c.; in regard to clothing or appendages, the stem may be leafy, naked, scaly, or winged; and in regard to surface, it may be smooth or glabrous, shining or glossy, powdery, scabrous, warty, dotted, spotted, grooved or furrowed, &c.—2. The peduncle of the fructification, or the pedicle of a flower; that which supports the flower or the fruit of a plant; the petiole or leaf-stem.—3. The stock of a family; a race or generation of progenitors; as, a noble stem.

Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem. Tickel.

4. Progeny; branch of a family. This is a stem

Of that victorious stock. Shak.

5. In a ship, a curved piece of timber, to which the two sides of a ship are united at the fore end. The lower end of it is scarfed to the keel, and the bowsprit rests upon its upper end. [D. steven.] The outside of the stem is usually marked with a scale of feet, according to its perpendicular height from the keel. Its use is to ascertain the draught of water at the fore part, when the ship is in preparation for a sea voyage, &c. False stem, that fixed before the right one. When a ship's stem is too flat, so that she cannot keep the wind well, a false stem is put above to remedy the defect.—6. In music, the upright or down-right line added to the head of a note, thus.—7. Any thing resembling the stem of a plant; as the stem of a hydrometer. From stem to stern, is from one end of the ship to the other, or through the whole length.

STEM, v. t. To oppose or resist, as a current; or to make progress against a current. We say, the ship was not able with all her sails to stem the tide. They stem the flood with their erected breasts. Denham.

2. To stop; to check; as a stream or moving force.

At length Erasmus, that great injured name, The glory of the priesthood and the shame, Stem'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age, And drove those holy Vandals off the stage. Pope.

STEM-GLÄSPING, a. Embracing the stem with its base; amplexical; as, a leaf or petiole.

STEM-LEAF, n. A leaf growing from the stem.

STEMLESS, a. Having no stem. A stemless plant is one in which the stem is so short as to appear to be wanting; as in the primrose and hyacinth. Some of the simpler plants have no stem; as the lichens.

STEMMATA, n. pl. [Gr. στεμματα.] The visual organs of certain insects.

STEMMATOPUS, n. [Gr. στεμμα, a crown, or garland, and ος, the eye.] Cuvier's name for a genus of seals, having four superior incisors, and two inferior, the grinders compressed, slightly trilobate, supported by thick roots. Such is the hooded seal (Phoca cristata, Gmelin) from the Arctic ocean. It is seven or eight feet long, and has a piece of loose inflatable skin on the head. This piece of skin is drawn over the eyes when the animal is menaced, at which time the nostrils are inflated like bladders.

Hood Seal (Phoca cristata).

STEMMED, pp. Opposed, as a current; stopped.

STEMMING, ppr. Opposing, as a stream; stopping.

STEMPLE, n. In mining, a cross bar of wood in a shaft.

STEMSON, n. In ships, a piece of curved timber fixed on the after part of the apron inside. The lower end is scarfed into the keelson, and receives the scarf of the stem, through which it is bolted.

STENCH, n. [Sax. stenc, stencg. See STINK.] An ill smell; offensive odour.

STENCH, † v. t. To cause to emit a hateful smell.—2. † To stanch; to stop.

STENCHY, † a. Having an offensive smell.

STENCIL, n. A piece of thin leather or oil cloth used in painting paper hangings. The pattern is cut in the material composing the stencil, which is applied to the surface to be painted. The brush then being brought over the stencil, only the interstices representing the pattern receive the colours.

STENCIL, v. t. To paint or colour in figures with stencils.

STENCILLING, n. A method of painting on walls, with stencils, so as to imitate the figures of paper hangings.

STEND, v. i. [Fr. estendre; It. stendere.] To leap; to spring; to move with elastic force; to walk with a long step or stride. As a noun, a leap; a spring; a long step, or stride. [Scotch.]

STENEOSAURUS, n. [Gr. στενος, narrow, strait, and σαυρα, a lizard.] A genus of saurians, whose fossil remains only are found. They have a long and narrow beak, like the existing Gavia; a species of crocodile.

STENOGRAPHER, n. [Gr. στενος, close, narrow, and γραφο, to write.] One who is skilled in the art of short-hand writing.

STENOGRAPHIC, } a. [supra.]
STENOGRAPHICAL, } Pertaining to the art of writing in short hand; expressing in characters or short hand.

STENOGRAPHER, n. A stenographer.

STENOGRAPHY, n. [supra.] The art of writing in short hand by using abbreviations or characters for whole words. This art has been practised from remote antiquity, and is said to have originated in the hieroglyphics of the Egyptians. To short hand writers we owe full reports of the proceedings of parliament, of public meetings, and of the courts of law. Short hand is also used for taking down sermons, scientific lectures and public speeches, both in parliament and at the bar. The art of stenography, however, is not to be acquired without the diligent application of many months, and it also requires considerable manual dexterity. Numerous systems of stenography have been invented in more recent times, some of them of great simplicity. [See PHONOGRAPHY.]

STENT, for Stint. [See STINT.]

STENT, v. t. [Fr. estendre; L. extendere.] In Scots law, to assess; to tax at a certain rate.

STENT, n. In Scots law, a valuation of property in order to taxation; a taxation; a tax. Stent-master, a person appointed to allocate the stent or tax on the persons liable. Stent-roll, the cess-roll. The word stent, in Scotch, also signifies a task; a piece of work to be performed in a determined time; in which sense it corresponds with the English stint.

STENTOR, n. A person having a very powerful voice.

STENTORIAN, a. [from Stentor.] Extremely loud; as, a stentorian voice.—2. Able to utter a very loud sound; as, stentorian lungs.

STENTOROPHONIC, a. [from Stentor, a herald in Homer, whose voice was as loud as that of fifty other men, and Gr. φωνη, voice.] Speaking or sounding very loud

Of this stentorophonic horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican. Derham.

STEP, v. i. [Sax. stæppan, steppan; D. stæppen; Gr. στήβα. Qu. Russ. stopa, the foot. The sense is to set, as the foot, or more probably to open or part, to stretch or extend.] 1. To move the foot; to advance or recede by a movement of the foot or feet; as, to step forward, or to step backward.—2. To go; to walk a little distance; as, to step to one of the neighbours.—3. To walk gravely, slowly, or resolutely.

Home the swain retreats, His flock before him stepping to the fold. Thomson.

To step forth, to move or come forth.—To step aside, to walk to a little distance; to retire from company.—To step in or into, to walk or advance into a place or state; or to advance suddenly in; John v.—2. To enter for a short time. I just stepped into the house.—3. To obtain possession without trouble; to enter upon suddenly; as, to step into an estate.—To step back, to move mentally; to carry the mind back.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity. Pope.

STEP, v. t. To set, as the foot.—2. In marine language, to fix the foot of a mast in the keel; to erect.—To step a boat's mast, is to erect and secure it in readiness for setting sail.

STEP, n. [Sax. stæp; G. stufe; W. tap, a ledge; tapiaw, to form a step or ledge.] 1. A pace; an advance or movement made by one removal of the foot.—2. One remove in ascending or descending a stair. One of the gradients in a staircase, which is composed of two parts, the tread, or horizontal part, and the riser or vertical part. [See STAIR.]

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot. Wotton.

3. The space passed by the foot in walking or running. The step of one foot is generally five feet; it may be more or less.—4. A small space or distance. Let us go to the gardens; it is but a step.—5. The distance between the feet in walking or running.—6. Gradation; degree. We advance in improvement step by step, or by steps.—7. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterward tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a great step in philosophy. Newton.

8. Footstep; print or impression of the foot; track.—9. Gait; manner of walking. The approach of a man is often known by his step.—10. Proceeding; measure; action.

The reputation of a man depends on the first steps he makes in the world. Pope.

11. The round of a ladder.—12. Steps in the plural, walk; passage.

Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree In this deep forest. Dryden.

13. In ships, a block of wood, or in large ships, a solid platform, upon the keelson, supporting the heel of the mast. In general, any piece of timber having the foot of another fixed upright in it. In mill-work, a species of bearing in which the lower extremity of a vertical shaft revolves.—Step of a lock, the breast wall.—14. The bottom support on which the lower end of an upright shaft or wheel rests.

STER, Sax. steop, from stepan, to deprive, is prefixed to certain words to express a relation by marriage, arising out of orphanage.

STEP-BROTHER, n. A brother-in-law, or by marriage. [An orphan brother.]

STEP-CHILD, n. [step and child.] A son-in-law or daughter-in-law; [a child deprived of its parent.]

STEP-DAME, n. A mother by marriage; [the mother of an orphan or one deprived.]

STEP-DAUGHTER, n. A daughter by marriage; [an orphan daughter.]

STEP-FATHER, n. A father-in-law; a father by marriage only; [the father of an orphan.]

STEP-MOTHER, n. A mother by marriage only; a mother-in-law; [the mother of an orphan.]

STEP-SISTER, n. A sister-in-law, or by marriage; [an orphan sister.]

STEP-SÖN, n. A son-in-law; [an orphan son.] [In the foregoing explanation of step, we have followed Lye.

The D. and G. write stief, and the Swedes styf, before the name; a word which does not appear to be connected with any verb signifying to bereave, and the word is not without some difficulties. If the radical sense of step, a pace, is to part or open, the word coincides with Sax. stapan, to deprive, and in the compounds above, step may imply removal or distance.]

STEP-STONE, n. A stone laid before a door as a stair to rise on in entering the house.

STEPPE, n. In Russ. an uncultivated desert of large extent. [This sense of the Russian word is naturally deducible from Sax. stapan, to deprive.]

STEP'PED, pp. Set; placed; erected; fixed in the keel, as a mast.

STEP'PING, ppr. Moving, or advancing by a movement of the foot or feet; placing; fixing or erecting, as a mast.

STEP'PING, n. The act of walking or running by steps.

STEP'PING-STONE, n. A stone to raise the feet above the dirt and mud in walking.—2. An aid or means by which an end may be accomplished, or an object gained.

STER, in composition, is from the Sax. stera, a director. [See STERE.] It seems primarily to have signified chief, principal or director, as in the L. minister, chief servant; but in other words, as in spinster, we do not recognize the sense of chief, but merely that of a person who carries on the business of spinning.

STERCORA'CEOUS, a. [L. stercorus, stercorosus, from stercus, dung.] Pertaining to dung, or partaking of its nature.

STERCORA'RIAN, } n. [L. stercus, STER'CORANIST, } dung.] One in the Romish church who held that the host is liable to digestion, and all its consequences, like other food.

STER'CORARY, n. A place properly secured from the weather for containing dung.

STERCORATION, n. [L. stercoratio.] The act of manuring with dung.

STERCORIANISM, n. Doctrine of the Stercorians.—which see.

STERCULIA, n. A genus of plants which gives its name to the nat. order Sterculiaceæ. The name is derived from L. stercus, dung, some of the species being remarkable for the strong and disagreeable odour of their leaves and flowers. The species consist of various sized trees with soft timber, which are found in tropical parts of the world, with simple or compound leaves, and axillary panicles or racemes of flowers. Several of them are mucilaginous, and others yield fibre, which is converted into ropes, as the bark of S. guttata. The seeds of S. acuminata afford the hola spoken of by African travellers, which, when chewed or sucked, is believed by the natives to increase the flavour of any thing they may subsequently eat or drink. The Gum-Tragacanth of Sierra Leone is produced by the S. pubescens. The seeds of S. chicha are eaten as nuts by the Brazilians, and the seeds of all the genus are filled with an oil, which may be expressed and used for lamps.

STERCULIA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of plants, belonging to the syncarpous group of polypetalous exogens. The plants of this order are trees or shrubs, with alternate, stipulate, simple, and often toothed leaves, with a variable inflorescence, and a stellate pubescence. They are natives of India, New Holland, the Cape of Good Hope, and South America, with the West Indies. The species are chiefly remarkable for the abundance of mucilage they contain. The principal genera are Helicteres, Sterculia, Bombax, Dombeya, Buttneria, Lasioptalum, and Hermanmia.

STERE, n. [Gr. στερεός, solid.] In the French system of measures, the unit for solid measure, equal to a cubic metre, or 35'317 cubic inches.

STEREOBATE, n. In arch., the same as stylobate,—which see.

STEREOGRAPHIC, } a. [from STEREOGRAPHICAL, } *stereograph- phy.] Made or done according to the rules of stereography; delineated on a plane; as, a stereographic chart of the earth.—Stereographic projection, that projection of the sphere which is represented upon the plane of one of its great circles, the eye being situated at the pole of that great circle. The plane on which the points, lines, and circles of the sphere are represented, is called the plane of projection, and the point in which the eye is situated is called the projecting point. The primitive circle is situated in the plane of projection, and the projecting point on the sphere is one of the poles of this great circle; but on the plane of projection, the poles of the primitive are in its centre. In this projection, all circles are projected either into straight lines or circles. Those which pass through the projecting point are projected into straight lines; in every other case the projection is a circle. A parallel circle is one whose plane is parallel to the plane of projection; a right circle is one whose plane is at right angles to the plane of the primitive, and as it passes through the projecting point, it is projected into a straight line. An oblique circle is one whose plane is oblique to that of the primitive. The stereographic projection is employed in the construction of maps, and also in astronomical problems. [See PROJECTION.]

STEREOGRAPHICALLY, adv. By delineation on a plane.

STEREOGRAPHY, n. [Gr. στερεός, firm, and γραφία, to write.] The art or art of delineating the forms of solid bodies on a plane; a branch of solid geometry which shows the construction of all solids which are regularly defined.

STEREOMETER, n. [Gr. στερεός, solid, and μετρον, a measure.] An instrument invented by M. Say, a French officer of engineers, for determining the specific gravity of liquids, porous bodies, and powders, and also of solid bodies.

STEREOMETRICAL, a. [See STEREOMETRY.] Pertaining to or performed by stereometry.

STEREOMETRY, n. [Gr. στερεός, firm, fixed, and μετρον, to measure.] The art of measuring solid bodies, and finding their solid content. It chiefly embraces those solids which are inscribed within plane surfaces, and a few inscribed within curved surfaces; namely, the cylinder, cone, and sphere. It also teaches to compare the various solids with each other, and to ascertain their superficial contents.

STEREOTOMICAL, a. Pertaining to or performed by stereotomy.

STEREOTOMY, n. [Gr. στερεός, fixed, and τομή, to cut.] The science or art of cutting solids into certain figures or sections; as walls or other members in the profiles of architecture.

STEREOTYPE, n. [Gr. στερεός, fixed, and τυπος, type, form.] 1. Literally, a fixed metal type; hence, a plate of the size of a page, cast from a plaster mould, or otherwise, in which an exact representation of the types has been made, and which by this means is adapted for book-printing. Thus, we say, a book is printed on stereotype, or in stereotype. In the latter use, the word seems rather to signify the workmanship or manner of printing, than the plate. There are two stereotype processes used in this country. The Stanhopean, so called from Earl Stanhope, its improver, and the patent process. By the former process, a stucco mould is taken from the page of types, and after being baked, it is immersed in a liquid metal, in its composition resembling type metal. A metallic plate, called a stereotype plate, is thus formed in the mould. After being cooled, the plate is dressed, and then is ready for being printed from. By the patent process, the mould or matrix is taken from the types by means of layers of paper, interspread with a mixture of chalk and starch. This mould is obtained by the layers of paper being beat into the face of the types, by repeated blows of a suitable brush. The mould or matrix being hard dried, a metallic plate is obtained from it by a process similar to that used in the Stanhopean method. Stereotyping is of great value as a means for cheapening the price of books; for, by its aid, where repeated editions are required, the outlay for setting up the types has only once to be encountered; as when a work has been stereotyped, a dozen of reprints may be taken from the plates without incurring further expense, except in printing off the sheets. Many works, such as the Penny Magazine, Chambers' Journal, Hogg's Weekly Instructor, &c. &c., could never have been produced, either in the quantity or at the price, without the aid of the stereotype process. William Ged, a goldsmith in Edinburgh, was one of the first to practise stereotyping, according to the common acceptation of the word. He is recorded to have commenced about the year 1725. Ged was followed by Tilloch and Fonlis of Glasgow, Didot in Paris, Wilson and Earl Stanhope in London.—2. The art of making plates of fixed metallic types, or of executing work on such plates.

STEREOTYPE, a. Pertaining to fixed metallic types.—2. Done on fixed metallic types, or plates of fixed types; as, stereotype work; stereotype printing; a stereotype copy of the Bible.

STEREOTYPE, v. t. To make fixed metallic types or plates of type metal, corresponding with the words and letters of a book; to compose a book in fixed types; as, to stereotype the New Testament; certain societies have stereotyped the Bible.

STEREOTYPE FOUNDING, n. The process of making stereotype plates; also called stereotyping.

STEREOTYPE PRINTING, n. The art of printing from stereotype plates.

STEREOTYPYPER, n. One who makes stereotype.

STEREOTYPE WORK, n. Stereotype plates.

STEREOTYPING, ppr. Making stereotype plates for any work; or impressing copies on stereotype plates.

STEREOTYPOGRAPHER, n. A stereotype printer.

STEREOTYPOGRAPHY, n. The art or practice of printing on stereotype.

STERILE, a. [L. sterilis; It. and Fr. sterile; Sp. estéril.] 1. Barren; unfruitful; not fertile; producing little or no crop; as, sterile land; a sterile desert; a sterile year.—2. Barren; producing no young.—3. Barren of ideas; destitute of sentiment; as, a sterile production or author.—Sterile flower, in botany, is a term given by Tournefort to the male flower, or that which bears only stamens.

STERILITY, n. [L. sterilitas; Fr. sterilité.] 1. Barrenness; unproductiveness; unfruitfulness; the quality or state of producing little or nothing; as, the sterility of land or soil.—2. Barrenness; unfruitfulness; the state of not producing young; as of animals.—3. Barrenness of ideas or sentiments, as in writings.—4. Want of fertility or the power of producing sentiment; as, the sterility of an author or of his mind.

STERILIZE, v. t. To make barren; to impoverish, as land; to exhaust of fertility; as, to sterilize soil or land. [Little used.]—2. To deprive of fecundity, or the power of producing young. [Little used.]

STERLET, n. A fish of the Caspian and of various rivers in Russia, the Acipenser ruthenus of Linnæus, highly Sterlet (Acipenser ruthenus).

esteemed for its flavour, and from whose roe is made the finest caviare.

STERLING, a. [probably from East-erling, but the etymology is uncertain.] An epithet by which English money of account is distinguished, signifying that it is of the fixed, or standard, national value; as, a pound sterling; a shilling sterling; a penny sterling. [Early writers on Scotch pecuniary matters have not always distinguished native from sterling money.]—2. Genuine; pure; of excellent quality; as, a work of sterling merit; a man of sterling wit or sense.

STERLING, n. English money. And Roman wealth in English sterling view. Arbutnot.

[In this use, sterling may signify English coins.]—2. Standard; rate. [Little used in either sense.]

STERLING, n. A breakwater or cut-water to protect the piers of a bridge.

STERLINGS, n. In arch. [See STARLINGS.]

STERN, a. [Sax. styrn, stern; G. starr, staring; störri, stubborn. See STARE, STARCH, STARK, with which this word is probably connected. Gr. στεργος.] 1. Severe; austere; fixed with an aspect of severity and authority; as, a stern look; a stern countenance; a stern frown.

I would outstare the sternest eyes that look. Shak.

2. Severe of manner; rigid; harsh; cruel.

Stern as tutors, and as uncles hard. Dryden.

Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shak.

3. Hard; afflictive.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time Shak.

4. Rigidly steadfast; immovable.

Stern virtue is the growth of few soils. Hamilton.

STERN, n. [Sax. steor and ern, place; the steer-place, that is, helm-place.]

1. The hind part of a ship or other vessel, or of a boat; the part opposite to the stem or prow. This part of a ship is terminated by the taffarel above, and by the counters below.—2. Post of management; direction. And sit at chiefest stern of public weal. Shak.

[We now say, to sit at the helm.]—3. The hinder part of any thing. [Not elegant.] By the stern, is a phrase which denotes that a ship is more deeply laden abaft than forward.

STERN'A, n. In ornithology, the generic name of the terns or sea-swallows. [See TERN.]

STERN'AGE, n. Steerage or stern.

STERN'AL, a. Pertaining to the sternum or breast-bone.

STERNAL'GIA, n. [Gr. στερνον, the breast bone and αλγος, pain.] Pain about the sternum or breast bone.—2. A name of the pectoral angina; angina pectoris.

STERN'BERGIA, n. A fossil plant, probably monocotyledonous, allied to the Pandanaceæ.

STERN'BERGITE, n. [from Count Sternberg.] A foliated ore of silver, consisting of silver, iron, and sulphur.

STERN'-BOARD, n. [stern and board.] In seamen's language, a loss of way in making a tack, also when a vessel goes stern foremost. To make a stern-board, is when, by a current or other cause, a vessel has fallen back from the point she had gained in the last tack; or also to set the sails so as the vessel may be impelled stern foremost.

STERN'-CHASE, n. [stern and chase.] A cannon placed in a ship's stern, pointing backward, and intended to annoy a ship that is in pursuit of her.

STERN'ED, a. In compounds, having a stern of a particular shape; as, square-sterned; pink-sterned, &c.

STERN'ER, † n. [Sax. steoran, to steer.] A director.

STERN'-FAST, n. [stern and fast.] A rope used to confine the stern of a ship or other vessel.

STERN'-FRAME, n. [stern and frame.] The several pieces of timber which form the stern of a ship.

STERN'LY, adv. [See STERN.] In a stern manner; with an austere or stern countenance; with an air of authority.

Sternly he pronounced The rigid interdiction. Millon.

STERN'MOST, a. [stern and most.] Farthest in the rear; farthest astern; as, the sternmost ship in a convoy.

STERN'NESS, n. Severity of look; a look of austerity, rigour, or severe authority; as, the sternness of one's presence.—2. Severity or harshness of manner; rigour.

I have sternness in my soul enough To hear of soldiers' work. Dryden.

STERN'ON, n. [Gr.] The breast bone. But sternum is chiefly or wholly used.

STERN'-PORT, n. [stern and port.] A port or opening in the stern of a ship.

STERN'-POST, n. [stern and post.] A straight piece of timber, erected on the extremity of the keel to support the rudder and terminate the ship behind.

STERN'-SHEETS, n. [stern and sheet.] That part of a boat which is between the stern and the aftmost seat of the rowers; usually furnished with seats for passengers.

STERN'UM, n. [Gr. στερνον: from fixing; setting. See STARCH, STARK.] The breast bone; the bone which forms the front of the human chest from the neck to the stomach.

STERNUTA'TION, n. [L. sternutatio.] The act of sneezing.

STERNU'TATIVE, a. [L. sternuo, to sneeze.] Having the quality of provoking to sneeze.

STERNU'TATORY, a. [Fr. sternutatoire, from L. sternuo, to sneeze.] Having the quality of exciting to sneeze.

STERNU'TORY, n. A substance STERN'UTORY, } that provokes sneezing. The most familiar sternutatories are snuffs of different kinds. They are chiefly employed to occasion a violent succussion of the frame, either to restore suspended respiration, as in some cases of fainting, or to dislodge some foreign body from the nasal passages or windpipe.

STERN'-WAY, n. [stern and way.] The movement of a ship backward, or with her stern foremost.

STERQUILINOUS, a. [L. sterquilinus

nium, a dunghill.] Pertaining to a dunghill; mean; dirty; paltry.

 STERT'OROUS, } Snoring. The last is the term almost invariably used.

STERVEN, † to starve.

STETHOSCOPE, n. [Gr. σθησος, the breast, and σκοπος, to examine.] A simple cylinder of some fine-grained light wood, as cedar or maple, perforated longitudinally in the middle, with one extremity funnel-shaped and furnished with a conical plug; the other with a comparatively large orbicular ivory plate, fastened by a screw. This instrument is used for distinguishing sounds within the thorax, and other cavities of the body, the funnel-shaped extremity, either with or without the plug, being placed upon the body, and the ivory plate to the ear of the listener. [See ASCULTATION.] Stethoscope is an ill chosen term, since its application is not confined to the breast, and the termination scope does not well express its use. Phonophorus or sound-conductor, would be preferable.

STETHOSCOPIC, a. Pertaining to a stethoscope.

STEVE, v. t. [from the root of stow.] To stow, as cotton or wool in a ship's hold. [Local.]

STEV'EDORE, n. One whose occupation is to stow goods, packages, &c., in a ship's hold. [This word and the foregoing are much used by traders in North and South America, especially New York and the ports of Brazil.]

STEVEN, † n. [Sax. stefian, to call.] An outcry; a loud call; a clamour.

STEW, v. t. [Fr. étuver, to stew; stuve, a stove; It. stufare, to stew; stufa, a stove; stufa, weary, surfeited; Sp. estufa, a stove; estofa, stuff quilted; estofar, to quilt and to stew; D. stooft, a stove; stooven, to stew; Dan. stue, a room, [see Stow.] and stuevæn, a stove; Sw. stufva, to stew and to stow.] 1. STEW'ARD, n. [Sax. steward. Ward is a keeper; but the meaning of the first syllable is not evident. It is probably a contraction of G. stube, a room, Eng. stow, Sax. stow, place, or sted, place, or of Dan. stib, a cup. The steward was then originally a chamberlain or a butler.] 1. A man employed in great families to manage the domestic concerns, superintend the other servants, collect the rents or income, keep the accounts, &c. See Gen. xv. 2; xliii. 19.—2. An officer of state; as, lord high steward; steward of the household, &c. The lord high steward of England was one of the ancient great officers of state, the greatest under the crown. This office was anciently the inheritance of the earls of Leicester, till forfeited by Simon de Montfort, to Henry III., when it was in fact abolished as a permanent dignity. A lord high steward is now made only for particular occasions, the office to cease when the business requiring it is ended; namely, on the occasion of a coronation, or the trial of a peer. In the former case the lord high steward is commissioned to settle matters of precedence, &c.; in the latter, to preside in the house of lords. The lord steward of the household is an officer of the king's (queen's) household, who is steward of the marshal-office or court of the household, which office he performs by deputy. His authority extends over the officers and servants of the royal household, except those of the chamber, chapel, and stables. His department includes also the counting-house, where the household accounts are kept. Within the counting-house is the board of green cloth.—3. In colleges, an officer who provides food for the students and superintends the concerns of the kitchen.—4. In a ship of war, an officer who is appointed by the purser to distribute provisions to the officers and crew. In other ships, a man who superintends the provisions and liquors, waits at table, &c.—5. In scrip and theol., a minister of Christ, whose duty is to dispense the provisions of the gospel, to preach its doctrines and administer its ordinances.

It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful; 1 Cor. iv.

6. A fiscal agent of certain bodies; as, the steward of a congregation of methodists, &c.

STEW'ARD, † v. t. To manage as a steward.

Many instruments, long and slender, are called sticks; as, the composing stick of printers.—4. A thrust with a pointed instrument that penetrates a body; a stab.—Gold stick, a name applied to the colonels of the two regiments of Life Guards, whose duty it is to be in immediate attendance on the sovereign on all state occasions. These colonels do duty for a month alternately, the one on duty being then called gold stick in waiting, and all orders relating to the Life Guards are transmitted through him. The field-officer of the Life Guards when on duty is called silver stick. He is in waiting for a week, during which period all reports are made through him to the gold stick, and orders from the gold stick pass through him to the brigade. The term gold stick originated in the custom of the sovereign presenting the colonel of the Life Guards with a gold stick on his receiving the regiment.—Stick of eels, the number of twenty-five eels. A bind contains ten sticks.

STICK, v. t. pret. and pp. Stuck. [Sax. stican, stician; G. stetchen, to sting or prick, and stechen, to stick, to adhere; D. stechen, to prick or stab; stikken, to stitch; Dan. stikker, to sting, to prick; Sw. sticka; Gr. στικω, στικμα: W. ystigaw; Ir. steacham.] 1. STILL, n. [L. stillo, to drop. See DISTIL.] An apparatus for the distillation of liquids upon the large scale. The common still consists of the boiler, made of copper, which contains the liquid to be distilled, and which is usually set in brickwork over a furnace; a movable head, with a swan-like neck, which is fitted into the top of the boiler; the worm, which is a coiled tube connected with the neck of the head, and which is packed away in a vessel of water kept constantly cold, called a refrigeratory. The fire is applied either immediately to the boiler, or mediately by means of a water or sand bath. The liquid to be obtained rises in vapour into the head of the still, and, passing down the curved tube or worm, is condensed by the refrigeratory, and then passes from the extremity of the worm in successive drops, or in a small continuous stream, into the recipient. There are a great variety of stills adapted to particular purposes, the most important being those employed for distilling spirituous liquors. Great distilleries are usually mounted with two stills, a larger and a smaller. The former, called the wash-still, is used for distilling low wines, and the latter for rectifying the low wines.

STIM'ULANT, a. [L. stimulus.] In med., producing a quickly diffused and transient increase of vital energy and strength of action in the heart and arteries; provocative; inciting.

STIM'ULANT, n. In med., an article which produces a quickly diffused and transient increase of vital energy and strength of action in the heart and arterial system; a provocative; an excitement. Stimulants are of two classes: the former comprises medicinal substances; the latter warmth, cold, electricity, galvanism, and mental agents; such as music, joy, hope, &c. The former class are divided into permanent and diffusible stimulants. Volatile or essential oils, when pure or in the combinations in which they exist, in roots, barks, or flowers, and also malt liquors, are ranked among permanent stimulants; and ammonia, alcohol, and sulphuric ether are employed as diffusible stimulants. Stimulants have also been divided into general and topical, according as they affect the whole system or a particular part.

STIM'ULATE, v. t. [L. stimulo, to prick, to goad, to excite; stimulus, a goad.] 1. Literally, to prick or goad. Hence,—2. To excite, rouse, or animate to action or more vigorous exertion by some pungent motive or by persuasion; as, to stimulate one by the hope of reward, or by the prospect of glory.—3. In med., to produce a quickly diffused and transient increase of vital energy and strength of action in the heart and arteries.

STIM'ULATED, pp. Goaded; roused or excited to more vigorous exertion.

STIM'ULATING, ppr. Goadng; exciting to more vigorous exertion.

In med., that which produces a quickly diffused and transient increase of vital energy and strength of action in the circulating system.—3. In bot., a sting. The nettle is furnished with stimuli.

Stilt Plover (Himantopus melanopterus).

l'échasse à manteau noir; It. cavaliere grande Italiano; Ger. Schwarzflügelige Strandreuter. It has a long bill, also very long wings for its size. Whole length of the body, from beak to tail tip, 14 inches; to the claws, 19. Length of legs, which are of bright red colour, 18 to 20 inches; three-toed. The face, neck, and under parts generally, are white, tinged with rose on the breast and belly; the head, much of the wings, &c., nearly black. The Rev. Gilbert White asserts, "that these birds exhibit, weight for inches, incomparably the greatest length of legs of any known kind." The Stilt bird is rarely seen in our latitudes, its chief habitats being Southern Europe and the genial regions of Western Asia.

STILT'ED, pp. Raised on stilts.—2. Unreasonably elevated.—Stilted arch, a term applied by Mr. Willis to a form

STING, v. t. pret. Stung. Stang is obsolete. [Goth. stijcwan; Sax. stingan, styngan, to rush or thrust, hence to sting; G. stechen, to stick, to sting; stachel, a prick, goad, sting; Dan. stikker, to stick, to sting; sting, a thrust, a stitch, a sting. The Dutch has steng, a pole or perch; Sw. stang, id.; and stanga, to push with the horns, to gore. We see that sting is stich altered in orthography and pronunciation.] 1. To pierce with the sharp pointed instrument with which certain animals are furnished, such as bees, wasps, scorpions, and the like. Bees will seldom sting persons unless they are first provoked.—2. To pain acutely; as, the conscience is stung with remorse. Slander stings the brave. Pope.

STING, n. [Sax. sting, stineg; Ice. stang, a spear; W. ystang; D. steng, a pole or perch; Sw. stang; It. stanga, a bar. These words are all of one family.] 1. A sharp pointed weapon or instrument with which certain animals are armed by nature for their defence, and which they thrust from the hinder part of the body to pierce any animal that annoys or provokes them. In most instances, this instrument is a tube, through which a poisonous matter is discharged, which inflames the flesh, and in some instances proves fatal to life.—2. The thrust of a sting into the flesh. The sting of most insects produces acute pain.—3. Any thing that gives acute pain. Thus we speak of the stings of remorse; the stings of reproach.—4. The point in the last verse; as, the sting of an epigram.—5. That which gives the principal pain or constitutes the principal terror.

The sting of death is sin; 1 Cor. xv.

6. In bot., stings are a sort of hair with which many plants are furnished, which secretes a poisonous fluid, which, when introduced under the skin of animals, produces inflammation. The stinging nettles are provided with this kind of armature, and also several species of the nat. order Malphigiaceae. In tropical climates the poisonous secretion of the glandular hairs of many plants is more powerfully developed than in other climates.

STING'ER, n. He or that which stings, vexes, or gives acute pain.

STIPA, n. A genus of plants. [See FEATHER-GRASS.]

STIPE, n. [L. stipes; Gr. στυπος, a stake.]

In bot., the stem of the monocotyledonous class of plants, such as the palms and yuccæ, and of a few dicotyledonous plants, as the cycas and zamia. When destitute of branches, as it generally is, it presents the appearance of a slender column, being a little thicker at the base than toward the top, frequently swelling out in the middle, and crowned by a tuft of leaves and flowers. Internally it has no appearance of concentric layers, and presents no distinction of wood and bark. It increases in height by the successive growths of the bud at the top, and in thickness by the addition of fibres to its interior. The setæ of some mosses, as those of Sphagnum andraceæ, are also called stipes; also the stalks of the higher forms of fungi, as well as the part that supports the organs of reproduction in such lichens as Calicium, Coniocybe, and Baecomyces. The petioles of the leaves of ferns, as well as their stems, are likewise termed stipes. The word is also used for the filament or slender stalk which supports the pappus, and connects it with the seed.

STIPELS, n. In bot., small stipules situated at the base of the leaflets of a compound leaf.

STIPEND, n. [L. stipendium; stips, a piece of money, and pendo, to pay.] Originally, the pay of soldiers.—In law, settled pay or compensation for services, whether daily or monthly wages; or an annual salary.—In Scotland, a term applied to the provision made for the support of the parochial ministers of the established church. It consists of payments made in money or grain, or both, varying in amount according to the extent of the parish, and the state of the free teinds, or of any other fund specially set apart for the purpose. All stipends which come short of £150 per annum, are made up to that sum from government funds. By extension, the term is also applied to the annual payments made for the support of ministers of various other denominations besides the established church.

STIPEND, v. t. To pay by settled wages.

STIPENDIARY, a. [L. stipendiarius.] Receiving wages or salary; performing services for a stated price or compensation.

His great stipendiary prelate came with troops of evil appointed horsemen not half full. Knolles.

STIPENDIARY, n. [supra.] One who performs services for a settled compensation, either by the day, month, or year.

small leaf-like appendage to the leaf. Stipules are commonly situated at the base of the petiole in pairs, either adhering to it, or standing separate. They are usually of a more delicate texture than the leaf, but vary in this respect as well as in form and colour. In describing them, the terms used for the leaf are employed. They are generally considered as analogous to the leaves, or accessory to them, and are sometimes transformed into leaflets. Stipules are not of constant occurrence, not being found in all plants, but where they occur, they frequently characterize a whole family; as in Leguminosæ, Rosaceæ, Malvaceæ, &c.

STIPULA'CEOUS, } a. [from L. sti- STIP'ULAR, } pula, stipularis.
See STIPULA.] 1. Resembling stipules; consisting of stipules.—2. Growing on stipules, or close to them; as, stipular glands.—Stipular buds, such as are enveloped by the stipules; as in the tulip-tree.

a set of steel borers, called bits, of various sizes, and the whole instrument is commonly called a stock and bit, brace and bit, or centre-bit.—16.
The stock of an anchor is the piece of timber into which the shank is inserted.—17. In book-keeping, the owner or owners of the books.—To take stock, in mercantile law, to take an inventory of the goods which a merchant has on hand, affixing a value to each article. It also includes an account of the money on hand. By comparing the result of this operation with the original stock, the quantity and value of goods bought and sold, the debts due by him, and those owing to him, a merchant is enabled to ascertain the state of his affairs, and to balance his books.

STOCK, n. The English name for the genus of plants named by Brown Matthiola. Many of the species are great favourites in gardens, on account of their handsome flowers, and fragrant smell. [See MATTHIOLA, STOCK-GILLY-FLOWER.]

STOCK, v. t. To store; to supply; to fill; as, to stock the mind with ideas.
Asia and Europe are well stocked with inhabitants.—2. To lay up in store; as, he stocks what he cannot use.—3. To put in the stocks. [Little used.]—
4. To pack; to put into a pack; as, to stock cards.—5. To supply with domestic animals, implements, &c.; as, to stock a farm.—6. Among American farmers, to supply with seed; as, to stock land with clover or herdsgrass.
—7. To suffer cows to retain their milk for twenty-four hours or more, previous to sale.—To stock up, to extipate; to dig up.

STOCKADE, n. [See STOCCADE.] In fort., a sharpened post or stake set in the earth.—2. A line of posts or stakes set in the earth as a fence or barrier.

STOCKADE, v. t. To surround or fortify with sharpened posts fixed in the ground.

STOCKADED, pp. Fortified with stockades.

STOCKADING, ppr. Fortifying with sharpened posts or stakes.

STOCK - BROKER, n. [stock and broker.] A broker who deals in the purchase and sale of stocks or shares in the public funds. [See STOCK-EXCHANGE.]

STOCK-DÖVE, n. [stock and dove.]
The wild pigeon of Europe, (Columba enas), long considered as the stock of the domestic pigeon, but now regarded as a distinct species.

STOCK-EXCHANGE, n. The place or building where the public stock is bought and sold. The present stock exchange is situated in Capel-court,
Bartholomew-lane, and was opened in 1802. Formerly, the place of rendezvous for persons transacting business in the stocks, was Jonathan's coffeehouse, in 'Change Alley, Cornhill, and it is from this circumstance that the term Alley is familiarly used, as a cant phrase, for the stock exchange, and that a petty speculator in the funds is styled a "dabbler in the Alley." The term stock exchange is also applied to the system by which the purchase, sale, and "carrying over" of stock and shares are effected by certain parties called brokers. The members of the stock exchange are divided into two classes, namely, the stock brokers and the stock jobbers. It is the business of the brokers to receive and execute the orders of merchants, bankers, capitalists, and private individuals, who are "out of the house," as the stock exchange is termed amongst its own members. The jobbers remain stationary in the "house," and are ready to act upon the orders thus received by the brokers. They are men possessed of more or less capital, and it is their business to be always prepared to make a price at which they will sell or buy to the brokers whenever the latter present themselves. Thus, a jobber declares he is ready to buy 3 per cent. consols at 85½, or to sell at 85¾; so that, in this way, a person willing to buy or sell any sum, however small, has never any difficulty in finding an individual with whom to deal. The jobber's profit is generally ¼ per cent.

or 2s. 6d. for the £100, for which he transacts both a sale and a purchase.
The proceedings of the stock exchange are regulated by a committee, who are elected by ballot.

STOCK' FARMER, n. A farmer who devotes himself to the breeding and rearing of different kinds of live stock, especially horses and cattle.

STOCK'-FISH, n. [stock and fish.]
Cod dried hard and without salt.

STOCK-GIL/LYFLOWER, n. Matthiola, a genus of plants. [See MAT-THIOLA.] There are several species, natives of Europe and Barbary. Two species, the common Gillyflower (M.
incana), and great sea stock (M. sinuata), are indigenous to Britain. They have been long favourite ornaments of the flower garden, the double species being esteemed for the beauty and deep tints of the flower, and for its delightful odour.

STOCK'HOLDER, n. [stock and hold.]
One who is a proprietor of stock in the public funds, or in the funds of a bank or other company.

STOCKING, n. [from stock; Ir. stoca; supposed by Johnson to be a corruption of stochen, plural of stock. But qu.] A garment made to cover the leg. Stockings were anciently made of cloth or milled stuff, sewed together, but they are now invariably knitted, the material being wool, cotton, or silk. They are either knitted by the hand or woven in a frame, so as to form a species of tissue extremely elastic, and readily adapting itself to the part it is employed to cover. The art of knitting stockings appears to have been introduced into England from Spain, about the beginning of the 16th century.

STOCKING, n. The act of furnishing with stock, the act of storing up.—
Stocking of a pasture, in agriculture, the putting as many head of cattle upon the pasture as it will maintain.

STOCKING, v. t. To dress in stockings.

STOCK'INGER, n. A stocking-weaver.

[Local.]

STOCK'ING-FRAME, n. A machine for weaving or knitting stockings. It is a somewhat complicated machine, said to have been invented by William Lee, A.M., of St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1589. During the first century after the invention of the stocking-frame, few improvements were made upon it, and two men were usually employed to work one frame. But in the course of last century, the machine was very greatly improved.

STOCKING-LOOM, n. A stocking-frame.

STOCK'ISH, a. Hard; stupid; blockish. [Little used.]

STOCK'-JOBBER, n. [stock and job.] One who speculates in the public funds for gain; one whose occupation is to buy and sell stocks. [See STOCK-EXCHANGE.]

STOCK'-JOBING, n. The act or art of dealing in the public funds.

STOCK'-LOCK, n. [stock and lock.] A lock fitted into a wooden case. The larger and coarser sort of locks are generally of this kind.

STOCK'-PURSE, n. In milit. lan., savings made in the outlay of a corps, and applied to regimental purposes.

STOCKS, n. [See Stock.] A term applied to the various funds which constitute the national debt. These funds are variously designated, partly according to the rate of interest which the government engages to pay, and partly from the financial operations to which they have been subjected. Thus there are three per cent. stock, or three per cent. consols; three per cent. reduced; three and a half per cent. reduced; four per cent.; long annuities; life annuities, &c. The price of stocks or rates per cent. are the several sums for which £100 of the respective stocks sell at any given time; as each proprietor of stock may transfer his interest to others by sale. Few persons buy or sell stock except through the medium of a broker, but the general practice is to receive their dividends themselves. The dividends on all descriptions of stock are due half yearly, either on the 5th of January, or 5th of July, or on the 5th of April, or 5th of October, and are paid about a week afterwards. — Time bargains form a very important portion of the business of the stock exchange. They are bargains to deliver stock on a certain day at a certain price, the seller of course believing that the price will fall, and the buyer that it will rise. When the period for completing the bargain has arrived, a settlement is usually effected without any payment of stock, the losing party simply paying the difference. These bargains are usually made for certain days, fixed by a committee of the stock exchange, called settling days, of which there are about eight in the year. The price at which stock is sold to be transferred on the next settling day, is called the price on account. Sometimes instead of closing the account on the settling day, the stock is carried on to a future day, on such terms as the parties agree on. This is called a continuation, or carrying over. Time bargains cannot be enforced in a court of law, and the parties are held to them only by a sense of honour and self-interest, and the fear of exclusion from the stock exchange, which ruins their credit. A defaulter, in the language of the stock exchange, is termed a lame duck, and his name is posted for a certain time in the great room. The sellers of time bargains are also technically called bears, and the buyers bulls; the interest of the former being to beat down prices, and of the latter to raise them.—Bank stock, the trading capital of the Bank of England, or that upon which interest is paid to the proprietors. It amounts to £10,914,250, and the interest is 8 per cent.—East India stock, the capital belonging to the East India company, which amounts to six millions, and the interest upon it is 10½ per cent. Besides these English funds, shares in many descriptions of foreign stocks, created by loans raised in this country, are constantly for sale in the money-market, as are also shares in railway, canal, mining, and numerous other similar speculations.—2. In horticulture, young trees, which are designed for the reception of the grafts or buds from other trees. Stocks are, for practical purposes, divided into three kinds, crab-stocks, free-stocks, and dwarf-stocks. Crab-stocks are those which are grown from the seeds of wild and ungrafted trees; as the cherry, plum, apple, &c. Free-stocks are those which are raised from the seeds or layers of fruit and orchard trees which have been grafted. Dwarf-stocks are those which are raised from low-growing shrubby-trees, and are used in the grafting of low-standards, and also for wall-trees and espaliers. Stocks are raised in nurseries from seeds, suckers, layers, and cuttings, and may be used when they have attained the size of a goose quill, up to that of a man's finger.—3. A frame erected on the shore of a river or of the sea, and in the large establishments, in the inside of docks, for the purpose of building ships. It generally consists of a number of solid wooden blocks, ranged parallel to each other at convenient distances, upon a very firm foundation, and with a gradual declivity towards the water, for the purpose of launching.—4. A wooden machine, forming a kind of foot-pillory, in which the ankles of petty offenders are enclosed, for an hour or more, in a market or other public place. This punishment, once common in England, is now nearly out of use.

STOCK'-SHAVE, n. In block-making, a large sharp edged knife used to pare off the rough wood from the shells of blocks, &c.

STOCK'-STILL, a. [stock and still.] Still as a fixed post; perfectly still.

Our preachers stand stock-still in the pulpit. Anon.

STOCK'-TACKLE, n. In ships, a tackle composed of a double and single block, and employed to keep the stock of the anchor clear of the ship's side when fishing the anchor.

STOCK'Y, a. [from stock.] Thick and firm; stout. A stocky person is one rather thick than tall or corpulent; one whose bones are covered well with flesh, but without a prominent belly. [Colloq.]

STO'IC, n. [Gr. στωικός, from στος, a porch in Athens, where the philosopher Zeno taught.] A disciple of the philosopher Zeno, who founded a sect. He taught that men should be free from passion, unmoved by joy or grief, and submit without complaint to the unavoidable necessity by which all things are governed. The Stoics are proverbially known for the sternness and austerity of their ethical doctrines, and for the influence which their tenets exercised over some of the noblest spirits of antiquity. Their system appears to have been an attempt to reconcile a theological pantheism, and a materialist psychology, with a logic which seeks the foundations of knowledge in sensible experience, and a morality which claims as its first principle the absolute freedom of the human will. "Live according to nature" is, with the stoics, the expression of the coincidence which ought to exist between the human will and the universal reason, which they identified with the life and power of nature. This coincidence is virtue, the only good; as vice, its opposite, is the only evil. All things else are in themselves indifferent; being approved or disapproved only by comparison. Virtue, according to them, is the perfect harmony of the soul with itself; vice is, in its essence, inconsistent and self-contradictory. The wise man, the ideal of human perfection, is absolutely and without qualification, free. His actions are determined by his free will, with a power as irresistible as that by which universal nature is guided and animated.

STO'IC, } a. Pertaining to the Stoics
STO'ICAL, } or to their doctrines.—
2. Not affected by passion; unfeeling; manifesting indifference to pleasure or pain.

STO'ICALLY, adv. In the manner of the Stoics; without apparent feeling or sensibility; with indifference to pleasure or pain.

STO'ICALNESS, n. The state of being stoical; indifference to pleasure or pain.

STOICHIOMETRY, n. [Gr. στοιχίος, element, and μετρον, measure.] A branch of chemistry that treats of the proportions which substances must have when they enter into a state of neutrality.

STO'ICISM, n. The opinions and maxims of the Stoics.—2. A real or pretended indifference to pleasure or pain; insensibility.

STO'ICITY, } n. Stoicalness.

STOIT, or STOITER, v. i. [Suio-Goth. stœta.] To walk in a staggering way; to totter, to stumble on any object. [Scotch.] STOKE, Sax. stocce, stoc, place, is the same word as stock, differently applied. It is found in many English names of towns.

STOKE, v. t. To poke, stir up, supply a fire with fuel, and attend to its combustion, applied chiefly to furnaces, such as the furnaces of steam-engines.

STOKE-HOLE, n. The space in front of a furnace.

STOKER, n. One who looks after a furnace fire.—2. A poker. [Local.]

STOLA, n. [L. from Gr. στολη.] A garment worn by the Roman women in later times. It was a long vest or tunic with sleeves, reaching down to the ankles. It was worn within doors, Roman matron attired in the Stola.

and was covered with the palla or cloak when they went out.

STOLE, pret. of Steal.

STOLE, n. [L. and It. stola; Sp. estola.] 1. A long vest or robe, which forms a part of the sacerdotal dress of Roman Catholic parish priests over their surplice, as a mark of superiority in their respective churches, and by other priests over the alb while celebrating mass. It is a long broad white band, of silk or silver stuff, lined with stiff linen, worn by deacons over the left shoulder, and reaching to the right hip; but the priests wear it over both shoulders, and hanging down across the breast. It is marked with three crosses, and not unfrequently has little bells at the end.—2. [L. stolo.] A sucker; a shoot from the root of a plant, by which some plants may be propagated; written also stool—Groom of the stole, an officer in the king's household, the first lord of the bed-chamber. His title is derived from the long robe (stola) worn by the king on solemn occasions. His original duty was also to put the king's shirt on in the morning.

1. Stole. 2. Priest wearing the Stole, A. A.

STOLED, a. Wearing a stole, or long robe; robed like an antique statue. [Seldom used but in poetry.]

STOLEN, pp. (sto'ln.) The passive participle of Steal.

Stolen waters are sweet; Prov. ix.

STOLID,† a. [L. stolidus; from the root of still, stall, to set.] Dull; foolish; stupid.

STOLIDITY, n. [supra.] Dullness of intellect; stupidity. [Little used.]

STOLON, n. [L. stolo.] In bot., a runner or shoot proceeding horizontally, and taking root, as in some grasses and other plants, by which they increase.

STOLONIFEROUS, a. [L. stolo, a sucker, and fero, to produce.] Producing suckers; putting forth suckers; as, a stoloniferous stem, stoloniferous grasses.

STOMA, } n. [Gr.] In bot., open-
STOMATA, } ings in the epidermis of plants, usually bounded by two or more lunate or kidney-shaped vesicles. They are capable of being closed by the elongation or enlargement of these kidney-shaped vesicles. They are best seen in the monocotyledonous plants; but not without the aid of a microscope or convex lens. They are regarded as spiracles or breathing pores.

STOMACACE, n. [Gr. stoma, the mouth, and akos, evil, bad.] A factor in the mouth, with bloody discharge from the gums, which are ulcerated along their edges.

STOMACH, n. [L. stomachus; Fr. estomac.] 1. In animal bodies, a membranous receptacle, the principal organ of digestion, in which food is prepared for entering into the several parts of the body for its nourishment. The human stomach is of an irregularly conical form; it is situated in the epigastric region, lying almost transversely across the upper and left portion of the abdominal cavity. Its largest extremity is directed to the left, its smaller to the right. Its superior orifice, where the œsophagus terminates, is called the cardia; the inferior orifice, where the intestine begins, the pylorus. The stomach, like the intestinal canal, is composed of three coats or membranes, connected by a firm but very extensive cellular tissue. The external or peritoneal coat is a dense firm membrane; the internal or villous coat is soft, mucous, and vascular; the central coat is muscular, and the glands of the stomach are situated between it and the villous coat. The arteries of the stomach come chiefly from the cœliac artery, and are accompanied by veins which terminate in the vena portæ. The nerves of the stomach are very numerous, and come from the eighth pair and the sympathetic nerve. The lymphatic vessels are distributed throughout the whole substance, and proceed immediately to the thoracic duct. The use of the stomach is to excite hunger and partly thirst; to receive the food from the œsophagus, and to retain it, till by the motion of the stomach, the admixture of various fluids, and many other changes, it is rendered fit to pass the right orifice of the stomach, and be converted into chyle in the intestines.—2. Appetite; the desire of food caused by hunger; as, a good stomach for roast beef. [A popular use of the word.]—3. Inclination; liking.

He which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart. Shak.

4. Anger; violence of temper.

Stern was his look, and full of stomach vain. Spenser.

5. Sullenness; resentment; wilful obstinacy; stubbornness.

This sort of crying proceeding from pride, obstinacy, and stomach, the will, where the fault lies, must be bent. Locke.

6. Pride; haughtiness.

He was a man

Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shak.

Note. This word in all the foregoing senses, except the first, is nearly obsolete or inelegant.

STOM'ACH, v. t. [L. stomachor.] 1. To resent; to remember with anger.

The lion began to show his teeth, and to stomach the affront. L'Esrange.

2. To brook; to bear without open resentment or without opposition. [Not elegant.]

STOM'ACH,† v. i. To be angry.

STOM'ACHAL, a. [Fr. stomacal.] Cordial; helping the stomach.

STOM'ACHED, a. Filled with resentment.

STOM'ACHER, n. An ornament or support to the breast, worn by females; Isaiah iii.—2. The lower peak of a kind of female's gown.—3. One who stomaches.

STOM'ACHFUL, a. Wilfully obstinate; stubborn; perverse; as, a stomachful boy.

STOM'ACHFULLY, adv. In an angry manner.

STOM'ACHFULNESS, n. Stubbornness; sullenness; perverse obstinacy.

STOMACH'IC, } a. Pertaining to STOMACH'ICAL, } the stomach; as, stomachic vessels.—2. Strengthening to the stomach; exciting the action of the stomach.

STOMACH'IC, n. A medicine that strengthens the stomach and excites its action.

STOM'ACHING, ppr. Brooding; bearing without open resentment.

STOM'ACHING,† n. Resentment.

STOM'ACHLESS, a. Being without a stomach or appetite.

STOM'ACHOUS,† a. Stout; sullen; obstinate.

STOM'ACH PUMP, n. A small pump or syringe lately introduced into medical practice, for the purpose of withdrawing poisons from the stomach and introducing cleansing or other liquids. It resembles the common syringe, except that it has two apertures near the end, instead of one, in which the valves open different ways, so as to constitute a sucking and a forcing passage. When the object is to extract from the stomach, the pump is worked, while its sucking orifice is in connection with a flexible tube passed into the stomach; and the extracted matter escapes by the forcing orifice. When it is desired, on the contrary, to throw cleansing water or other liquid into the stomach, the tube is connected with the forcing orifice, by which the action of the pump is reversed.

STOM'ACH STAGGERS, n. A disease in horses, depending on a paralytic affection of the stomach. In this disease the animal dozes in the stable and rests his head in the manger; he then wakes up, and falls to eating, which he continues to do till the stomach swells to an enormous extent, and the animal at last dies of apoplexy, or his stomach bursts.

STOM'ACHY, a. Obstinate; sullen.

STOMAPODA, } n. [Gr. stoma, a STOMAPODA, } mouth, and podos, a foot.] An order of marine crustaceans, having the shell divided into two portions, the anterior of which supports the eyes and intermediate antennae, or composes the head without giving origin to the foot-jaws. These organs, as well as the four anterior feet, are frequently approximated to the mouth on two lines that converge inferiorly, hence the name given to these animals. They are found chiefly in intertropical climates.

STOMATA. See STOMA.

STOMP, for Stamp,—which see.

STOND,† n. [for stand.] A stop; a post; a station. [See STAND.]

STONE, n. [Sax. stan; Goth. staina; G. stein; D. and Dan. steen. This word may be a derivative from the root of stand. The primary sense is to set, to fix; Gr. στένω.] 1. A hard concretion of some species of earth, as lime, silex, clay, and the like; a hard compact body, of any form and size. In nat. hist., stones, as distinguished from simple minerals, are defined to be essentially compound fossils; found in continued strata, or beds, of great extent, formed either of congeries of small particles, in some degree resembling sand, and lodged in a smoother cementitious matter, both of these running together into one smooth mass; or, finally, of granules cohering by contact, without any cementitious matter among them; or composed of crystal or spar, usually debased by earth, and often mixed with talc, and other extraneous particles. The principal component parts of stones are silex, alumina, zirconia, glucina, lime, and magnesia; sometimes the oxides of iron, manganese, nickel, chromium, and copper, are also found to enter into their composition. In popular language, very large masses of concretions are called rocks; and very small concretions are universally called gravel or sand, or grains of sand. Stones are of various degrees of hardness and weight; they are brittle and fusible, but not malleable, ductile, or soluble in water. Stones are of great and extensive use in the construction of buildings of all kinds, for walls, fences, piers, abutments, arches, monuments, sculpture, and the like. The qualities requisite for a building stone are hardness, tenacity, and compactness. When we speak of the substance generally, we use stone in the singular; as, a house or wall of stone. But when we speak of particular separate masses, we say, a stone, or the stones.—2. A gem; a precious stone. Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels. Shak.

3. Any thing made of stone; a mirror.—4. A calculous concretion in the kidneys or bladder; the disease arising from a calculus.—5. A testicle.—6. The nut of a drupe or stone fruit; or the hard covering inclosing the kernel, and itself inclosed by the pulpy pericarp.—7. A weight of 14 pounds avoirdupois, and equal to $\frac{1}{3}$ of a hundred weight.—8. A monument erected to preserve the memory of the dead.

Should some relentless eye

Glance on the stone where our cold relics lie. Pope.

9. It is used to express torpidness and insensibility; as, a heart of stone.

I have not yet forgot myself to stone. Pope.

10. Stone is prefixed to some words to qualify their signification. Thus stone-dead, is perfectly dead, as lifeless as a stone; stone-still, still as a stone, perfectly still; stone-blind, blind as a stone, perfectly blind.—To leave no stone unturned, a proverbial expression which signifies to do every thing that can be done; to use all practicable means to effect an object.—Meteoric stones, stones which fall from the atmosphere, as after the disposal of a meteor. [See AEROLITE.]—Philosopher's stone, a pretended substance that was formerly supposed to have the property of turning any other substance into gold.—Artificial stone, a species of stone prepared artificially for statuary and other decorations of architecture. The materials are nearly the same with those of English pottery. These stones are manufactured at Berlin.

STONE, a. Made of stone, or like stone; as, a stone jug.

STONE, v. t. [Sax. stænan.] 1. To pelt, beat or kill with stones.

And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit; Acts vii.

2. To harden.

O perjur'd woman, thou dost stone my heart.

Shak.

3. To free from stones; as, to stone raisins.—4. To wall or face with stones; to line or fortify with stones; as, to stone a well; to stone a cellar.

STONE-BLIND, a. [stone and blind.] Blind as a stone; perfectly blind.

STONE-BÖRER, n. An animal that bores stones. The stone-borers or Lithophagi are molluscous bivalves, which by means of a fleshy foot, upon which they turn as upon a pivot, perforate or bore into rocks. [See PHOLAS.]

STONE-BÖW, n. [stone and bow.] A cross bow for shooting stones.

STONE-BRASH, n. In agriculture, a subsoil composed of shattered rock or stone.

STONE-BREAK, n. [stone and break; L. saxifraga.] A plant, saxifrage.

STONE-CHAT, } n. [stone and STONE-CHATTER, } chatter.] A bird of the family of warblers, the Motacilla rubicola, Linn., and the Saxicola rubicola of modern ornithologists. The stone-chats are common in Europe, and frequent moors and other open wastes. They run with much celerity, and their food consists of insects and worms, which they take chiefly upon the ground. In Scotland, the wheat ear, Saxicola æwanthe, is usually named stone-chat, or stone-chack.

STONE-COAL, n. Hard coal; anthracite.

STONE-CRAY, n. A distemper in hawks.

STONE-CROP, n. [Sax. stan-crop.] The common name of various British species of plants of the genus Sedum. [See SEDUM.]

STONE-CURLEW, n. In zool., a large species of the plover family, Edicnemus creptians of Temminck, which frequents stony places. It is also called thick-kneed plover or bustard; and, simply, thick-knee.

STONE-CUTTER, n. [stone and cut.] One whose occupation is to hew stones.

STONE-CUTTING, n. The business of hewing stones for walls, steps, cornices, monuments, &c.

STONED, pp. Pelted or killed with stones; freed from stones; walled with stones.

STONE-DEAD, a. [stone and dead.] As lifeless as a stone.

STONE-EATER, n. An animal that eats stones. Applied to certain bivalve molluscs, which form holes in rocks.

STONE-FAL'CON, n. A sort of hawk, which builds its nest in rocks.

STONE-FERN, n. [stone and fern.] A plant, the Allosorus crispus.

STONE-FLY, n. [stone and fly.] An insect, the May fly.

STONE-FRUIT, n. [stone and fruit.] Fruit whose seeds are covered with a hard shell enveloped in the pulp, as peaches, cherries, plums, &c.; a drupe.

STONE-GALL, n. The name given by workmen to a roundish mass of clay, often occurring in variegated sandstone. Stone-galls lessen the value of stones for building.

STONE-HAWK, n. [stone and hawk.] A kind of hawk which builds its nest in rocks; Lithofalco.

STONE-HEARTED, } a. [stone and

STONY-HEARTED, } heart.] Hard hearted; cruel; pitiless; unfeeling.

STONEHENGE, n. [Sax. stan, stone; and heng or hang, to hang or support.] A remarkable monument of antiquity, about six miles from Salisbury in England. It consists of two circles and two ovals, composed of huge stones, uprights and impost. The outer or largest circle is 105 feet in diameter, and between it and the interior smaller circle is a space of about 9 feet. Within this smaller circle, which is half the height (8 feet) of the exterior one, was a portion of an ellipse, formed by five groups of stones, which have been called trilithons, because formed by two vertical and one horizontal stone. Within this ellipse is another of single stones, half the height of the trilithons. The outer circle was originally composed of thirty upright stones, at nearly equal distances apart; sustaining as many stones in a horizontal position, forming a continuous impost. The inner circle consisted of about the same number of upright stones of smaller size, and without impost. Within the inner elliptical enclosure was a block of stone, 16 feet long, 4 feet broad, and 20 inches thick. This has usually been called the altar stone. Round the larger circle, and at the distance of 100 feet, was a vallum 52 feet in width, and 15 in height. Nothing is known respecting the date of the erection of this wonderful monument of antiquity. It has been conjectured that the priests of the ancient Britons were priests of Baal, and hence that Stonehenge was a temple for the worship of Baal.

Stonehenge.

STONE-HORSE, n. [stone and horse.] A horse not castrated.

STONE-HOUSE, n. [stone and house.] A house built of stone.

STONE-MASON, n. One who shapes and places stones for buildings.

STONE-MORTAR, n. A kind of mortar in which stones are laid.

STONE-PARSLEY, n. A British plant of the genus Sison, the S. amomum, called also hedge stonewort. [See Sison.]

STONE-PINE, n. A tree of the genus Pinus, the P. pinea, common in the south of Italy. [See PINE.]

STONE-PIT, n. [stone and pit.] A pit or quarry where stones are dug.

STONE-PITCH, n. [stone and pitch.] Hard inspissated pitch.

STONE-PLANT, n. In bot., the lithophyte,—which see.

STONE-POUVER, } n. [stone and plo-

STONE'S-THROW, } or throw.] The distance which a stone may be thrown by the hand.

STONE-SEED, n. A perennial plant.

STONE-SQUARER, n. [stone and square.] One who forms stones into squares; 1 Kings v.

STONE-STILL, a. [stone and still.] Still as a stone; perfectly still or motionless.

STONE-WALL, n. [stone and wall.] A wall built of stones.

STONE-WARE, n. [stone and ware.] A species of potter's ware. It is a composition of clay and flint. The clay is beaten in water and purified, and the flint is calcined, ground, and suspended in water, and then mixed, (in various proportions for various wares,) with the former liquor. The mixture is then dried in a kiln, and being afterwards beaten to a proper temper, it becomes fit for being formed at the wheel into dishes, plates, bowls, &c.

These are baked in a furnace, and glazed by common salt. The salt being thrown into the furnace, is instantly converted into a thick vapour, which attaches itself to the surface of the ware, and forms that vitreous coat upon the surface which is called its glaze.

STONE-WEED, n. A troublesome weed, of the genus Lithospermum, having spear-shaped flowers, with yellowish or milk-white corols.

STONE-WORK, n. [stone and work.] Work or wall consisting of stone; mason's work of stone.

STONE-WORT, n. The common name of two British plants of the genus Sison, S. amomum, hedge stone-wort, called also bastard stone-parsley; and S. segetum, stone-wort, called also corn-parsley. [See Sison.] The same name is also given to two British plants of the genus chara.

STONINESS, n. [from stony.] The quality of abounding with stones; as, the stoniness of ground renders it difficult to till.—2. Hardness of heart.

STONY, a. [D. steenig; G. steinig; Sw. steneg.] 1. Made of stone; as, a stony tower.—2. Consisting of stone; as, a stony cave.—3. Full of stones; abounding with stones; as, stony ground.—4. Petrifying; as, the stony dart of senseless cold.—5. Hard; cruel; unrelenting; pitiless; as, a stony heart.—6. Insensible; obdurate; perverse; morally hard.

STONY-HEARTED, a. Hard-hearted.

STOOD, pret. of Stand.

STOOK, n. [W. ystwoc, a shock of grain.] A shock of corn, consisting of twelve sheaves. [Scotch.]

STOOK, v. t. To set up sheaves of grain in stooks. [Scotch.]

STOOK'ING, n. The operation of setting up sheaves of corn in stooks or shoeks. [Scotch.]

STOOL, n. [Sax. stol, Goth. stols, a seat, a throne; G. stuhl, a stool, a stock, a pew, a chair, the see of a bishop; W. ystal. This coincides with stall and still. A stool is that which is set, or a seat; Russ. prestol, a throne.]

1. A seat without a back; a little form consisting of a board with three or four legs, intended as a seat for one person. 2. The seat used in evacuating the contents of the bowels; hence, an evacuation; a discharge from the bowels.—3. [L. stolo.] The root of a timber tree which throws up shoots. Coppice wood consists chiefly of the shoots sent up by the roots of stools of trees or shrubs, which have been cut over by the surface of the ground. All dicotyledonous trees have the property of sending up shoots from the stumps or stools. Suckers or shoots from the root of a plant are also sometimes termed stools.—Stool of repentance, in Scotland, an elevated seat in the church, on which persons, in former times, were made to sit during divine service, as a punishment for fornication and adultery.—Stools in ships, are small channels fixed to the ship's sides, to contain the dead eyes for the backstays. Also, pieces of plank fastened to the ship's side, to receive the birthing of the gallery.

STOOL'-BALL, n. [stool and ball.] A play in which balls are driven from stool to stool.

STOOM, v. t. To put bags of herbs or other ingredients into wine, to prevent fermentation. [Local.]

STOOP, v. i. [Sax. stupian; D. stuipein.] 1. To bend the body downward and forward; as, to stoop to pick up a book.

—2. To bend or lean forward; to incline forward in standing or walking. We often see men stoop in standing or walking, either from habit or from age.

—3. To yield; to submit; to bend by compulsion; as, Carthage at length stooped to Rome.—4. To descend from rank or dignity; to condescend. In modern days, attention to agriculture is not called stooping in men of property.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry, it multiplieth riches exceedingly. Bacon.

A fatal stop travers'd their headlong course.—Daniel.

So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent.—Rogers.

7. The instrument by which the sounds of wind music are regulated; as, the stops of a flute or an organ. The stops of an organ are a collection of pipes similar in tone and quality, which run through the whole or a great part of the compass of the instrument. In great organs, the stops are numerous and multifarious; but the principal ones are the two diapasons, the principal, the twelfth, the fifteenth, the sesquialtera, the mixture or furniture, the trumpet, the clarion, and the cornet. The choir-organ usually contains the stopt diapason, the dulciana, the principal, the flute, the twelfth, the bassoon, and the vox humana. The stops of an organ are so arranged, that by means of registers the air proceeding from the bellows may be admitted to supply each stop or series of pipes, or excluded from it at pleasure; and a valve is opened when the proper key is touched, which causes all the pipes belonging to the note, in those series of which the registers are open, to sound at once. Several of the stops are designed to produce imitations of different musical instruments, as the trumpet, clarion, cornet and flute stops.—8. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.

In the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets.—Bacon.

9. The act of applying the stops in music.

Th' organ-sound a time survives the stop.—Daniel.

10. A point or mark in writing, intended ed to distinguish the sentences, parts of a sentence or clauses, and to show the proper pauses in reading. The stops generally used are the comma, semi-colon, colon, and period. To these may be added the marks of interrogation and exclamation.

STOP-COCK, n. [stop and cock.] A turning cock used in plumbery to turn off or regulate the supply of water, gas, &c., which flows through pipes.

STOP-GAP, † n. [stop and gap.] A temporary expedient.

STOP-LESS, † a. Not to be stopped.

STOP-PAGE, n. The act of stopping or arresting progress or motion; or the state of being stopped; as, the stoppage of the circulation of the blood; the stoppage of commerce.—Stoppage in transitu, in law, the term applied to the right which a seller of goods has to stop them in their transit or passage to the buyer, in case of his bankruptcy or insolvency. When a seller of goods has committed them to some middleman, as a carrier, shipmaster, &c., to be conveyed to the buyer, and if the buyer should become insolvent or unable to pay the price, while the goods are in the hands of the middleman, the seller may remand them, and retain them in security. The doctrine of stoppage in transitu is the same, in its practical operation, in the laws of England and Scotland.

STOPPED, pp. Closed; obstructed; hindered from proceeding; impeded; intercepted.

STOPPER, n. One who stops, closes, shuts, or hinders; that which stops or obstructs; that which closes or fills a vent or hole in a vessel.—2. In seamen's lan., a short piece of rope used for making something fast, as the anchor or cables. Stoppers are also used to prevent the running rigging from coming up, whilst the men are belaying it.

STOPPER, v. t. To close with a stopper.—To stopper the cable, among seamen, is to put stoppers on it to prevent it from running out of the ship when riding at anchor.

STOPPER BOLTS, n. In ship-building, large ring-bolts which are driven into the deck before the main hatch, &c., for the use of the stoppers.

STOPPERED, pp. Closed with a stopper; as, a stoppered retort.

STOPPERING, ppr. Closing with a stopper.

STOPPING, ppr. Closing; shutting; obstructing; hindering from proceeding; ceasing to go or move; putting an end to; regulating the sounds of.—2. Amongst workmen generally, the filling up of holes and cracks in their work.

STOP-PLANKS, n. A certain description of dam employed on canals and other hydraulic works. In order to prevent the loss of water on canals, &c., it is usual to contract the waterway at certain points, and carry up wing-walls from below, making vertical grooves in the face of the masonry upon each side, corresponding with each other, for the insertion of hatches or stop-planks. Provision is made for stop-planks in most hydraulic works; for instance, grooves are made at each end of a lock, on the outside of the chamber, in order that the water may be kept out during any repairs.

STOPPLE, n. [Sw. stopp.] That which stops or closes the mouth of a vessel; as, a glass stopple; a cork stopple.

STOPS, n. In joinery, pieces of wood nailed on the frame of a door to form the recess or rebate into which the door shuts.

STORAGE, n. [from store.] The act of depositing in a store or warehouse for safe keeping; or the safe keeping of goods in a warehouse.—2. The price charged or paid for keeping goods in a store.

STORAX, n. [L. styrax.] A resinous and odoriferous balsam. It is obtained by incisions made in the branches of the Styrax officinalis, a small tree which grows in the Levant, and also known by the name of Storax. The best is imported in red tears, but the common sort in large cakes. This last is the most fragrant, though very impure. Storax has an agreeable, slightly pungent, and aromatic taste; it is stimulant, and in some degree expectorant. Formerly it was much employed in medicine, but it is now little used, except in perfumes. [See STYRAX.]

Storax (Styrax officinalis).

Liquid storax is obtained from the Liquid amber, Styraciflua, a tree which grows in Virginia. It is greenish, of an agreeable taste, and aromatic smell.—Benjamin storax is obtained from the Styrax benzoin, a native of Sumatra and Java.

STORE, n. [W. ystor, that forms a bulk, a store; Sax. stor; Dan. stor; Sw. id. great, ample, spacious, main; Ir. stor, storas; Heb. Ch. Eth. and Ar. אֶסְרָא, atsar.] 1. † A large number; as, a store of years.—2. † A large quantity; great plenty; abundance; as, a store of wheat or provisions.—3. A stock provided; a large quantity for supply; ample abundance. The troops have great stores of provisions and ammunition. The ships have stores for a long voyage. [This is the present usual acceptance of the word, and in this sense the plural, stores, is commonly used. When applied to a single article of supply, it is still sometimes used in the singular; as, a good store of wine or bread.]—4. Quantity accumulated; fund; abundance; as, stores of knowledge.—5. A storehouse; a magazine; a warehouse.—6. In the United States, shops for the sale of goods of any kind, by wholesale or retail, are often called stores.—In store, in a state of accumulation, in a literal sense; hence, in a state of preparation for supply; in a state of readiness. Happiness is laid up in store for the righteous; misery is in store for the wicked. STORE, a. Hoarded; laid up; as, store treasure, store fruit, &c.

STORIAL, † a. [from story.] Historical.

STORIED, a. [from story.] Furnished with stories; adorned with historical paintings.

Some greedy minion or imperious wife,
The trophied arches, storied halls, invade.

Pope.

2. Related or referred to in story; told or recited in history.

STORIED, pp. Told in historical relation; narrated; inscribed with stories; as, a storied wall, a storied window, a storied urn.

STORIER, † n. A relater of stories; an historian.

STORIFY, † v. t. To form or tell stories.

STORING, ppr. Laying up in a store or warehouse.

STORK, n. [Sax. storc; Dan. and Sw. stork.] Ciconia, a genus of culiostretal birds belonging to the heron tribe. They are tall and stately birds, and easily distinguished from the herons by their small mouth, the beak being moderately cleft, and destitute of the nasal furrow. Most of them inhabit Europe. Their food consists of fish, reptiles, small quadrupeds, worms, and insects. The common stork (C. alba) is found throughout the greater part of Europe, but passes the winter in Africa. It is remarkable for its great affection towards its young; and, according to popular belief, for its attention towards its parents in old age. The black stork (C. nigra) occurs in Poland and Prussia, and in the sequestered parts of the Alps. The American stork is the C. magnari; and the gigantic stork, or adjutant of Bengal, is the C. argala.—In her., the stork, as an emblem of piety and gratitude, is a frequent bearing in coat armour.

STORK'S-BILL, n. The common name of three British plants of the genus Erodium. Musky stork's bill (E. moschatum) exhales a musky odour. It grows in hilly pastures.

STORM, n. [Sax. storm; D. Dan. and Sw. storm; G. sturm; W. ystorm; D. stooren, to disturb; W. ysturriaw, Eng. to stir. In Italian, stormo is a fight, combat, a band, or troop; stormire, to make a noise; stormeggiare, to throng together, to ring the alarm bell. The Italian seems to be from L. turma. The primary sense of storm is a rushing, raging, or violent agitation.] 1. A violent wind; a tempest; a violent commotion of the atmosphere. Thus a storm of wind is correct language, as the proper sense of the word is rushing, violence. It has primarily no reference to a fall of rain or snow. But as a violent wind is often attended with rain or snow, the word storm has come to be used, most improperly, for a fall of rain or snow without wind.

O beat those storms and roll the seas in vain. Pope.

Law of storms. The causes of those violent commotions of the atmosphere to which we give the name of storms, tempests, hurricanes, tornados, &c., have particularly engaged the attention of natural philosophers for several years past; but their causes are involved in great obscurity, chiefly owing to the difficulty of obtaining a precise knowledge of the various circumstances with which storms are accompanied. It is in the torrid zone that storms display the greatest violence, and rage with most destructive fury. In temperate regions they are comparatively rare, and in the polar regions they seldom amount to more than a strong wind. From the observations of Mr. Redfield of New York, the following general phenomena respecting storms which occur in the northern hemisphere, appear to be established:—1. The severest hurricanes originate in tropical latitudes to the north or east of the West India Islands. 2. They cover simultaneously an extent of surface from 100 to 150 miles in diameter, acting with diminished violence towards the exterior, and increased energy towards the interior of that space. 3. The tract over which the hurricane passes is not a straight line. South of the parallel of 30° north latitude, it proceeds in a westerly course inclined to the north; but when it comes to about this parallel, it changes rather abruptly to the north and eastward, and continues to incline gradually more to the east. The average progressive velocity appears to be from 15 to 25 miles per hour. 4. The duration of a storm at any particular place depends of course on the extent of the mass of agitated air and the progressive velocity, and storms of smaller extent move with even greater rapidity than large ones. 5. The direction of the wind in a hurricane is not in the direction of its progress. When the progressive motion of the storm is westward, the wind at the commencement is from a northern quarter, and during the latter part of the gale, from a southern quarter of the horizon. When the progressive motion is eastward, the phenomena are reversed; the wind blows at first from a southern quarter, and towards the end of the gale from a northern quarter of the horizon. From these phenomena, and particularly the last, Mr. Redfield concludes that the great body of the storm whirls in a horizontal circuit round a vertical or somewhat inclined axis of rotation, which is carried forward with the storm; and that to a spectator placed at the centre, the direction of the rotation is invariably from right to left. Colonel Reid, of the engineers, has investigated the subject of storms with great care and minuteness, and the results of his investigations he considers as in all respects confirming the conclusions of Mr. Redfield. He has also given an account of several great hurricanes in the southern hemisphere, from which it appears that the southern storms follow exactly the same law as the northern, but in a reversed order. Colonel Reid conjectures that the force and frequency of storms may have some connection with the law of magnetic intensity. A knowledge of the general laws which regulate the phenomena of storms would be of immense importance, inasmuch as it would enable the navigator to avoid those tracts of the ocean in which they chiefly prevail at particular seasons, or at least, if surprised by a storm, to steer on the course by which he may soonest escape from it, or fall into its wake. [See WHIRLWIND, WIND.]—2. A violent assault on a fortified place; a furious attempt of troops to enter and take a fortified place by scaling the walls, forcing the gates, and the like.—3. Violent civil or political commotion; sedition; insurrection; also, clamour; tumult; disturbance of the public peace.

I will stir up in England some black storms. Shak.

Her sister

Began to scold and raise up such a storm. Shak.

4. Affliction; calamity; distress; adversity.

A brave man struggling in the storms of fate. Pop.

Pop.

5. Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.

STORM, v. t. To assault; to attack and attempt to take by scaling the walls, forcing gates or breaches, and the like; as, to storm a fortified town.

STORM, v. i. To raise a tempest.—2. To blow with violence; impersonally; as, it storms.—3. To rage; to be in a violent agitation or passion; to fume. The master storms.

STORM-BEAT, a. [storm and beat.] Beaten or impaired by storms.

STORM-BIRD, } n. A sea-fowl; the STORM-FINCH, } petrel.

STORM-CKOCK, n. A bird; the missel thrush.

STORM'ED, pp. Assaulted by violence.

STORM'FUL, a. Abounding with storms.

STORM'FULNESS, n. Abundance of storms.

STORM'INESS, n. Tempestuousness; the state of being agitated by violent winds.

STORMING, ppr. Attacking with violent force; raging.

STORM'LESS, n. Free from storms.

STORM'-MENACING, a. Threatening a storm.

STORM'-PRESAGING, a. Presaging a storm.

STORM'-PROOF, a. Proof against storms or bad weather.

STORM'-TOSSED, a. Tossed by storms or high winds.

STORM'-VEXED, a. Harassed with storms.

STORM'Y, a. Tempestuous; agitated with furious winds; boisterous; as, a stormy season; a stormy day or week.—2. Proceeding from violent agitation or fury; as, a stormy sound; stormy shocks.—3. Violent; passionate. [Un-usual.]

STOR'ING, n. [Dan. stor, great, and ting, court.] The parliamentary legislature of Norway, created in 1814. It is composed of about 100 deputies, from all classes of the Norwegians, who assemble every third year on the first week-day of February, and the sittings usually continue till all public business is finished, but the king may prorogue at the end of three months. A kind of head committee, called the lagthing, sits in a chamber apart; and the two form the supreme legislature.

STORY, n. [Sax. stær, ster; L. historia; Gr. ιστορια.] 1. A verbal narration or recital of a series of facts or incidents. We observe in children a strong passion for hearing stories.—2. A written narrative of a series of facts or events. There is probably on record no story more interesting than that of Joseph in Genesis.—3. History; a written narrative or account of past transactions, whether relating to nations or individuals.

The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story. Temple.

4. Petty tale; relation of a single incident or of trifling incidents.—5. A trifling tale; a fiction; a fable; as, the story of a fairy. In popular usage, story is sometimes a softer term for a lie.—6. A loft; a stage or floor of a building, called in Scotland a flat; a subdivision of the height of a house; or a set of rooms on the same floor or level. A story comprehends the distance from one floor to another; as, a story of nine, ten, twelve, or sixteen feet elevation. Hence each floor terminating the space is called a story; as a house of one story, of two stories, of five stories. The houses in Paris have usually five stories, a few have more; those in London three or four. In the United States, the floor next the ground is the first story; in France and England, the first floor or story is the second from the ground.

STORY, v. t. To tell in historical relation; to narrate.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shak.

It is storied of the brazen colossus in Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high. Wilkins.

[This verb is chiefly used in the passive participle.]—2. To arrange under one another; to arrange in stories; to build in stories. [Little used.]

STORY-BOOK, n. A collection of short tales.

STORYING, ppr. Telling in historical relation.

STORY-POSTS, n. In arch., upright posts to support a floor or superincumbent wall, through the medium of a beam placed over them. They are chiefly used in sheds, workshops, and wooden houses.

STORY-ROD, n. In arch., a rod used in setting up a staircase, equal in length to the height of a story of a house, and divided into as many parts as there are intended to be steps in the stair, so that the steps may be measured, and distributed with accuracy.

STORY-TELLER, n. [story and tell.] One who tells stories; a narrator of a series of incidents; as, an amusing story-teller.—2. An historian; in contempt.—3. One who tells fictitious stories.

STORY-TELLING, n. The act of relating short histories, true or fictitious.

STOT, n. [Sax. stotte, a poor horse.] 1. † A horse.—2. A young bullock or steer. [Local.]

STOTE. See STOAT.

STOUND, v. i. [Icc. stunde.] 1. † To be in pain or sorrow.—2. † Stunned. [See ASTOUND.]

STOUND, † n. Sorrow; grief.—2. † A shooting pain.—3. † Noise.—4. † Astonishment; amazement.—5. † Hour; time; season. [Dan. stund.]—6. A vessel to put small beer in. [Local.]

STOUTLY, adv. Lustily; boldly; obstinately. He stoutly defended himself.

STOUT'NESS, n. Strength; bulk.—2. Boldness; fortitude.—3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

STOVE, n. [Sax. stofa; Sp. estufa, a warm close room, a bath, a room where pitch and tar are heated; estofar, to stew meat, and to quilt; Fr. etuve; G. badstube, a bagnio or hot-house; stube, a room; stuben-öfen, a stove; Dan. stover, to stew; stue, a room; stue-övn, a stove. This primarily is merely a room, a place. See STROW.] 1. A hot-house; a house or room artificially warmed.—2. A small box with an iron pan, used for holding coals to warm the feet. It is a bad practice for young persons to accustom themselves to sit with a warm stove under the feet.—3. A receptacle more or less close for the combustion of fuel for the purpose of heating apartments, &c. When it allows the burning coals to be seen, it is called a stove-grate; hence register-stoves, bath-stoves, &c. But the term stove is usually restricted to those contrivances for heating apartments in which the fire is enclosed so as to exclude it from sight, the heat being given out through the material of which the stove is composed, and the smoke conveyed away by means of a pipe leading from the stove. Stoves are of various constructions, and numerous patents have been taken out for inventions and improvements upon them. In the German stoves, the heated air before it finally enters the chimney is made to circulate through various chambers constructed over the fire box, to which it communicates much of its excess of heat, and those again impart it to the surrounding air. Sometimes buildings are warmed by sending up currents of hot air from stoves placed in the basement story.—4. An iron box with various apartments in it for cooking; a culinary utensil of various forms.—5. In horticulture, a structure in which plants are cultivated which require a considerably higher temperature than the open air in Britain and similar climates. The principal stoves of this kind are the dry stove and damp stove. The dry stove is a structure the atmosphere of which is heated to the temperature of from 55° to 60° during winter. It is employed chiefly for the cultivation of succulent plants. The damp stove, sometimes called the bark-stove and bark-bed, is used for the cultivation of tropical plants. [See BARK-BED.] Both stoves are heated by smoke-fines, or by hot water, or steam circulated in metallic or other tubes. The plants cultivated in this manner are often called stove-plants.

STOVE, v. t. To keep warm in a house or room by artificial heat; as, to stove orange trees and myrtles. In Scotland, to stove signifies to stew.

STOVE, pret. of Stave.

STÖVER, n. [a contraction of estover.] Fodder for cattle; primarily, fodder from threshed grain.

STOVING, ppr. Keeping warm by the heat of a stove, or by artificial heat.

STÖVER, v. t. [Sax. stow, a place, a fixed place or mansion; G. stauen, D. stuwen, Dan. støver, to stow, to place; Sp. and Port. estivar, id., coinciding with L. stipo, to crowd, to stuff; Sp. estiva, a rammer; L. stiva, the handle of a plough. The sense is to set or throw down, from the more general sense of throwing, driving.] 1. To place; to put in a suitable place or position; as, to stow bags, bales, or casks in a ship's hold; to stow hay in a mow; to stow sheaves. The word has reference to the placing of many things, or of one thing among many, or of a mass of things.—2. To lay up; to reposit. [Stow in names, signifies place, as in Barstow.]

STOWAGE, n. The act or operation of placing in a suitable position; or the suitable disposition of several things together. The stowage of a ship's cargo to advantage requires no little skill. It is of great consequence to make good stowage. [This is the principal use of the word.]—2. Room for the reception of things to be reposit.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures.

3. The state of being laid up. I am anxious to have the plate and jewels in safe stowage.—4. Money paid for stowing goods. [Little used.]

STOWED, pp. Placed in due position or order; reposit.

STÖWING, ppr. Placing in due position; disposing in good order.

STRABISM, n. [L. strabismus, from straba, strabo, a squint-eyed person.]

1. Squinting; a non-coincidence of the optic axes of the eyes upon an object, occasioned by a permanent lengthening of one of the lateral muscles of the ball of the eye, and a permanent shortening of its antagonist. This disorder may often be, to a great extent, overcome, especially in children, by blindfolding the sound eye, presuming one only to be affected. In very bad cases, especially those of squinting inwards, the deformity may be greatly relieved, by an operation recently introduced, which consists in dividing the internal rectus muscle of the eye-ball. This is done by proper scissors, without externally wounding the eyelid.—2. A squinting; the act or habit of looking askint.

STRAD'DLE, v. i. [from the root of stride; Sax. stredan, to scatter.] To part the legs wide; to stand or walk with the legs far apart.

STRAD'DLE, v. t. To place one leg on one side and the other on the other of any thing; as, to straddle a fence or a horse. [But in this sense there is an ellipsis of across.]

STRAD'DLING, ppr. Standing or walking with the legs far apart; placing one leg on one side and the other on the other.

STRAGGLE, v. i. (strag'l) [This word seems to be formed on the root of stray. In Sax. stragan is to strew, to spread; D. strecken, to stretch; G. strecken, to pass, to migrate; W. treiglaw, to turn, revolve, wander.] 1. To wander from the direct course or way; to rove. When troops are on the march, let not the men straggle.—2. To wander at large without any certain direction or object; to ramble. The wolf spied a *straggl*ing kid. L' Estrange.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far in growth. Prune the *straggl*ing branches of the hedge.—4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body.

They came between Scylla and Charybdis and the *straggl*ing rocks. Raleigh.

STRAG'GLER, n. A wanderer; a rover; one that departs from the direct or proper course; one that rambles without any settled direction.—2. A vagabond; a wandering shiftless fellow.—3. Something that shoots beyond the rest or too far.—4. Something that stands by itself.—5. A seaman who deserts his ship.

STRAG'GLING, ppr. Wandering; roving; rambling; being in a separate position.

STRÄHL-STEIN, n. [G. strahl, a beam or gleam, and stein, stone.] Another name of actinolite.

STRAIGHT, a. (strait.) L. strictus, from stringo; Sax. strac; formed from the root of reach, stretch, right, L. rectus, G. recht, Fr. etroit, It. stretto, in which the palatal letter is lost; but the Spanish retains it in estrecho, estretchar. It is lost in the Port. estricto.

It is customary to write straight, for direct or right, and strait, for narrow; but both senses proceed from stretching, straining.] 1. Right, in a mathematical sense; direct; passing from one point to another by the nearest course; not deviating or crooked; as, a straight line; a straight course; a straight piece of timber. [See LINE.]—2. Narrow; close; tight; as, a straight garment. [See STRAIT, as it is generally written.]—3. Upright; according with justice and rectitude; not deviating from truth or fairness.

STRAIGHT, adv. Immediately; directly; in the shortest time.

I know thy generous temper well; Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it. It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze. Addison.

STRAIGHT ARCH, n. In arch., the arch over an aperture in which the intrados is straight, or an arch consisting of straight lines and a pointed top, comprising two sides of an equilateral triangle. Its form may be considered as intermediate between that of the semi-circular and of the Gothic arch.

Straight Arch.

STRAIGHT EDGE, n. In joinery, a slip of wood made perfectly straight on the edge, and used to ascertain whether other edges are straight, or whether the face of a board is planed straight. It is made of different lengths, according to the required magnitude of the work. Its use is obvious, as its application will shew whether there is a coincidence between the straight edge and the surface or edge to which it is applied. It is also used for drawing straight lines on the surface of wood. [See WINDING STICKS.]

STRAIGHTEN, v. t. (stra'it'n.) To make straight; to reduce from a crooked to a straight form.—2. To make narrow, tense, or close; to tighten.—3. To reduce to difficulties or distress; to straighten.

STRAIGHTENED, pp. Made straight; made narrow.

STRAIGHTENER, n. He or that which straightens.

STRAIGHTENING, ppr. Making straight or narrow.

STRAIGHTFORTH, adv. Directly; henceforth.

STRAIGHTFORWARD, a. Proceeding in a straight course; not deviating. STRAIGHTFORWARDLY, adv. In a direct manner.

STRAIGHTFORWARDNESS, n. Direction in a straight course; undeviating rectitude.

STRAIGHT-JOINT FLOOR. In arch. [See FLOOR.]

STRAIGHTLINED, a. Having straight lines.

STRAIGHTLY, adv. In a right line; not crookedly.—2. Tightly; closely.

STRAIGHTNESS, n. The quality or state of being straight; rectitude.—2. Narrowness; tension; tightness.

STRAIGHT-PIGHT, adv. Straight-fixed; erect.

STRAIGHTWAY, adv. [straight and way.] Immediately; without loss of time; without delay.

He took the damsel by the hand, and said to her, Talitha cumi. And straightway the damsel arose; Mark v.

[Straightways is obsolete.]

STRAIKS, n. Strong plates of iron on the circumference of a cannon wheel, over the joints of the felloes. [See STRAKE.]

STRAIN, v. t. [Fr. etrendre; L. stringo.

This word retains its original signification, to stretch. Strain is the L. stringo, as straight is strictus, in different dialects.] 1. To stretch; to draw with force; to extend with great effort; as, to strain a rope; to strain the shrouds of a ship; to strain the cords of an instrument.—2. To cause to draw with force, or with excess of exertion; to injure by pressing with too much effort. He strained his horses or his oxen by overloading them.—3. To stretch violently or by violent exertion; to stretch beyond the proper extent; as, to strain the arm or the muscles.—4. To put to the utmost strength. Men in desperate cases will strain themselves for relief.—5. To press or cause to pass through some porous substance; to purify or separate from extraneous matter by filtration; to filter; as, to strain milk. Water may be strained through sand.—6. To sprain; to injure by drawing or stretching.

Prudes decay'd about may tack, Strain their necks with looking back.

Swift.

7. To make tighter; to cause to bind closer. To strain his fetters with a stricter care. Dryden.

8. To force; to constrain; to make uneasy or unnatural. His mirth is forced and strained. Denham.

9. To press or squeeze in an embrace. I would have strained him with a strict embrace. Dryden.

STRAIN, v. i. To make violent efforts. To build his fortune I will strain a little. Shak.

Straining with too weak a wing. Pope.
2. To be filtered. Water straining through sand becomes pure.

STRAIN, n. A violent effort; a stretching or exertion of the limbs or muscles, or of any thing else.—2. An injury by excessive exertion, drawing, or stretching.—3. Style; continued manner of speaking or writing; as, the genius and strain of the Book of Proverbs. So we say, poetic strains, lofty strains.—4. Song; note; sound; or a particular part of a tune. Their heavenly harps a lower strain began. Dryden.

5. Turn; tendency; inborn disposition. Because heretics have a strain of madness, he applied her with some corporal chastisements. Hayward.

6. Manner of speech or action. Such take too high a strain at first. Bacon.
7. Race; generation; descent. He is of a noble strain. Shak.

8. Hereditary disposition. Intemperance and lust breed diseases, which propagated, spoil the strain of a nation. Tillotson.

9. Rank; character.—10. In mech., the force which acts on any material, and which tends to disarrange its component parts or destroy their cohesion. A solid body may be subjected to four different kinds of strains: 1. A longitudinal strain, which tends to pull its parts asunder; 2. A transverse strain, which tends to break it asunder; 3. A compressing strain, which tends to crush it; and 4. A strain of torsion, which tends to wrench it asunder. In all edifices and machines there must be a just adaptation of the strength at any one point to the strain there experienced, as upon this adaptation depends the stability of the whole.

STRAINABLE, † a. Capable of being strained.

STRAINED, pp. Stretched; violently exerted; filtered.

STRAINER, n. That through which any liquid passes for purification; an instrument for filtration.

STRAINING, ppr. Stretching; exerting with violence; making great efforts; filtering.

STRAINING, n. The act of stretching; the act of filtering; filtration.

STRAINING PIECE, n. In arch., a beam placed between two opposite beams to prevent their nearer approach; as rafters, braces, struts, &c. If such a piece performs also the office of a sill, it is called a straining sill.

STRAINT, † n. A violent stretching or tension.

STRAIT, a. [See STRAIGHT.] Narrow; close; not broad; tense; tight.

Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth to life, and few there be that find it; Matt. vii.

2. Close; intimate; as, a strait degree of favour.—3. Strict; rigorous.

He now, forsooth, takes on him to reform Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees. Shak.

4. Difficult; distressful.—5. Strait; not crooked. [Lit. us. See STRAIGHT.]—6. Stingy; avaricious.

STRAIT, n. [See STRAIGHT.] A narrow pass or passage, either in a mountain or in the ocean, between continents or other portions of land; as, the straits of Gibraltar; the straits of Magellan; the straits of Dover. [In this sense, the plural is more generally used than the singular, and often without any apparent reason or propriety.]—2. Distress; difficulty; distressing necessity; formerly written streight. [Used either in the singular or plural.]

Let not man who owns a Providence, become desperate under any calamity or strait whatsoever. South.

Ulysses made use of the pretence of natural infirmity to conceal the straits he was in at that time in his thoughts. Broom.

STRAIT, † v. t. To put to difficulties.

STRAIT-EDGE, n. A small board or piece of metal having one edge perfectly straight; used to ascertain whether a surface is perfectly plane, &c. [See STRAIGHT EDGE.]

STRAITEN, v. t. (stra'itn.) To make narrow.

In narrow circuit straiten'd by a foe. Milton.

2. To contract; to confine; as, to straiten the British commerce.—3. To make tense or tight; as, to straiten a cord.—4. To distress; to perplex; to press with poverty or other necessity; as, a man straitened in his circumstances.—5. To press by want of sufficient room.

Waters, when straitened, as at the falls of bridges, give a roaring noise. Bacon.

STRAITENED, pp. Made narrow; contracted; perplexed.

STRAIT-HANDED, a. [strait and hand.] Parsimonious; sparing; niggardly. [Not much used.]

STRAIT-HAND'EDNESS, n. Niggardliness; parsimony.

STRAIT-JACKET. See STRAIT-WAISTCOAT.

STRAIT-LACED, a. [strait and lace.] Griped with stays.

We have few well-shaped that are strait-laced. Locke.

2. Stiff; constrained. Hence,—3. Rigid in opinion; strict.

STRAITLY, adv. Narrowly; closely.—2. Strictly; rigorously. [For this, strictly is now used.]—3. Closely; intimately.

STRAITNESS, n. Narrowness; as, the straitness of a place; straitness of mind; straitness of circumstances.—2. Strictness; rigour; as, the straitness of a man's proceedings.—3. Distress; difficulty; pressure from poverty of any kind, particularly from poverty.—4. Want; scarcity; or rather narrowness; as, the straitness of the conveniences of life.

STRAM'ONINE, n. A crystalline compound found along with datuline in the seeds of Datura stramonium. It is crystallizable, volatile, soluble in alcohol and ether, insoluble in water. Its nature is uncertain and its composition unknown.

STRAM'ONY, or THORN APPLE, n. A narcotic plant, the Datura stramonium. [See DATURA.]

STRAND, n. [Sax. strand; G. D. Dan. and Sw. strand.] 1. The shore or beach of the sea or ocean, or of a large lake, and perhaps of a navigable river. It is never used of the bank of a small river or pond. The Dutch on the Hudson apply it to a landing place; as, the strand at Kingston.—2. One of the twists or parts of which a rope is composed. [Russ. struma, a cord or string.]

STRAND, v. t. To drive or run aground on the sea shore; as a ship.—2. To break one of the strands of a rope.

STRAND, v. i. To drift or be driven on shore; to run aground; as, a ship strands at high water.

STRAND'ED, pp. Run ashore; a term applied to a ship that is driven on a rock or shoal by a tempest, or run aground through ill steerage, so as to be either rendered useless or entirely dashed to pieces.—2. Having a strand broken; as a rope or cable.

STRAND'ING, ppr. Running ashore; breaking a strand.

STRAND'ING, n. The running of a ship on the shore, beach, or strand, by which she is wrecked. By statute, all sheriffs, justices, &c., on application from those in danger of being, or who actually have been, stranded or run on shore, are required to call together as many men as may be necessary, and demand aid from the queen's ships, or those of her subjects in the neighbourhood, under a penalty of £100 on the superior officer who refuses to obey the call. The master of the stranded ship is entitled to repel by force all who intrude without leave of the officer of customs, &c.; and provision is made for the orderly proceedings of salvors, and for the settling of the salvage.

STRANGE, a. [Fr. etrange; It. strano, strange, foreign, pale, wan, rude, unpolite; stranare, to alienate, to remove, to abuse; stranare, to separate; Sp. extraño, foreign, extraneous, rare, wild; L. extraneus; W. estronaiz, strange; estrawm, a stranger. The primary sense of the root tran is to depart, to proceed; W. trawm, over; traw, an advance or distance.] 1. Foreign; belonging to another country.

I do not contemn the knowledge of strange and divers tongues. [This sense is nearly obsolete.] Ascham.

STRAP'PING, ppr. Binding or beating with a strap.—2. a. Tall; or lusty; as, a strapping fellow. [Vulgar.]-In Scotch, strapping or strappan signifies tall and handsome.

STRAP'-SHAPED, a. In bot., ligulate, —which see.-Strap-shaped corolla, a corolla which is tubular at the base, then slit on one side, so that the limb becomes flat, as in the Dandelion.

STRAP'-WORT, n. A British plant of the genus Corrigiola, the C. littoralis, belonging to the nat. order Illecebraceæ or knot-grass tribe. It is an annual with spreading stems, leaves between lance-shaped and linear, and numerous white flowers. It grows on the eastern coast of England.

STRASS, n. A compound mineral substance, used in making artificial gems.

STRATA, n. plur. [See STRATUM.]

Beds; layers; as, strata of sand, clay, or coal.

STRAT'AGEM, n. [L. stratagem; Fr. stratagème; Gr. στρατηγικη, from στρατηγος, to lead an army.] 1. An artifice, particularly in war; a plan or scheme for deceiving an enemy.—2. Any artifice; a trick by which some advantage is intended to be obtained.

Those oft are stratagems which errors seem. Pope.

STRATAGEM'ICAL, a. Containing stratagem, or artifice. [Little used.]

STRATARITH'METRY, n. [Gr. στρατηγικός, a camp, ἀριθμός, a multitude, and μετρον, measure.] In milit. tactics, the art of drawing up an army or body of men in a geometrical figure.

STRATE'GIC, } a. Pertaining to STRATE'GICAL, } strategy; effected by artifice.

STRATE'GICS, } n. pl. See STRA-

STRATEGE'TICS, } TEGY.

STRATE'GIST, n. One skilled in the art of arranging an army for conflict.

STRATE'GUS, n. [Gr. στρατηγός.] An Athenian general officer.

STRATE'GY, or STRATE'GY, n. Properly, the science of combining and employing the means which the different branches of the art of war afford, for the purpose of forming projects of operations, and of directing great military movements. It was formerly distinguished from the art of making dispositions and of manœuvring, when in the presence of the enemy; but military writers now, in general, comprehend all these subjects under the denomination of grand and elementary tactics. [See TACTICS.]

STRATH, n. [Gael. srath, a country confined by hills on two sides of a river.] In Scotland, a valley of considerable size, through which a river runs. Such a valley is generally designated by prefixing strath to the name of the river; as, Strathspey, Strathdon, Strathearn, &c.

STRATH'SPEY, n. In Scotland, a species of dance in which two persons are engaged. It is so denominated from the country of Strathspey, probably as having been first used there.—2. A species of dance music in common time, peculiar to Scotland. It probably originated in the same district as the above dance, and at the same time, but it is not now confined to that dance.

STRATIFICATION, n. [from stratify.] The process by which substances in the earth have been formed into strata or layers.—2. The arrangement of substances in strata or layers; one upon another, like the leaves of a book; as the stratification of rocks.—3. The act of laying in strata.

STRATIFIED, pp. Arranged or disposed in layers or strata, as stratified rocks. Rocks are divided into stratified and unstratified. Stratified rocks are those which are disposed in layers one above the other; as, slates, sandstones, limestones. Unstratified rocks appear in masses, without any such arrangement as that exhibited by the stratified rocks. Granite, greenstone, and lava belong to the latter class.

STRATIFORM, a. In the form of strata.

STRATIFY, v. t. [Fr. stratifier, from L. stratum.] 1. To form into a layer, as substances in the earth. Thus clay, sand, and other species of earth are often found stratified.—2. To lay in strata.

STRATIFYING, ppr. Arranging in a layer, as terrene substances.

STRATIGRAPHICAL, a. Belonging to stratigraphy.

STRATIGRAPHICALLY, adv. In a stratigraphical manner.

STRATIO'NES, n. A genus of aquatic plants, nat. order Hydrocharaceæ. There is only one species a native of Britain, the S. aloides or water-soldier, which grows in lakes, pools, and ditches.

It is a singular plant, with numerous sword-shaped leaves and white flowers, from a compressed two-leaved spathe.

STRATOE'RACY, n. [Gr. στρατος, an army, and κρατος, to hold.] A military government; government by military chiefs and an army.

STRATOG'RAPHY, n. [Gr. στρατος, an army, and γραφω, to describe.] Description of armies, or what belongs to an army.

STRATON'IC, a. Pertaining to an army.

STRATOT'IC, a. Warlike; military.

STRAT'UM, n. plur. Strata. [L. from sterno, to spread or lay; Sax. streone.] 1. In geol. and mineral., a layer of any deposited substance, as sand, clay, limestone, &c., which is spread out over a certain surface by the action of water, or in some cases by wind. The deposition of successive layers of sand and gravel in the bed of a river, or in a canal, affords an illustration both of the form and origin of strata. Some geologists make a distinction between a stratum and a bed, restricting the latter term to the thicker kind of strata; others, however, use the terms synonymously. Strata are masses having a much greater extension in two of their dimensions than in the third, and generally occupying large spaces. In its simplest or most perfect form, the stratum may be considered as a great bed or plate, of which the upper and lower surfaces are straight and parallel. But many modifications are observed; for the surfaces may be inclined to each other, so that if prolonged they would terminate in an edge, or the stratum may be thicker at one part than another; or it may be variously bent, undulated, or fractured. While some strata are horizontal, others are perpendicular, and all intermediate degrees of inclination are met with. Strata of sandstone and clay are generally supposed to have been deposited from the turbid waters of the sea, lakes, or rivers, their laminae being arranged over each other in a regular manner. Others again, as of mica-slate, are supposed to have resulted from chemical precipitation. A stratum may vary in thickness from a few yards to a thousand feet or more. Strata are separated from each other by seams or parallel planes, and sometimes by joints or fissures, forming some angle with the planes. When a stratum does not lie horizontally but is inclined, it is said to dip towards some point of the compass, and the angle it makes with the horizon is called the angle of dip or inclination. The direction or strike of the strata is indicated by a horizontal line at right angles to the dip. When strata protrude above the surface, or appear uncovered, they are said to crop out. They are said to be conformable, when their planes are parallel, whatever their dip may be; and unconformable, when a set of them are connected with another, so that the planes of stratification of the one series have a different direction from that of the other series. On examining the crust of the earth, we find that it consists chiefly of distinct strata of different materials. These differ in depth and extent, but they are found to follow each other, on the large scale, as masses in an apparently regular and uniform succession, in all places, districts, and countries, where they admit of examination, and have been attentively studied. They appear in most instances to rest upon, and are blended with, invaded, and, in some few instances, overflowed, as it were, by unstratified rocks. Stratified rocks have been divided, according to the order of their deposition, into four groups: 1. Primary; 2. Secondary; 3. Tertiary; 4. Alluvial. The primary or lowest stratified rocks, such as gneiss, mica slate, clay-slate, quartz, &c., are distinguished from the others by a crystalline structure, and by containing no organic remains. These secondary stratified rocks, commencing with the graywacke, and ending with the chalk, are found to contain remains of plants and animals for the most part extinct. They have been variously grouped and subdivided by geologists. The tertiary stratified rocks include the eocene, miocene, older pliocene, and newer pliocene of Lyell. [See these terms.] The alluvial, or recent strata, consist of alluvial, concretionary, coralline, and vegetable deposits.—2. A bed or layer artificially made.

STRAT'US, n. [L.] Fall cloud; a name applied to fogs, mists, and other extensive sheets of clouds that rest on the earth's surface. [See CLOUD.]

STRAUGHT, pp. for Stretched.

STRAVAIG', v. i. [It. stravagare, from L. extravagare.] To stroll; to wander; to go about idly. [Scotch.]

STRAW, n. [Sax. strew, straw, and a stratum or bed; G. stroh; Dan. straae; L. stramentum, from sterno, stravi, stratum. See STREW.] 1. The stalk or stem of certain species of grain, pulse, &c., chiefly of wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, and peas. When used of single stalks, it admits of a plural, straws. Straws may show which way the wind blows. We say of grain while growing, the straw is large, or it is rusty.—2. A mass of the stalks of certain species of grain when cut, and after being thrashed; as, a bundle or a load of straw. In this sense, the word admits not the plural number. Straw is used for various purposes; as for fodder to cattle, as thatch for corn stacks and houses, ropes for securing the thatch of corn stacks, &c.; litter for cattle and horses; and finally, as manure. Wheat-straw is the material chiefly used in the manufacture of straw bonnets for ladies.—3. Any thing proverbially worthless. I care not a straw for the play. I will not abate a straw.

STRAW, v. t. To spread or scatter. [See STREW and STROW.]

STRAW'BERRY, n. [straw and berry; Sax. straw-berie.] The English name of the fruit and plant of the Fragaria, a genus of plants, nat. order Rosaceæ. The fruit of the Fragaria is one of the most delicious of our summer fruits. The species are perennial plants, throwing out runners; the leaves are trifoliate, each leaflet being coarsely toothed; the receptacle on which is seated the carpels, and which is called the fruit, is round, and assumes a variety of colours, from a scarcely perceptible pink to a dark red. All the species are natives of temperate or cold climates, and are found in Europe, America, and the mountains of Asia. The following species afford the varieties of cultivated strawberries: 1. Wood or Alpine strawberry, F. vesca, found wild in woods and on hill sides throughout Europe, and abundant in Great Britain. Of this species there are several varieties cultivated in gardens; as the red, the white, the American, and Danish Alpine strawberries; the red wood strawberry, the white wood strawberry, and the red and white Alpine bush strawberry. 2. The hill strawberry, F. collina, a native of Switzerland and Germany. The varieties of strawberries called green, are the produce of this species. 3. Hautbois strawberry, F. elatior, a native of North America. It is the parent of a great number of sorts known in gardens, most of which are much prized, as the black, brown, and common hautbois, the globe, the large flat hautbois, the long-fruited muscatella, and Sir Joseph Banks. 4. Virginian strawberry, F. virginiana, a native of Virginia. To this species belongs the great list of sorts, cultivated in gardens, and known by the name of scarlet and black strawberries. The various kinds of scarlet, globe, cone, and some pine strawberries are produced from this species. 5. Large flowered strawberry, F. grandiflora, a native of Surinam, which has furnished our gardens with the sorts called pine strawberries. 6. Chili strawberry, F. chilensis, a native of Chili and Peru, and the parent of a number of mostly inferior strawberries. Strawberries, when ripe, may be eaten in almost any quantity without injury. They are frequently eaten mixed with sugar and cream or wine. When ripe and well grown they hardly require such additions; but when their sugar is deficient, this may be safely added, and the addition of wine, under these circumstances, should be preferred to cream, as the latter is very liable to disagree with delicate stomachs.

STRAW'BERRY-PEAR, n. A plant of the genus cactus, the C. triangularis, which grows in the West India Islands. It bears the best flavoured fruit of any Strawberry Pear (Cactus triangularis).

of the Cactaceæ. It is sweetish, slightly acid, pleasant, and cooling.

STRAWBERRY-TREE, n. An evergreen tree of the genus Arbutus, the A. unedo, a native of the South of Europe, and found in a wild state near Killarney in Ireland; the fruit is of a fleshy substance, like a strawberry. It is edible, and in Spain both a sugar and spirit are extracted from it.

STRAW'-BONNET, n. A bonnet for females, made of plaited wheat-straw.

STRAW'-BUILT, a. [straw and built.] Constructed of straw; as, the suburbs of a straw-built citadel.

STRAW'-COLOUR, n. The colour of dry straw; a beautiful yellowish colour.

STRAW'-COLOURED, a. Of a light yellow, the colour of dry straw.

STRAW'-CROWNED, a. Covered with straw.

STRAW'-CUTTER, n. An instrument to cut straw for fodder.

STRAW'-DRAIN, n. A drain filled with straw.

STRAW'-HAT, n. A woman's hat made of straw, as a Leghorn hat. Straw hats are also manufactured for men.

STRAW'-HOUSE, n. In agric., a house for holding straw after the grain has been thrashed out.

STRAW'-PLAIT, n. Ribbons formed of wheat straws plaited together, from half an inch to an inch broad. These when sewed together, according to fancy or fashion, form different descriptions of ladies' bonnets; and the commoner plait and coarser straw form men's hats. There are various kinds of plait in general use, some of which are composed of entire straws, and others of split straws. The straw chiefly used for plait is that of the tritæum turgidum, a variety of bearded wheat, cultivated in Italy between Leghorn and Florence.

STRAW'-ROOFED, a. Having a roof of straw.

STRAW'-ROPE, n. A rope made of straw twisted, and used to secure the thatch of corn ricks and stacks, and also the thatch of the poorer description of cottages.

STRAW'-STUFFED, a. Stuffed with straw.

STRAW'-WORM, n. [straw and worm.] A worm bred in straw.

STRAW'Y, a. Made of straw; consisting of straw.—2. Like straw; light.

STRAY, v. i. [The elements of this word are not certainly known. If they are strag, the word coincides with Sax. stragan, stregan, to scatter, to spread, the L. stravi, Eng. to strow, strew, or straw, also with G. streichen, to wander, to strike; both probably from the root of reach, stretch. Possibly stray is from the It. straviare, from L. extra and via. We are inclined, however, to refer it to a Teutonic origin. See STRAGGLE.] 1. To wander, as from a direct course; to deviate or go out of the way. We say, to stray from the path or road into the forest or wood.—2. To wander from company, or from the proper limits; as, a sheep strays from the flock; a horse strays from an inclosure.—3. To rove; to wander from the path of duty or rectitude; to err; to deviate.

We have erred and strayed.

Common Prayer.

4. To wander; to rove at large; to play free and unconfined.

L., the glad gales o'er all her beauties stray,
Breathe on her lips and in her bosom play.

Pope.

5. To wander; to run a serpentine course.

Where Thames among the wanton valley strays.

Denham.

STRAY, † v. t. To mislead.

STRAY, n. Any domestic animal that has left an inclosure or its proper place and company, and wanders at large or is lost. The laws provide that strays shall be taken up, impounded and advertised.

Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a stray.

Dryden.

2. The act of wandering. [Little used.]

STRAYER, n. A wanderer.

STRAYING, ppr. Wandering; roving; departing from the direct course, from the proper inclosure, or from the path of duty.

STRAYING, n. The act of wandering away.

STREAK, n. [Sax. strica, a line, direction, course; strican, to go; stric, a stroke, a plague, and strec, a stretch; G. streich, a stroke or stripe, and strich, id.; D. streeh, a course; Dan. streg, a stroke or line; strihke, a cord; strög, a stroke, a tract, a row; Sw. stråk; Ir. strioc. These have all the same elements, and the L. stria is probably a contraction of the same word; Sp. traca, without a prefix.] 1. A line or long mark, of a different colour from the ground; a stripe.

What mean those colour'd streaks in heaven?

Milton.

2. In a ship, streaks are the uniform ranges of planks on the bottom or sides of a ship; or the continuation of planks joined to each other at their ends, and reaching from the stem to the stern post. The lowest of these is called the garboard streak, which is let into the keel below, and into the stem and stern post. The word is sometimes written and pronounced strakes.—3. In min., the appearance of a mineral which arises from its being scratched with a hard sharp instrument. The streak is said to be similar, when the colour of the powder produced by scratching the mineral is the same with the colour of the mineral itself; and when the colour varies, the streak is said to be dissimilar.

STREAK, v. t. To form streaks or stripes in; to stripe; to variegate with lines of a different colour or of different colours.

A mule admirably streaked and dappled with white and black. Sandys.
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning
red. Prior.

2. To stretch. [Not elegant.]

STREAKED, pp. Marked or variegated with stripes of a different colour.

STREAKING, ppr. Making streaks in.

STREAKY, a. Having stripes; striped; variegated with lines of a different colour.

STREAM, n. [Sax. stream; G. strom; W. ystrym; Ir. sreamh or creav.] 1. A current of water or other fluid; a liquid substance flowing in a line or course, either on the earth, as a river or brook, or from a vessel or other reservoir or fountain. Hence.—2. A river, brook or rivulet.—3. A current of water in the ocean; as, the gulf stream.—4. A current of melted metal or other substance; as, a stream of lead or iron flowing from a furnace; a stream of lava from a volcano.—5. Any thing issuing from a source and moving with a continued succession of parts; as, a stream of words; a stream of sand.

A stream of beneficence. Atterbury.

6. † A continued current or course; as, a stream of weather.

The stream of his life. Shak.

7. A current of air or gas, or of light.

—8. Current; drift; as, of opinions or manners. It is difficult to oppose the stream of public opinion.—9. Water.

STREAM, v. i. To flow; to move or run in a continuous current. Blood streams from a vein.

Beneath the banks where rivers stream.

Milton.

2. To emit; to pour out in abundance. His eyes streamed with tears.—3. To issue with continuance, not by fits.

From op'ning skies may streaming glories shine.

Pope.

4. To issue or shoot in streaks; as, light streaming from the east.—5. To extend; to stretch in a long line; as, a flag streaming in the wind.

STREAM, v. t. To mark with colours or embroidery in long tracts.

The herald's mantle is streamed with gold.

Bacon.

STREAMER, n. An ensign or flag; a pennon extended or flowing in the wind; a poetic use of the word.

Brave Rupert from afar appears,

Whose waving streamers the glad general knows.

Dryden.

Auroral streamer, a luminous beam or column; one of the forms of the Aurora Borealis.

STREAMING, ppr. Flowing; running in a current.—2. Emitting; pouring out in abundance; as, streaming eyes.—3. Flowing; floating loosely; as a flag. In her., an epithet for a comet sending forth a stream of light.

STREAMING, n. In tin mines, the management of a stream work, or of stream tin during the process of refinement.

STREAMLET, n. A small stream; a rivulet; a rill.

STREAM-TIN, n. Among miners, tin ore, or native oxide of tin, found beneath the surface of alluvial ground, in rounded particles and masses, mixed with other alluvial matters. It is separated from the earthy matters by passing a stream of water over it;

hence the name. The finest grain-tin is obtained from this ore.

STREAM-WORKS, n. In tin mines, the repositories in which stream tin is found.

STREAMY, a. Abounding with running water.

Arcadia.

However streamy now, adust and dry,
Denied the goddess water.

Prior.

2. Flowing with a current or streak. His nodding helm emits a streamy ray. Pope.

STREET, n. [Sax. stræte, strete; G. strasse; Ir. sraid; W. ystryd; L. stratum, from stratus, strewed or spread. See STREW.] 1. Properly, a paved way or road; but in usage, any way or road in a city, having houses on one or both sides, chiefly a main way, in distinction from a lane or alley. In common usage, the word street often includes the houses as well as the open way.—2. Streets, plural, any public way, road, or place.

That there be no complaining in our streets; Ps. cxlv.

STREET-DOOR, n. An outer-door. STREET-KEEPER, n. A kind of local policeman, who has the supervision of a street, &c.

STREET-PACING, a. Perambulating the streets.

STREET-WALKER, n. [street and walk.] A common prostitute.—2. An idler.

STREET-WARD, n. [street and ward.] Formerly, an officer who had the care of the streets.

STREIGHT, † n. A narrow. [See STRAIT.]

STREIGHT, † adv. Strictly. [See STRAIT.]

STREL'ITE, n. In min., anthropophyllite.

STRELITZ, n. A soldier of the ancient Muscovite guards, abolished by Peter the Great.

STRELIT'ZIA, n. A genus of plants, growing in Cape Colony.

STRENE, † n. Race; offspring.

STRENGTH, n. [Sax. strength, from stren, strong. See STRONG.] 1. That property or quality of an animal body by which it is enabled to move itself or other bodies. We say, a sick man has not strength to walk, or to raise his head or his arm. We say, a man has strength to lift a weight, or to draw it. This quality is called also power and force. But force is also used to denote the effect of strength exerted, or the quantity of motion. Strength, in this sense, is positive, or the power of producing positive motion or action, and is opposed to weakness. In mech., the strength of animals is the muscular force or energy which they are capable of exerting. It is a matter of much importance to be able to estimate, with tolerable accuracy, the effort which an animal of the average strength employed in labour is capable of exerting under different circumstances, because the results afford data for determining the modes in which animal labour may be most advantageously employed. In order to compare the effects produced by different animals, or the same animal under different circumstances, it is usual to estimate the force required to raise or transport 1 pound through one foot of space in a minute of time, which force is called the dynamic unit. Hence if an animal, as a horse, for example, is capable of raising 33,000 pounds one foot high in a minute, he must exert a force 33,000 times greater than that required to raise one pound through the same space in the same time. Of the different modes of estimating human strength, the most practically useful is the observation of the average effect produced daily by a labourer, who continues his exertions for a number of successive days, as in transporting materials in a wheel-barrow, carrying a load, or dragging a load, working a pump, turning a winch, ringing a bell, rowing a boat, &c. On comparing the strength of men in different countries it has been found that the English are the strongest.—2. Firmness; solidity or toughness; the quality of bodies by which they sustain the application of force without breaking or yielding. Thus we speak of the strength of a bone, the strength of a beam, the strength of a wall, the strength of a rope. In this sense, strength is a passive quality, and is opposed to weakness or frangibility. In mech., the strength of materials is the resistance which bodies oppose to a force acting on them. This resistance can only be ascertained by experiment. [See MATERIAL, STRAIN, STRESS.] The strength of bodies depends on their magnitude, form, and position, as well as on the degree of cohesion in the material.—3. Power or vigour of any kind.

This act

Shall crush the strength of Satan. Milton.
Strength there must be either of love or war.

Holyday.

4. Power of resisting attacks; fastness; as, the strength of a castle or fort.—5. Support; that which supports; that which supplies strength; security.

God is our refuge and strength; Ps. xlvii.

6. Power of mind; intellectual force; the power of any faculty; as, strength of memory; strength of reason; strength of judgment.—7. Spirit; animation.

Methinks I feel new strength within me rise.

Milton.

8. Force of writing; vigour; nervous diction. The strength of words, of style, of expression, and the like, consists in the full and forcible exhibition of ideas, by which a sensible or deep impression is made on the mind of a hearer or reader. It is distinguished from softness or sweetness. Strength of language enforces an argument, produces conviction, or excites wonder or other strong emotion; softness and sweetness give pleasure.

And praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.

9. Vividness; as, strength of colours or colouring.—10. Spirit; the quality of any liquor which has the power of affecting the taste, or of producing sensible effects on other bodies; as, the strength of wine or spirit; the strength of an acid.—11. The virtue or spirit of any vegetable, or of its juices or qualities.—12. Legal or moral force; validity; the quality of binding, uniting, or securing; as, the strength of social or legal obligations; the strength of law; the strength of public opinion or custom.—13. Vigour; natural force; as, the strength of natural affection.—14. That which supports; confidence.

The allies, after a successful summer, are too apt upon the strength of it to neglect preparation for the ensuing campaign.

Addison.

15. Amount of force, military or naval; an army or navy; number of troops or ships well appointed. What is the strength of the enemy by land, or by sea?—16. Soundness; force; the quality that convinces, persuades, or commands assent; as, the strength of an argument or of reasoning; the strength of evidence.—17. Vehemence; force proceeding from motion and proportioned to it; as, the strength of wind or a current of water.—18. Degree of brightness or vividness; as, the strength of light.—19. † Fortification; fortress; as, an inaccessible strength.—20. Support; maintenance of power.

What they bodod would be a mischief to us, you are providing shall be one of our principal strengths. † Sprat.

STRENGTH, † v. t. To strengthen. STRENGTHEN, v. t. (strength'n.) To make strong or stronger; to add strength to, either physical, legal, or moral; as, to strengthen a limb; to strengthen an obligation.—2. To confirm; to establish; as, to strengthen authority.—3. To animate; to encourage; to fix in resolution.

Charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him; Deut. iii.

4. To cause to increase in power or security.

Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
With powerful policy strengthen themselves.

Shak.

STRENGTH'EN, v. i. To grow strong or stronger.

The disease that shall destroy all length,
Grows with his growth, and strengthens with his strength. Pope.

STRENGTH'ENED, pp. Made strong or stronger; confirmed.

STRENGTH'ENER, n. That which increases strength, physical or moral.—2. In med., something which, taken into the system, increases vital energy and strength of action.

STRENGTH'ENING, ppr. Increasing strength, physical or moral; confirming; animating.

STRENGTH'LESS, a. Wanting strength; destitute of power.—2. Wanting spirit. [Little used.]

STRENUOUS, a. [L. strenuus; It. strenuo; W. tren, force, also impetuous. The sense is pressing, straining, or rushing forward.] 1. Eagerly pressing or urgent; zealous; ardent; as, a strenuous advocate for national rights; a strenuous opposer of African slavery.—2. Bold and active; valiant, intrepid, and ardent; as, a strenuous defender of his country.

STRENUOUSLY, adv. With eager and pressing zeal; ardently.—2. Boldly; vigorously; actively.

STRENUOUSNESS, n. Eagerness; earnestness; active zeal; ardour in pursuit of an object, or in opposition to a measure.

STREP'ENT, a. [L. strepens, strepo.] Noisy; loud. [Little used.]

STREP'EROUS, a. [L. strepo.] Loud; boisterous. [Little used.]

STREPITO'SO. [It.] In music, a term denoting that the part to which it is prefixed is to be performed in an impetuous and boisterous style.

STREPSIP'TERA, } n. [Gr. στρεπτος, STREPSIP'TERANS, } twisted, and στρεπτο, a wing.] Kirby's name for an order of parasitic insects, having two elytriform sub-spiral organs, appendages of the base of the anterior legs. STRESS, n. [W. trais, force, violence, oppression; treissau, to force or drive;

Ir. treise, force; Arm. truzen, a twist; trozeza, trouezal, to truss, Fr. trousseur. Hence, distress, trestle, &c. 1. Force; urgency; pressure; importance; that which bears with most weight; as, the stress of a legal question. Consider how much stress is laid on the exercise of charity in the New Testament.

This, on which the great stress of the business depends. Locke.

2. Force or violence; as, stress of weather.—3. Force; violence; strain. Though the faculties of the mind are improved by exercise, yet they must not be put to a stress beyond their strength.

Locke.
4. In mech., stress and strain are terms used indiscriminately to express the force which is exerted in any part of a machine or structure of any kind, tending to break it in that part. Thus every part of a rope is equally strained by the weight which it suspends. Every part of a column is equally strained by the load which it supports. A mill axle is equally twisted and strained in every part which lies between the part of the wheel actuated by the moving power, and the part which is resisted by the work to be performed. Every part of a lever or joist is differently strained by a force acting on a distant part. No structure can be made fit for its purpose unless the strength at every part be at least equal to the stress laid on or the strain excited in that part. Hence, in the erection of any machine or structure, it is necessary to ascertain the strains to which the different parts are exposed, and also to determine the strength of the materials which it is necessary to oppose in every part to these strains, and how to oppose this strength in such a manner that it shall be exerted to the best advantage.

STRESS, v. t. To press; to urge; to distress; to put to difficulties. [Little used.]

STRETCH, v. t. [Sax. streccan; G. strecken; probably formed on the root of reach, right, L. regio, &c.] 1. To draw out to greater length; to extend in a line; as, to stretch a cord or a rope.—2. To extend in breadth; as, to stretch cloth.—3. To spread; to expand; as, to stretch the wings.—4. To reach; to extend.

Stretch thine hand to the poor. Ecclus.

5. To spread; to display; as, to stretch forth the heavens.—6. To draw or pull out in length; to strain; as, to stretch a tendon or muscle.—7. To make tense; to strain.

So the stretch'd cord the shackled dancer tries. Smith.

8. To extend mentally; as, to stretch the mind or thoughts.—9. To exaggerate; to extend too far; as, to stretch the truth; to stretch one's credit.

STRETCH, v. i. To be extended; to be drawn out in length or in breadth, or both. A wet hempen cord or cloth contracts; in drying, it stretches.—2. To be extended; to spread; as, a lake stretches over a hundred miles of earth. Lake Erie stretches from Niagara nearly to Huron. Hence,—3. To stretch to, is to reach.—4. To be extended or to bear extension without breaking; as elastic substances.

The inner membrane...because it would stretch and yield, remained unbroken. Boyle.

5. To sally beyond the truth; to exaggerate. A man who is apt to stretch, has less credit than others.—6. In navigation, to sail; to direct a course. It is often understood to signify to sail under a great spread of canvas close hauled. In this it differs from stand, which implies no press of sail. We were standing to the east, when we saw a ship stretching to the southward.—7. To make violent efforts in running.

STRETCH, n. Extension in length or in breadth; reach; as, a great stretch of wings.—2. Effort; struggle; strain.

Those put lawful authority upon the stretch to the abuse of power, under colour of prerogative. L'Estrange.

3. Force of body; straining.

By stretch of arms the distant shore to gain. Dryden.

STRETCH'ED, pp. Drawn out in length; extended; exerted to the utmost.—Stretched out, in arch., a term applied to a surface that will just cover a body so extended that all its parts are in a plane, or may be made to coincide with a plane.

STRETCH'ER, n. He or that which stretches.—2. In arch., a brick or stone laid horizontally with its length in the direction of the face of the wall. It is thus distinguished from a header, which is laid lengthwise across the thickness of the wall, so that its small head or end is seen in the external face of the wall. [See BEND.].—3. A piece of timber in building.—4. A narrow piece of plank placed across a boat for the rowers to set their feet against.—5. A flat board on which corpses are stretched, previously to coffining.

STRETCH'ING, ppr. Drawing out in length; extending; spreading; exerting force.

STRETCH'ING COURSE, n. In arch., a course of stretchers; that is, of stones or bricks laid horizontally with their lengths in the direction of the face of the wall. [See HEADING COURSE.]

STRETCH'ING MACHINE, n. A machine in which cotton goods and other textile fabrics are stretched, by which means all their warp and woof yarns are laid in truly parallel directions.

STRET'TO. [Ital.] In music, a term which signifies that the movement to which it is prefixed is to be performed in a quick, concise manner. Opposed to largo.

STREW, v. t. [Goth. strawan; Sax. streavian, streowian; G. streuen; Sw. strö; contracted from stragan, which is retained in the Saxon. The Latin has sterno, stravi; the latter is our strew, straw. This verb is written straw, strew, or strow; straw is nearly obsolete, and strow is obsolescent. Strew is generally used.] 1. To scatter; to spread by scattering; always applied to dry substances separable into parts or particles; as, to strew seed in beds; to strew sand on or over a floor; to strew flowers over a grave.—2. To spread by being scattered over.

The snow which does the top of Pindus strew. Spenser.

Is thine alone the seed that strews the plain? Pope.

3. To scatter loosely.

And strew'd his mangled limbs about the field. Dryden.

STREW'ED, pp. Scattered; spread by scattering; as, sand strewed on paper.—2. Covered or sprinkled with something scattered; as, a floor strewed with sand.

STREW'ING, ppr. Scattering; spreading over.

STREW'ING, n. The act of scattering or spreading over.—2. Any thing fit to be strewed.

STREW'MENT, n. Any thing scattered in decoration.

STRI'Æ, n. plur. [L. stria, a streak.] In nat. his., fine thread-like lines or streaks, generally on the exterior surface of shells, minerals, plants, or other objects, longitudinal, transverse, or oblique.—2. In arch., the fillets which separate the channels or flutes of columns.

STRI'ATED, } a. Formed with small striated, } channels; channelled.

—2. In bot., streaked; marked or scored with superficial or very slender lines; marked with fine parallel lines; as the stems of some plants.—3. In arch., channelled; fluted as a column.—Striated fracture, in mineral., consists of long narrow separable parts laid on or beside each other.

STRICK'EN, pp. of Strike. Struck; smitten; as, the stricken deer. [See STRIKE.].—2. Advanced; worn; far gone.

Abraham was old and well stricken in age; Gen. xxxiv. [Öös.]

STRICK'LE, n. [from strike.] A strike; an instrument to strike grain to a level with the measure.—2. An instrument for whetting scythes.

STRICT, a. [L. strictus, from stringo; Sax. strac. See STRAIN.] 1. Strained; drawn close; tight; as, a strict embrace; a strict ligature.—2. Tense; not relaxed; as, a strict or lax fibre.—3. Exact; accurate; rigorously nice; as, to keep strict watch. Observe the strictest rules of virtue and decorum.—4. Severe; rigorous; governed or governing by exact rules; observing exact rules; as, the father is very strict in observing the sabbath. The master is very strict with his apprentices.—5. Rigorous; not mild or indulgent; as, strict laws.—6. Confined; limited; not with latitude; as, to understand words in a strict sense.

STRICT'LY, adv. Closely; tightly.—2. Exactly; with nice accuracy; as, patriotism strictly so called, is a noble virtue.—3. Positively. He commanded his son strictly to proceed no further.—4. Rigorously; severely; without remission or indulgence.

Examine thyself strictly, whether thou didst not best at first. Bacon.

STRICT'NESS, n. Closeness; tightness; opposed to laxity.—2. Exact-ness in the observance of rules, laws, rites, and the like; rigorous accuracy; nice regularity or precision.

I could not grant too much or distrust too little, to men that pretended singular piety and religious strictness. K. Charles.

2. Rigour; severity.

These commissioners proceeded with such strictness and severity as did much obscure the king's mercy. Bacon.

STRIC'TURE, n. [L. strictura. See STRIKE and STROKE, which unite with L. stringo.] 1. A stroke; a glance; a touch.—2. A touch of criticism; critical remark; censure.

I have given myself the liberty of these strictures by way of reflection on every passage. Hammond.

3. A drawing; a spastic or other morbid contraction of some tube or duct of the body; as the œsophagus, intestines, urethra, vagina, &c. It is either organic, that is, accompanied with an actual thickening of the walls of the canal; or spasmodic.

STRIDE, n. [Sax. stræde, a step; gestridan, to stride; bestridan, to bestride; probably formed on the root of L. gradior, Shemitic רדד, redah, in Syr. to go, Ch. to spread, Sax. stredan, id.] A long step; a step taken with violence; a wide stretch of the legs.

Her voice theatrically loud,

And masculine her stride. Swift.

STRIDE, v. i. pret. Strid, Strode; pp. Strid, Stridden. 1. To walk with long steps.

Mars in the middle of the shining shield
Is grav'd, and strides along the field. Dryden.

2. To straddle.

STRIDE, v. t. To pass over at a step.

See him stride

Valleys wide. Arbutnot.

STRIDING, ppr. Walking with long steps; passing over at a step.

STRIDOR, n. [L.] A harsh creaking noise, or a crack.—Stridor dentium, [L.] grinding of the teeth. A common symptom during sleep in children affected with worms, or other intestinal irritation. It occurs also in fevers as a symptom of irritation of the brain.

STRID'ULOUS, a. [L. stridulus.] Making a small harsh sound or a creaking.

STRIFE, n. [Norm. estrif. See STRIVE.] 1. Exertion or contention for superiority; contest of emulation, either by intellectual or physical efforts. Strife may be carried on between students or between mechanics.

Thus gods contended, noble strife,

Who most should ease the wants of life. Congreve.

2. Contention in anger or enmity; discord; contest; struggle for victory; quarrel or war.

I and my people were at great strife with the children of Ammon; Judges xii.

These vows thus granted, raised a strife above,

Betwixt the god of war and queen of love. Dryden.

3. Opposition; contrariety; contrast.

Artificial strife

Lives in these touches livelier than life. Shak.

4. The agitation produced by different qualities; as, the strife of acid and alkali. [Little used.]

STRIFEFUL, a. Contentious; discordant.

The ape was *strife*ful, and ambitious,

And the fox guileful and most covetous. Spenser.

STRIG'Æ, n. plur. [L.] In bot., a species of pubescence in plants, consisting of little close-pressed, rigid, unequal, irregular hairs.—2. In arch., the flutings of a column.

STRIG'IDÆ, n. [from strix, one of the genera.] A family of nocturnal birds of prey, comprehending the owls.

STRIG'IL, n. [L.] Among the ancients, a little instrument of ivory or horn used for rubbing the skin.

STRIG'MENT, f. n. [L. strigmentum, from stringo.] Scraping; that which is scraped off.

STRIG'OSE, a. [L. strigosus, from STRIG'OUS,] strigo.] In bot., having strigæ; a strigosus leaf is one set with stiff lanceolate bristles.

STRIKE, v. t. pret. Struck; pp. Struck and Stricken; but Struck is in the most common use. Strook is wholly obsolete. [Sax. astrican, to strike, D. stryken, to strike, and to stroke, to smooth, to anoint or rub over, to slide; G. streichen, to pass, move, or ramble, to depart, to touch, to stroke, to glide or glance over, to lower or strike, as sails, to curry, [L. stringo, strigil], to sweep together, to spread, as a plaster, to play on a violin, to card, as wool, to strike or whip, as with a rod; strich, strich, a stroke, stripe, or lash, Eng. streak; Dan. streg, a stroke; stryger, to rub, to stroke, to strike, to trim, to iron or smooth, to strike, as sails, to whip, to play on a violin, to glide along, to plane; Sw. stryka, id. We see that strike, stroke, and streak, and the L. stringo, whence strain, strict, stricture, &c., are all radically one word. Strong is of the same family. Hence we see the sense is to rub, to scrape; but it includes often the sense of thrusting.

It is to touch or graze with a sweeping or stroke. Hence our sense of striking a measure of grain, and strike, strickle, and a stroke of the pencil in painting. Hence the use of stricken applied to age, worn with age, as in the L. strigo, the same word differently applied. Hence also we see the propriety of the use of stricture, applied to criticism. It seems to be formed on the root of rake and stretch.] 1. To touch or hit with some force, either with the hand or an instrument; to give a blow to, either with the open hand, the fist, a stick, club, or whip, or with a pointed instrument, or with a ball or an arrow discharged. An arrow struck the shield; a ball strikes a ship between wind and water.

He at Philippi kept

His sword e'en like a dancer, while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shak.

2. To dash; to throw with a quick motion.

To smite the just is not good, nor to strike princes for equity; Prov. xvii.

6. To cause to sound; to notify by sound; as, the clock strikes twelve; the drums strike up a march.—7. In seamanship, to lower; to let down; as, to strike sail; to strike a flag or ensign; to strike a yard or top-mast in a gale; [that is, to run or slip down.]

When a ship in a fight, or on meeting with a ship of war, lets down or lowers her top-sails, at least half-mast high, she is said to strike, which means that she yields, or submits or pays respect to the ship of war. Also, when a ship touches ground in shoal water, she is said to strike. And when a top-mast, &c., is to be taken down, the word of command is strike the top-mast, &c.

To strike soundings, to ascertain the depth of water with the hand-lead, &c.—8. To impress strongly; to affect sensibly with strong emotion; as, to strike the mind with surprise; to strike with wonder, alarm, dread, or horror.

Nice works of art strike and surprise us most on the first view. Atterbury.

They please as beauties, here as wonders strike. Pope.

9. To make and ratify; as, to strike a bargain, L. fœdus ferire. This expression probably arose from the practice of the parties striking a victim when they concluded a bargain.—10. To produce by a sudden action.

Waving wide her myrtle wand,
She strikes a universal peace through sea and land. Milton.

11. To affect in some particular manner by a sudden impression or impulse; as, the plan proposed strikes me favourably; to strike one dead; to strike one blind; to strike one dumb.—12. A puny subject strikes

At thy great glory. Shak.

5. To hit; to touch; to act on by impulse.

Under light from striking on it, and its colours vanish. Locke.

6. To sound with blows.

Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up. Shak.

7. To run upon; to be stranded. The ship struck at twelve, and remained fast.—8. To pass with a quick or strong effect; to dart; to penetrate.

Now and then a beam of wit or passion strikes through the obscurity of the poem.

Dryden.

9. To lower a flag or colours in token of respect, or to signify a surrender of the ship to an enemy.—10. † To break forth; as, to strike into reputation.—To strike in, to enter suddenly; also, to recede from the surface, as an eruption; to disappear.—To strike in with, to conform to; to suit itself to; to join with at once.—To strike out, to wander; to make a sudden excursion; as, to strike out into an irregular course of life.—To strike, among workmen, is to quit work in a body, or by combination, in order to compel their employers to raise their wages.

STRIKE, n. An instrument with a straight edge for levelling a measure of grain, salt, and the like, for scraping off what is above the level of the top; a strickle.—2. A bushel; four pecks. [Local.]—3. A measure of four bushels or half a quarter. [Local.]—4. Among workmen, the act of quitting work in a body, after having demanded higher wages, and having been refused. In such a case the workmen refuse to resume their work, until their demand shall have been complied with, reckoning that their employer or employers, from the necessity of having the work carried on or completed, will at length be obliged to yield, especially as it frequently happens that other hands cannot be procured, either from their scarcity, or from the threats and intimidations of the body that has struck.—5. In geol., the direction or line of bearing of strata, which is always at right angles to their prevailing dip.—Strike of flax, a handful that may be hacked at once. [Local.]

STRIKE, a. This word is used, as an epithet, only in the compound term strike-measure; that is, the employment of a strike, or roller, to remove or strike off all of an article measured which stands above the level or rim of a measure of capacity.—Strike is now the only legal measure of that kind, heaped measure having been discontinued in 1834-5.

STRIKE-BLOCK, n. [strike and block.] A plane shorter than a jointer, used for shooting a short joint.

STRIKER, n. One that strikes, or that which strikes.—2. In Scrp., a quarrelsome man; Tit. i.

STRIKING, ppr. Hitting with a blow; impressing; imprinting; punishing; lowering, as sails or a mast, &c.—2. a. Affecting with strong emotions; surprising; forcible; impressive; as, a striking representation or image.—3. Strong; exact; adapted to make impression; as, a striking resemblance of features.

STRIK'ING, n. In arch., the drawing of lines on the surface of a body; the drawing of lines on the face of a piece of stuff for mortises, and cutting the shoulders of tenons. In joinery, the act of running a moulding with a plane.—The striking of a centre, is the removal of the timber framing, upon which an arch is built after its completion.

STRIN'GENTLY, adv. In a stringent manner.

STRIN'GENTNESS, n. Stringency. [The latter is the better word.]

STRIN'GER, n. One who arranges on a string, or thread; as, a bead or pearl stringer.

STRING'HALT, n. [string and halt.]

A sudden twitching of the hinder leg of a horse, or an involuntary or convulsive motion of the muscles that extend or bend the hough.

STRING'INESS, n. The state of being stringy; fibrous.

STRING'ING, ppr. Furnishing with strings; putting in tune; filing; making tense; depriving of strings.

STRING'LESS, a. Having no strings. His tongue is now a stringless instrument. Shak.

STRING'Y, a. Consisting of strings or small threads; fibrous; filamentous; as, a stringy root.—2. Ropy; viscid; gluey; that may be drawn into a thread.

STRIP, v. t. [G. streifen, to strip, to flay, to strip or streak, to graze upon, to swerve, ramble, or stroll; D. streepen, to stripe, to reprimand; Dan. striber, to stripe or streak, and stripper, to strip, to skin or flay, to ramble; Sax. bestrypan. Some of the senses of these verbs seem to be derived from the noun strip, which is probably from stripping. Regularly, this verb should be referred to the root of rip, L. rapio.]

1. To pull or tear off, as, a covering; as, to strip the skin from a beast; to strip the bark from a tree; to strip the clothes from a man's back.—2. To deprive of a covering; to skin; to peel; as, to strip a beast of his skin; to strip a tree of its bark; to strip a man of his clothes.—3. To press out the last milk at a milking.—10. To unrig; as, to strip a ship.—11. To pare off the surface of land in strips, and turn over the strips upon the adjoining surface.—To strip off, to pull or take off; as, to strip off a covering; to strip off a mask or disguise.—2. † To cast off.—3. † To separate from something connected. [We may observe the primary sense of this word is to peel or skin, hence to pull off in a long narrow piece; hence stripe.]

STRIP, n. [G. streif, a stripe, a streak; D. streep, a stroke, a line, a stripe; Dan. stribe.] 1. A narrow piece, comparatively long; as, a strip of cloth.

STRIP, n. [See STRIP.] It is probable that this word is taken from stripping. 1. A line or long narrow division of anything, of a different colour from the ground; as, a stripe of red on a green ground; hence, any linear variation of colour.—2. A strip or long narrow piece attached to something of a different colour; as, a long stripe sewed upon a garment.—3. The wale or long narrow mark discoloured by a lash or rod.—4. A stroke made with a lash, whip, rod, strap, or scourge.

Forty stripes may he give him, and not exceed; Deut. xxv.

[A blow with a club is not a stripe.]

—5. Affliction; punishment; sufferings. By his stripes are we healed; Is. liii.

STRIVE, v. i. pret. Strove; pp. Striven. [G. streben; formed perhaps on the Heb. רָבַח , rub. This word coincides in elements with drive, and the primary sense is nearly the same. See RIVAL.]

1. To make efforts; to use exertions; to endeavour with earnestness; to labour hard; applicable to exertions of body or mind. A workman strives to perform his task before another; a student strives to excel his fellows in improvement.

Was it for this that his ambition strove
To equal Cesar first, and after Jove?

Cowley.

Strive with me in your prayers to God for me; Rom. xv.

Strive to enter in at the strait gate; Luke xiii.

2. To contend; to contest; to struggle in opposition to another; to be in contention or dispute; followed by against or with before the person or thing opposed; as, strive against temptation; strive for the truth.

My spirit shall not always strive with man; Gen. vi.

3. To oppose by contrariety of qualities.

Now private pity strive with public hate,
Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate.

Derham.

4. To vie; to be comparable to; to emulate; to contend in excellence.

Not that sweet grove

Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspir'd
Castalian spring, might with this paradise
Of Eden strive.

Milton.

STRIVER, n. One that strives or contends; one who makes efforts of body or mind.

STRIVING, ppr. Making efforts; exerting the powers of body or mind with earnestness; contending.

STRIVING, n. The act of making efforts; contest; contention.

Avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; Tit. iii.

STRIVINGLY, adv. With earnest efforts; with struggles.

STRIX, n. [L.] The owl; a Linnæan genus of nocturnal birds of the Accipitrine order, now divided into various sub-genera, according to their tufts, the size of their ears, the extent of the circle of feathers which surrounds their eyes, &c.; as Otus, Syrnium, Bubo, Scops, and Noctua. [See OWL.—2. In arch., a channel in a fluted column or pillar.

STROAM, † v. i. [Ger. strömen, to stream, flow, D. stroomen.] To flow on, or stream past; as, a crowd of people.

STROB'ILE, n. [L. strobilus.] In bot., an enlarged catkin, the carpels of which are scale-like, and spread open and bear naked seeds; sometimes the scales are thin, with little cohesion; but they are often woody, and cohere into a single tuberculated mass. Example, the cone or fruit of the pinus.

STROBIL'IFORM, a. [L. strobilus and forma, supra.] Shaped like a strobile.
STRO'CAL, † n. An instrument used by glass-makers to empty the metal from one pot to another.

STROKE, †
STROOK, † for Struck.

STRO'KE, n. [from strike.] A blow; a knock; the striking of one body against another; the act of one body upon another when brought suddenly into contact with it; applicable to a club, a hammer, a mallet, or to any heavy body, or to a rod, whip, or lash. A piece of timber falling may kill a man by its stroke; a man, when whipped, can hardly fail to flinch or wince at every stroke.

Th' oars were silver,
Which to the time of flutes kept stroke.

Shak.

The force or intensity of a stroke is directly proportional to the velocity and quantity of matter or weight of the striking body, and to the sine of the angle of incidence, that is, the angle which the direction of the striking body makes with the surface of the body struck. Hence, the greatest effect is produced by a stroke when the angle of incidence is a right angle, or when the striking body is made to move in a direction perpendicular to the surface of the body struck.—2. A hostile blow or attack.

He entered and won the whole kingdom of Naples without striking a stroke. Baron.

3. A sudden attack of disease or affliction; calamity.

At this one stroke the man look'd dead in law. Harte.

4. Fatal attack; as, the stroke of death.—5. The sound of the clock.

What is't o'clock?

Upon the stroke of four. Shak.
6. The touch of a pencil.

Oh, lasting as those colours may they shine,
Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line.

Pope.

Some parts of my work have been brightened by the strokes of your lordship's pencil. Middleton.

7. A touch; a masterly effort; as, the boldest strokes of poetry.

He will give one of the finishing strokes to it. Addison.

8. An effort or effect suddenly or unexpectedly produced.—9. † Power; efficacy.

He has a great stroke with the reader, when he condemns any of my poems, to make the world have a better opinion of them. Dryden.

10. Series of operations; as, to do a great stroke of business. [Familiar.—11. A dash in writing or printing; a line; a touch of the pen; as, a hair stroke.—12. In seamen's lan., the sweep of an oar; as, to row with a long stroke.—Stroke of the sun, a coup de soleil,—which see.

Section of Strobile.

STROKE, v. t. [Sax. stracan. See STRICK and STRICK.] 1. To rub gently with the hand by way of expressing kindness or tenderness; to soothe.

He dried the falling drops, and, yet more kind,
He strook'd her cheeks. Dryden.

2. To rub gently in one direction.—3. To make smooth.—4. In masonry, to work the face of a stone in such a manner as to produce a sort of fluted surface.

STROKED, pp. Rubbed gently with the hand.

STROKER, n. One who strokes; one who pretends to cure by stroking.

STROKESMAN, n. In rowing, the man who rows the aftmost oar, and whose stroke is to be followed by the rest.

STROKING, ppr. Rubbing gently with the hand.

STRO'KING, n. The act of rubbing gently.—2. In masonry, an operation performed upon the face of a stone by the broad tool, by which a sort of fluted surface is produced.

STROKINGS, n. plur. The milk last drawn from the teats of a cow.—To stroke the teats, is to milk.

STRO'LL, v. i. [formed probably on troll, roll.] To rove; to wander on foot; to ramble idly or leisurely.

These mothers stroll to beg sustenance for their helpless infants. Swift.

STRO'LL, n. A wandering on foot; a walking idly and leisurely.

STRO'LLER, n. One who strolls; a vagabond; a vagrant; an itinerant player.

STRO'LLING, ppr. Roving idly; rambling on foot.

STROMAT'IC, a. [Gr. στρωματις.] Miscellaneous; composed of different kinds.

STROM'BI'DÆ, n. A family of marine testaceous gastropods, of which the genus Strombus, Linn. is the type.

STROMBITE, n. A petrified shell of the genus Strombus.

STROMBU'LIFORM, a. [Gr. στρωμβος, a top.] In geol., formed like a top.

STROM'BUS, n. [L.] The name given by Linnæus to a genus of univalve, spiral, marine shells. The aperture is much dilated; the lip expanding and produced into a groove. In some of the shells of this genus, the spines are of great length, and are arranged round the circumference of the base, being at first tubular, and afterwards solid, according to the period of growth. Only two species have been found in the seas of this country. Cuvier places this genus under his pectinibranchiate gastropods, and Lamarck divides it into two subgenera, Strombus proper, and Pteroceras.

Winged Strombus (S. tricristus).

STROM'EYERITE, n. [from the name of Stromeyer, the celebrated chemist.] A steel-gray ore of silver, consisting of sulphur, silver, and copper.

STROM'NITE, n. A mineral. [See BARYSTRONTIANITE.]

STROND, n. The beach. [See STRAND.]

STRONG, a. [Sax. strong, strang, or streg; from the latter is formed strength; G. strenge; D. and Dan. streg; Sw. strång, strict, severe, rigid. As n is casual in this word, the original orthography was strag, streg, or strog, coinciding with L. strictus, stringo. The sense of the radical word is to stretch, strain, draw, and probably from the root of stretch and reach. We observe in all the kindred dialects on the Continent, the sense of the word is somewhat different from that of the English. The Russ. strogei, strict, rigid, severe, retains the original orthography without n.] 1. Having physical active power, or great physical power; having the power of exerting great bodily force; vigorous. A patient is recovering from sickness, but is not yet strong enough to walk. A strong man will lift twice his own weight.

That our oxen may be strong to labour; Ps. cxliv.
Orses the strong to greater strength must yield. Dryden.

2. Having physical passive power; having ability to bear or endure; firm; solid; as, a constitution strong enough to bear the fatigues of a campaign.—3. Well fortified; able to sustain attacks; not easily subdued or taken; as, a strong fortress or town.—4. Having great military or naval force; powerful; as, a strong army or fleet; a strong nation; a nation strong at sea.—5. Having great wealth, means, or resources; as, a strong house or company of merchants.—6. Moving with rapidity; violent; forcible; impetuous; as, a strong current of water or wind; the wind was strong from the northeast; we had a strong tide against us.—7. Hale; sound; robust; as, a strong constitution.—8. Powerful; forcible; cogent; adapted to make a deep or effectual impression on the mind or imagination; as, a strong argument; strong reasons; strong evidence; a strong example or instance. He used strong language.—9. Ardent; eager; zealous; earnestly engaged; as, a strong partisan; a strong whig or tory.

Her mother, ever strong against that match. Shak.

10. Having virtues of great efficacy; or having a particular quality in a great degree; as, a strong powder or tincture; a strong decoction; strong tea; strong coffee.—11. Full of spirit; intoxicating; as, strong liquors.—12. Affecting the sight forcibly; as, strong colours.—13. Affecting the taste forcibly; as, the strong flavour of onions.—14. Affecting the smell powerfully; as, a strong scent.—15. Not of easy digestion; solid; as, strong meat; Heb. v.—16. Well established; firm; not easily overthrown or altered; as, a custom grown strong by time.—17. Violent; vehement; earnest.

Who in the days of his flesh, when he offered up prayers with strong crying and tears; Heb. v.

18. Able; furnished with abilities.
I was stronger in prophecy than in criticism. Dryden.

19. Having great force of mind, of intellect, or of any faculty; as, a man of strong powers of mind; a man of a strong mind or intellect; a man of strong memory, judgment or imagination.—20. Having great force; comprising much in few words; forcibly expressed.

Like her sweet voice is thy harmonious song,

As high, as sweet, as easy, and as strong. Smith.

21. Bright; glaring; vivid; as, a strong light.—22. Powerful to the extent of force named; as, an army ten thousand strong.

STRONG'-BACKED, a. Having a strong back.

STRONG'-COLOURED, a. Having strong colours.

STRONG'GER, a. comp. of Strong. Having more strength.

STRONG'GEST, a. superl. of Strong. Having most strength.

STRONG'-FISTED, a. [strong and fast.] Having a strong hand; muscular.

STRONG'-HAND, n. [strong and hand.] Violence; force; power.

It was their meaning to take what they needed by strong-hand. Raleigh.

[Not properly a compound word.]

STRONG'-HANDED, a. Having strong hands, or having many hands for the execution of a work.

STRONG'-HOLD, n. [strong and hold.] A fastness; a fort; a fortified place; a place of security.

STRONG'ISH, a. Somewhat strong. [Colloq.]

STRONG'LY, adv. With strength; with great force or power; forcibly; a word of extensive application.—2. Firmly; in a manner to resist attack; as, a town strongly fortified.—3. Vehemently; forcibly; eagerly. The evils of this measure were strongly represented to the government.

STRONG'-MINDED, a. Having a vigorous mind.

STRONG'-RIBBED, a. Solidly formed; as, a strong-ribbed ship.

STRONG'-SET, a. [strong and set.] Firmly set or compacted.

STRONG'-VOICED, a. Having great strength of voice.

STRONG'-WATER, † n. [strong and water.] Distilled or ardent spirits.

STRONG'GYLUS, n. A genus of intestinal worms in Rudolphi's classification, characterized by having a cylindrical body, the anal extremity of which, in the male, is surrounded by a kind of pouch of a varied shape, from which is protruded a small filament or spiculum. S. armatus infests the mesenteric arteries of the horse and ass, producing aneurisms. S. gigas is sometimes found in the kidney of the human subject.

STRON'TIA, n. One of the alkaline earths, of which strontium is the metallic base. It occurs in a crystalline state, as a carbonate, in the lead mines of Strontian, in Argyleshire, whence its name. It was discovered by Dr. Hope in 1792. It has subsequently been found in England, America, and France; but strontitic minerals are rather rare. The pure earth to which the name of strontia is given, is prepared from the carbonate exactly like baryta. It is a greyish white powder, infusible in the furnace; of a specific gravity approaching that of baryta, having an acrid burning taste, but not so corrosive as baryta, though sharper than lime. It becomes hot when moistened, and slakes into a pulverulent hydrate, dissolves in 150 parts of water at 60°, and in much less at the boiling point, forming an alkaline solution, called strontia water, which deposits crystals in four-sided tables as it cools. The dry earth, which is an oxide of strontium, is composed of 44 equivalents of strontium, and 8 of oxygen. It is readily distinguished from baryta, by forming with hydrochloric acid a chloride which crystallizes in needles, and is very deliquescent, and soluble in alcohol, to which it gives the property of burning with a crimson flame. The sulphate of strontia is found native, and some of the native varieties have a pale blue tint, whence the term celestine. The nitrate of strontia is used in making the red fire of the theatres, and of fire-works; and it is also employed for signal lights.

STRONT'IAN, n. A name sometimes given to strontia.

STRONT'IAN, } a. Pertaining to STRONT'IANIC, } strontia; containing strontia; as, strontianic minerals.

STRONT'IANITE, n. Native carbonate of strontia, a mineral that occurs massive, fibrous, stellated, and crystallized in the form of a hexahedral prism, modified on the edges, or terminated by a pyramid. It was first discovered in the lead mines of Strontian, in Argyleshire. It greatly resembles carbonate of baryta, but it is not poisonous like that mineral.

STRONT'ITES, n. The name given to strontia by Dr. Hope, who first obtained this earth from strontianite, or native carbonate of strontia. This name was modified into strontia by Klaproth.

STRONT'IUM, n. The metallic base of strontia, procured from the carbonate of strontia by Davy in 1808. It is analogous to barium, but has less lustre; it is heavier than sulphuric acid, difficultly fusible, and not volatile. When exposed to the air it attracts oxygen, and becomes converted into strontia, or protoxide of strontium; when thrown into water, it decomposes it with great violence, producing hydrogen gas, and forming with the water a solution of strontia. Strontium is harmless, while barium and all its compounds are poisonous.

STROOK, † for Struck.

STROP, n. A strap. [See STRAP.] This orthography is particularly used for a strip of leather used for sharpening razors and giving them a fine smooth edge; a razor-strop.—2. [Sp. estrovo.] A piece of rope spliced into a circular wreath, and put round a block, so that the latter may be suspended from any particular part about the masts, yards, or rigging.

STROP, v. t. To sharpen with a strop or strap; as, he stropped his razor.

STRO'PHE, n. [Fr. strophe; Gr. στροφή, a turn, from στρέφω, to turn.] In Greek poetry, a division of a choral ode, answering to a stanza, and so named because the singers turned in one direction while they recited that portion of the poem; they then turned round and sung the next portion, which was of exactly the same length and metre as the preceding, and was termed the anti-strophe (ἀντιστροφή). [See ANTISTROPHE.] The choral poems of the Greeks consisted of three main parts, strophe, antistrophe, and epode, the latter forming the concluding stanza of a chorus.

STROPH'IC, a. Relating to, or consisting of, strophes.

STRO'PHIOLATE, } a. [L. stro- STRO'PHIOLATED, } phium, a garland.] Furnished with a garland, or that which resembles a garland.—2. In bot., having strophioles or caruncles, as seeds.

STROPHIOLE, n. [L. strophiotum.] In bot., a little tubercular part near the base or hilum of some seeds, particularly those of the papilionaceous order. It is otherwise called a caruncle.

STROPHULUS, n. [L.] A papular eruption upon the skin, peculiar to infants, and exhibiting a variety of forms, known popularly as red-gum, white-gum, tooth-rash, &c.

STROUT, † v. i. [for strut.] To swell; to puff out.

STROVE, pret. of Strive.

STROW, is only a different orthography of Strew. [See STREW.]

STROLL, for Stroll, is not in use. [See STROLL.]

STROY, for Destroy, is not in use. [See DESTROY.]

STRUCK, pret. and pp. of Strike. [See STRIKE.]

STRUCKEN, the old pp. of Strike, is obsolete.

STRUCTURAL, a. Pertaining to structure.

STRUCTURE, n. [Fr. from L. structura, from struo, [for strugo], to set or lay; it. struttura.] 1. Act of building; practice of erecting buildings.

His son builds on and never is content,
Till the last farthing is in structure spent.
[Rarely used.] Dryden.

2. Manner of building; form; make; construction; as, the want of insight into the structure and constitution of the terraqueous globe.—3. Manner of organization of animals and vegetables, &c.—4. A building of any kind, but chiefly a building of some size or of magnificence; an edifice. Waterloo bridge over the Thames, in London, is a beautiful structure.

There stands a structure of majestic frame.
Pope.

5. In mineral, the particular arrangement of the integrant particles or molecules of a mineral.

STRÖDE, } n. A stock of breeding

STRÖDE, } mares; a stud.

STRUGGLE, v. i. [This word may be formed on the root of stretch, right, &c., which signifies to strain; or more directly on the same elements in L. rugo, to wrinkle, and Eng. wriggle. In W. ystreiglaw, is to turn.] 1. Properly, to strive, or to make efforts with a twisting or with contortions of the body. Hence,—2. To use great efforts; to labour hard; to strive; to contend; as, to struggle to save life; to struggle with the waves; to struggle against the stream; to struggle with adversity.—3. To labour in pain or anguish; to be in agony; to labour in any kind of difficulty or distress.

'Tis wisdom to beware,
And better shun the bait than struggle in the snare.
Dryden.

STRUGGLE, n. Great labour; forcible effort to obtain an object, or to avoid an evil; properly, a violent effort with contortions of the body.—2. Contest; contention; strife.

An honest man might look upon the struggle with indifference. Addison.

3. Agony; contortions of extreme distress.

STRUGGLER, n. One who struggles, strives, or contends.

STRUGGLING, ppr. Making great efforts; using violent exertions; affected with contortions.

STRUGGLING, n. The act of striving; vehement or earnest effort.

STRULL, n. A bar so placed as to resist weight.

STRUMA, n. [L.] Scrofula; the king's evil; a specific morbid condition, considered by many as a peculiar sort of inflammation, manifested, in very many cases, by an indolent glandular enlargement, which sometimes suppurates, but slowly and imperfectly, and heals with difficulty. The same term is also used to signify bronchocele, or an enlargement of the thyroid gland.—2. In bot., a swelling in some leaves at the extremity of the petiole, where it is connected to the lamina; as in Mimosa sensitiva. Also, in mosses, a dilatation or swelling which is sometimes present upon one side of the base of the theca.

STRUMOSE, } a. Scrofulous.—2. In STRUMOUS, } bot., having strumæ. [See STRUMA.]

STRUMPET, n. [Ir. stribrid, strio-pach.] A prostitute.

STRUMPET, a. Like a strumpet; false; inconstant.

STRUMPET, v. t. To debauch.

STRUNG, pret. of String.

STRUNT, v. i. To walk sturdily; to walk with state; to strut. [Scotch.]

STRUNT, n. Spirituous liquor of any kind. Also a pet; a sullen fit. [Scotch.]

STRUT, v. i. [G. strotzen; Dan. strutter.]

1. To walk with a lofty proud gait and erect head; to walk with affected dignity.

Does he not hold up his head and strut in his gait? Shak.

2. To swell; to protuberate.

The belling canvas strutted with the gale.†
Dryden.

STRUT, n. A lofty proud step or walk with the head erect; affectation of dignity in walking.—2. In arch., struts are oblique framing pieces having one end joined to the king posts, or queen posts, and the other end to the principal rafters, for the purpose of supporting the latter. They are sometimes called braces. [See ROOF.]—3. Any piece of timber in a system of framing which is pressed or crushed in the direction of its length; as the struts of a roof or a gate.

STRUTHIO, n. The ostrich; a genus of birds of the order Gallatoræ, and family Struthionidæ, or Brevipennes. The S. camelus is the ostrich of the eastern Continent, celebrated from the earliest ages; the S. casuarius is the cassowary, common in the peninsula of Malacca and the islands of the Asiatic Archipelago; and the S. rheia is the American ostrich, common in South America, and one half smaller than the eastern species. [See OSTRICH.]

STRUTHIONIDÆ, n. [L. struthio, an ostrich.] A family of terrestrial birds incapable of flight, the wings being, in the majority of instances, merely rudimentary, but having long and strong legs, which enable them to run with great rapidity. This family includes the ostrich, and other congeneric species, which constitute the Cursores of Kirby and the Brevipennes of Cuvier.

STRUTHIOUS, a. [L. struthio.] Pertaining to or like the ostrich; belonging to the ostrich tribe.

STRUTTER, n. One who struts; a pompous fellow.

STRUTTING, ppr. Walking with a lofty gait and erect head.

STRUTTING, n. The act of walking with a proud gait.

STRUTTING-BEAM, } n. In arch.

STRUT-BEAM, } an old term for a collar-beam.

STRUTTINGLY, adv. With a proud lofty step; boastingly.

STRUTTING-PIECE, n. In arch., the same as straining-piece,—which see.

STRYCHNIA, } n. [Gr. στρυχνος, an STRYCHNINE, } ancient Greek name for several plants, most of which were narcotics.] A vegetable alkaloid, the sole active principle of Strychnos Treutè, the most active of the Java poisons, and one of the active principles of Strychnos Ignatii, S. nux-vomica, S. colubrina, &c. It is usually obtained from the seeds of Strychnos nux-vomica. It is colourless, inodorous, crystalline, unalterable by exposure to the air, and extremely bitter. It is very insoluble, requiring 7000 parts of water for solution. It dissolves in hot alcohol, although sparingly, if the alcohol be pure and not diluted. It forms crystallizable salts, which are intensely bitter. Strychnine and its salts, especially the latter, from their solubility, are most energetic poisons. They produce lock-jaw and other tetanic affections, and are used in very small doses as remedies in paralysis. Strychnia is composed of 44 atoms of carbon, 23 of hydrogen, 2 of nitrogen, and 8 of oxygen.

STRYCHNIC ACID, n. An acid which exists in combination with strychnia in the Strychnos nux-vomica. It is soluble both in water and alcohol, and has an acid rough taste. It is also called Igasuric acid.

STRYCHNOS, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Apocynaceæ, section Strychnæ. It is composed of trees or shrubs which do not yield a milky juice, and have opposite, usually nerved leaves, and corymbose flowers; some of the species are possessed of tendrils, and are climbing plants. They are found principally in the tropical parts of Asia and America. S. nux-vomica, poison-nut or ratsbane. [See NUX-VOMICA.] S. potatorum, or clearing nut, is an abundant plant in the woods and mountains of the East Indies. The seeds, when dried, are sold by the natives for the purpose of clearing muddy water. S. St. Ignatii, or St. Ignatius's bean, is a native of Cochin China, the Philippine Islands, and other parts of Asia. [See IGNATIUS'S BEAN.] S. colubrina, snake-wood, or snake-poison nut, is a native of the coasts of Coromandel and of Silhet. It is considered by the Indian doctors as an effectual remedy for the bite of the cobra da capello. [See SNAKE-WOOD.] S. tientiè. [See CHETTICK AND UPAS.] S. toxicifera, woody, or poison-plant of Guiana, is used by the natives as an arrow-poison. S. pseudo-quina, is a native of Brazil. Its bark is said to be fully equal to cinchona in curing intermittent fevers. The fruit of this species is eaten by the native children.

STUB, n. [Sax. steb; Dan. stub; Sw. stubbe, a stock or stem; L. stipes; from setting; fixing. See STOP.] 1. The stump of a tree; that part of the stem of a tree which remains fixed in the earth when the tree is cut down.—2. † A log; a block.

STUB, v. t. To grub up by the roots; to extirpate; as, to stub up edible roots.

STUBBED, a. Short and thick like something truncated; blunt; obtuse. [Sw. stubbig.]—2. Hardy; not nice or delicate.

STUB'BEDNESS, n. Bluntness; obtuseness.

STUB'BLING, ppr. Grubbing up by the roots; extirpating.

STUB'BLE, n. [D. and G. stoppel; Sw. stubb; L. stipula. It is a diminutive of stub.] The stumps of wheat, rye, barley, oats, or buckwheat, left in the ground; the part of the stalk left by the scythe or sickle.

After the first crop is off, they plough in the stubble. Mortimer.

STUB'BLE-GOOSE, n. [stubble and goose.] A goose fed among stubble.

STUB'BLE-RAKE, n. A rake with long teeth for raking together stubble.

STUB'BORN, a. [This word is doubtless formed on the root of stub or stiff, and denotes fixed, firm. Chaucer writes it stibborne, 6038. But the origin of the latter syllable is not obvious.] 1. Unreasonably obstinate; inflexibly fixed in opinion; not to be moved or persuaded by reasons; inflexible; as, a stubborn son; a stubborn mind or soul. The queen is obstinate... Shak.

2. Persevering; persisting; steady; constant; as, stubborn attention.—3. Stiff; not flexible; as, a stubborn bow.

Take a plant of stubborn oak. Dryden.

4. Hardy; firm; enduring without complaint; as, stubborn Stoics.—5. Harsh; rough; rugged. [Little used.]—6. Refractory; not easily melted or worked; as, a stubborn ore or metal.—7. Refractory; obstinately resisting command, the goad, or the whip; as, a stubborn ass or horse.

STUB'BORNLY, adv. Obstinate; inflexibly; contumaciously.

STUB'BORNNESS, n. Perverse and unreasonable obstinacy; inflexibility; contumacy.

Stubbornness and obstinate disobedience must be mastered with blows. Locke.

2. Stiffness; want of pliancy.—3. Refractoriness, as of ores.

STUB'BY, a. [from stub.] Abounding with stubs.—2. Short and thick; short and strong; as, stubby bristles.

STUB'-MORTYSE, n. A mortise that does not pass through the timber mortised.

STUB'-NAIL, n. [stub and nailed.] A nail broken off; a short thick nail.

STUC'CO, n. [It. id.; Fr. stuc; allied probably to stick, stuck.] 1. A word applied as a general term to plaster of any kind, used as a coating for walls, and to give them a finished surface. Stucco for internal decorative purposes, such as the cornices and mouldings of rooms, and the enrichment of ceilings, is a composition of very fine sand, pulverized marble, and gypsum, mixed with water till it is of a proper consistency. Within a short time after being first applied, it begins to set, or gradually harden, in which state it is moulded, and may at length be finished up with metal tools. The stucco employed for external purposes is of a coarser kind, and variously prepared; the different sorts being generally distinguished by the name of cements. Some of these take a surface and polish almost equal to that of the finest marble. The third coat of three-coat plaster is termed stucco, consisting of fine lime and sand. There is a species called bastard stucco, in which a small portion of hair is used. Rough stucco is merely floated and brushed with water, but the best kind is trowelled.—2. Work made of stucco.—3. In popular lan., plaster of Paris or gypsum.

STUC'CO, v. t. To plaster; to overlay with fine plaster.

STUC'COED, pp. Overlaid with stucco.

STUC'COER, n. One versed in stucco work.

STUC'COING, ppr. Plastering with stucco.

STUC'CO WÖRK, n. In arch., the name given to all interior ornamental work composed of stucco; such as cornices, mouldings, and other ornaments in the ceilings of rooms.

STUCK, pret. and pp. of Stick.

Stuck o'er with titles, and hung round with strings. Pope.

STUCK, † n. A thrust.

STUCK'LING, n. An apple pasty, thin, somewhat half circular in shape, and not made in a dish. [Local.]

STUCK MOULDINGS, n. In arch., mouldings formed by the planes instead of being wrought by the hand.

2. Strong; forcible; lusty; as, a sturdy lout.—3. Violent; laid on with strength; as, sturdy strokes.—4. Stiff; stout; strong; as, a sturdy oak.

He was not of a delicate contexture, his limbs rather sturdy than dainty. Wolton.

STURDY, n. A disease in sheep, marked by dulness and stupor. Sturdy, staggers, gid, turnsick, goggles, worm under the horn, watery head, and pendro, are all popular terms for hydatids, or an animal now known as the Tenias globulus, which by some unaccountable way finds entrance into the brain of the sheep and settles there, either in some of the ventricles, or more frequently in the substance of the brain. Their size varies from that of the smallest speck to that of a pigeon's egg; and the sheep attacked are generally under two years old. Stupidity, a disposition to sit on the rump, to turn to one side &c., are indications of this disease. It may be cured by thrusting instruments through the skull, or a wire through the nostrils, so as to destroy the hydatid.

STURGEON, n. [Fr. esturgeon; Low L. sturio; G. stör; Sw. stör; the stirrer, one that turns up the mud; G. stören.] A genus of cartilaginous fishes (acipenser, Linn.) The general form of the sturgeon is similar to that of the shark, but the body is more or less covered with bony plates in longitudinal rows; the exterior portion of the head is also well mailed; the mouth placed under the snout is small and edentated; the palatal bones, soldered to the maxillaries, convert them into the upper jaw. The mouth, placed on a pedicle that has three articulations, is more protractile than that of a shark. The eyes and nostrils are on the side of the head, and cirri are inserted under the snout. On the back is a single dorsal fin, and the tail is forked. The sturgeons ascend the larger rivers of Europe in great abundance, and are the objects of important fisheries. The flesh of most of the species is wholesome and agreeable food; their ova is converted into caviar, and their air-bladder affords the finest isinglass. The common sturgeon (Acipenser sturio), is found in most of the large rivers of Europe. Its flesh is delicate and well-flavoured, somewhat resembling veal. The sterlet, (A. ruthenus) is found in the Po. It is seldom more than two feet in length; but it is the most highly prized species. Its flesh is delicious food, and its caviar is reserved for the Russian court. The great sturgeon (A. huso), is found in the Po, and Danube. It frequently exceeds 12 and 15 feet in length, and weighs above 1200 pounds. The flesh is not much esteemed, but the finest isinglass is made from its air-bladder. There are several species peculiar to North America.

STURIO'NES, } n. A family of chon-STURIO'NIDÆ, } dropterygious fishes, of which the common sturgeon,
(Acipenser sturio) is the type. It contains four genera, Acipenser, Spatularia, Chimæra, and Callorhynchus.

STURIO'NIAN, n. See STURIONIDÆ.

STUR'NIDÆ, n. Vigors's name for the starling family, belonging to his order Insectores.

STUR'NUS, n. The starling, a genus of insessorial birds. The common starling (S. vulgaris) is a well known familiar bird, and an inhabitant of almost every climate. It is very docile in confinement, and may be easily taught to repeat short phrases, or whistle tunes with great exactness, its powers of imitation being considerable. In the autumn, the starlings fly in vast flocks, and may be known at a great distance by their whirling mode of flight. The Sturnus unicolor is found in the south of Europe.

STURT, v. t. [Suo Goth. stoerta.] To vex; to trouble; as a noun, trouble; disturbance; vexation; wrath; heat of temper. [Scotch.]

STUTTER, n. A stammer; a hesitation in speaking. [See STAMMER.]

STUTTERER, n. A stammerer.

STUTTERING, ppr. Stammering; speaking with hesitation.

STUTTERING, n. A stammering; a hesitation of speech; an interrupted articulation, accompanied generally with more or less of straining, and distortion of feature. If owing to a vicious conformation of the tongue or other organ of speech, it is incurable, but when merely spasmodic, the cure is possible and sometimes easy. In some cases it may be relieved at once by avoiding carefully the usual hurried repetition of the same syllable, or by opening the mouth and allowing simple sound to pass, when any one oral position threatens to become spasmodically permanent. Should it arise from the attempt to speak being made while drawing in the breath, or when the chest is not sufficiently inflated, it may be avoided by filling the chest well with air before beginning to speak. A table of articulations, with minute directions as to the proper positions of the organs in pronouncing the different sounds, may likewise in some instances prove useful to the patient.

STUTTERINGLY, adv. With stammering.

STY, n. [Sax. stige.] 1. A pen or inclosure for swine.—2. Any place literally or morally filthy.—3. A place of bestial debauchery.

STY'G'IAN, a. [L. stygius, styx.] Pertaining to Styx, fabled by the ancients to be a river of hell over which the shades of the dead passed, or the region of the dead; hence, hellish; infernal. At that so sudden blaze, the Stygian throng Bent their aspect. Milton.

STY'ING, ppr. Shutting up in a sty.

STYLAGALMA'E, n. or a. [Gr. στυλας, a pillar, and αγαλλμα, an image.] In arch., a figure which performs the office of a column, or relating to such.

STYLAR, a. Pertaining to a style; belonging to the style or stile of a dial. It is also written stilar.

STYLE, n. [L. stylus; D. and G. styl; Fr. style or stile; Gr. στυλος, a column, a pen or bodkin; from the root of the Teutonic stellen, to set or place.] 1. Manner of writing with regard to language; the peculiar manner in which a person expresses his conceptions. It may be considered as a picture of the ideas which rise in his mind, and of the order in which they are there produced. The distinctive manner of writing which belongs to each author, is called his style. Thus, we speak of a harsh style; a dry style; a timid or bombastic style; a loose style; a terse style; a laconic or verbose style; a flowing style; a lofty style; an elegant style; an epistolary style. The style of an author is made up of various minute particulars, which it is extremely difficult to describe, but each of which adds something to the aggregate of qualities which belong to him. The selection and arrangement of words, turn of sentences, syntax, rhythm; the relation, abundance, and the character of his usual figures and metaphors; the usual order in which thoughts succeed each other; the logical form in which conclusions are usually deduced from their premises; the particular qualities most insisted on in description; amplification and conciseness, clearness and obscurity, directness and indirectness, exhaustion, suggestion, suppression;—all these are features of style in the largest sense of the term, in which it seems to comprehend all peculiarities belonging to the manner in which thought is communicated from the writer to the reader. A particular style may belong not only to an individual, but to a body of individuals, allied to each other as belonging to the same school, country, or age. The principal requisites of a good style are purity, perspicuity, vigour, harmony, dignity and beauty.

Yet let some lord but own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens and the style refines!

Pope.

2. Manner of speaking appropriate to particular characters; or, in general, the character of the language used.

No style is held for base, where love well named is. Sidney.

According to the usual style of dedications.

Middleton.

So we say, a person addresses another in a style of haughtiness, in a style of rebuke.—3. In the fine arts, the mode in which an artist forms and expresses his ideas on and of a given subject. It is a characteristic essence by which we distinguish the works of one master from those of another. We speak of the style of a design, of a composition, of draperies, &c., but we apply the word manner to colouring, and harmony of tints. Style in the arts depends on the character of the artist, the subjects, the art itself, the materials used, the object aimed at, &c. The style varies in different periods, and is also influenced by differences of national character. The various branches of an art too have each its peculiar style. Thus in poetry, there are the epic, lyric, and dramatic styles; in music, the sacred, opera, and concert styles, the vocal and instrumental styles, the quartetto, sonata, and symphony styles, &c.; in painting, there are the historical, landscape, &c., styles—4. A particular character of music; as, a grave style; a lively style; a brilliant style.—5. Title; appellation; as, the style of majesty.

Propitious hear our prayer,

Whether the style of Titan please thee more. Pope.

6.† Course of writing.—7. Style of court, is properly the practice observed by any court in its way of proceeding. In Scots law, style is the particular form of expressions and arrangement necessary to be observed in formal deeds and instruments.—8. In popular use, manner; form; as, the entertainment was prepared in excellent style.—9. A pointed instrument or iron bodkin, used by the ancient Romans for writing by scratching on wax tablets; while the pointed end was used for writing, the other end, which was made blunt and smooth, was employed to make erasures with. From the instrument of writing the term was transferred to the writing itself, and came to signify a particular manner of writing.—10. An instrument of surgery; a probe.—11. Something with a sharp point; a graver; the pin or gnomon of a dial, which projects the shadow on the plane of the dial; written also stille.—

12. In bot., the prolongation of the summit of the ovary which supports the stigma. Sometimes it is entirely wanting, and then the stigma is sessile; as in the poppy and tulip. When the ovary is composed of a single carpel, the style is also single; and the number of styles varies according to the number of carpels; though when the carpels are numerous, the styles may be united.

a, Ovary. b, Style. c, Stigma.

Considered in reference to its direction or position, the style may be lateral, basal, vertical, included, protruded, ascending, or declinate. Viewed in reference to its form, it may be filiform, subulate, triangular, claviform, or petaloid. Viewed with reference to its divisions, it may be simple or divided; when the divisions do not extend far, it is slit; when more prolonged, partite. Thus it may be bifid or bipartite, trifid or tripartite, &c. After fecundation the style generally falls off, when it is said to be caducous; but when it remains, it is said to be persistent.

13. In arch., a particular mode of erecting buildings; as the Gothic style, the Grecian style, the Moorish style, the Norman style, &c.—14. In joinery. [See STYLE.]—15. In chronology, a mode of reckoning time, with regard to the Julian and Gregorian calendar. Style is Old or New. The Old Style follows the Julian manner of computing the months and days, or the calendar as established by Julius Cesar, in which the year consists of 365 days and 6 hours. This is something more than 11 minutes too much, and in the course of time, between Cesar and Pope Gregory XIII., this surplus amounted to 11 days. Gregory reformed the calendar by retrenching 10 days, and fixing the ordinary length of the civil year at 365 days; and to make up for the odd hours, it was ordained that every fourth year (which we call leap year) should consist of 366 days. But the true length of the equinoctial year is only 365 d. 5 h. 48 m. 51.6 s.; hence, four equinoctial years would fall short of four years of 365 d. 6 h. each, or of four Julian years, three of 365 d. and one of 366 d. by 44 m. 33.6 s., and 400 equinoctial years would fall short of 400 Julian years by 74 h. 16 m., or by a little more than three days. This error would very nearly be rectified by omitting three days in three of the four years which completed centuries. Accordingly it was determined, that, dividing time into portions of 400 years, every fourth year, excepting those which terminated the first three centuries of such a period, should be of 366, but that those three, like the common years, should each be of 365 days only. Thus the years 1600, 2000, 2400, would be leap years, or have 366 days, and the years 1700, 1800, 1900, 2100, 2200, 2300, would be common years of 365 days each. This mode of correcting the calendar has been adopted at different times in almost all civilized nations. Russia and Greece are the only countries in which the Old style is still adhered to. In England it was adopted by act of parliament in 1752, and as one of the years concluding a century in which the additional or intercalary day was to be omitted (the year 1700) had elapsed since the correction by Pope Gregory, it was necessary to omit 11 instead of 10 days in the current year. Accordingly 11 days in September 1752 were retrenched, and the 3d day was reckoned the 14th. This mode of reckoning time is called New style. The difference between the Old and New styles is now 12 days.

Note.—The word style is used in other significations besides those above specified. Thus we speak of a style of dancing, a style of acting, a style of dress; in short, a style of any thing in which form or manner is conceived to be, in however slight a degree, expressive of taste or sentiment.

STYLE, v. t. To call; to name; to denominate; to give a title to in addressing. The emperor of Russia is styled autocrat; the sovereign of Great Britain is styled Defender of the Faith.

STYLED, pp. Named; denominated; called.

STYLET, n. [from style.] A small poniard or dagger.

STYLIDIA'CEÆ, n. Styleworts, a natural order of gynandrous exogens, including plants belonging to the genus Stylidium, which are found in Australia.

STYLID'IUM, n. A genus of Australian plants, remarkable for the peculiarly irritable column which bears both the stamens and pistil. This column is Stylidium laevisfolium.

jointed, and when touched at a particular point, it throws itself with force from one side of the flower to the other, bursting the anther lobes, and scattering the pollen on the stigma.

STYLIFORM, a. [style and form.]

Like a style, pin or pen. Applied to processes of bones and parts of plants.

STYLING, ppr. Calling; denominating.

STYLISH, a. Being in fashionable form, or in high style; modish; showy.

STYLIS'TIC, n. The art of forming a good style in writing.—2. A treatise on style.

STYLITE, n. [Gr. στυλος, a column.] In eccles. hist., the Stylites were a sect of solitaries, who stood motionless on columns or pillars for the exercise of their patience. This strange method of devotion took its rise in the 2d century, and continued to be practised in Syria and Egypt by many individuals for a great length of time. The most famous among the Stylites, was one St. Simeon, in the 5th century, who is said to have lived thirty-seven years upon various columns of considerable height, in the neighbourhood of Antioch.

STY'LO. In anat., names compounded of this word apply to muscles which are attached to the styloid process of the temporal bone; as, stylo-glossus, stylo-hyoideus, stylo-mastoid foramen, stylo-pharyngeus.

STY'LOBATE, n. [Gr. στυλος, a pillar, and βασίς, base.] In arch., in a general sense, any sort of basement upon which columns are placed to raise them above the level of the ground or floor; but in its technical sense, it is applied only to a continuous unbroken pedestal, upon which an entire range of columns stand, contradicting from pedestals, which are merely detached fragments of a stylobate placed beneath each column.

STY'LOBAT'ION, n. The pedestal of a column.

STY'LOBITE, n. In min., gehlenite.

STY'LOGRAPH'IC, } a. Pertaining to STY'LOGRAPHI'CAL, } ing to or used in stylography; as, stylographic cards, or such as may be written on with a style.—Stylographic pencil, a pencil or style for this kind of writing.

STY'LOGRAPHY, n. [L. stylos, a style, and Gr. γραφω, to write.] Art of tracing with a style; a new method of drawing and engraving with a style on a tablet.

STY'LOID, a. [L. stylos, and Gr. ειδος.] Having some resemblance to a style or pen; as, the styloid process of the temporal bone.

STY'LOPOD, n. The projection or swelling at the base of the styles in the umbelliferae. It is considered as a double disk.

STYPTIC, a. [Fr. styptique; L. stypticus; Gr. στυπτικός; from the root of L. stipo, Eng. stop.] An astringent; something which produces contraction; that stops bleeding; having the quality of restraining hemorrhage.

STYPTIC, n. A medicine which has an astringent quality. Styptics are mere astringents; as, a saturated solution of alum, sulphate of zinc, or creasote.

STYPTIC'ITY, n. The quality of astringency.

STYRA'CEÆ, n. A small natural order of plants belonging to the polycarpous group of monopetalous exogens. The species are trees or shrubs with alternate leaves without stipules. The flowers are axillary, and are either solitary or clustered with membranaceous bracts; the fruit is a drupe, the seeds solitary, with the embryo lying in the midst of albumen. The order is nearly allied to Ericaceae. The species are found in the temperate and tropical parts of North and South America, and also in Nepal and China. The order is chiefly remarkable for furnishing the storax and benzoin of commerce. Some of the species are used for dyeing yellow. The various species of Halesia are the snow-drop trees of Carolina.

STY'RACINE, n. A crystalline substance extracted from storax. It is neutral, and has the properties of a resin.

STY'RAX, n. A genus of plants, natural order Styracaceae, of which it is the type. The species are elegant trees and shrubs, mostly covered with hairs, having a stellate form, with entire leaves, and white or cream-coloured racemose flowers. They are principally natives of America and Asia; one is found in Europe, and one in Africa.—S. officinalis or official storax, is a native of Syria, Italy, and most parts of the Levant. It yields the storax of commerce, and which is used in medicine.—S. benzoin, benjamin-storax, or gum-benjamin tree, is a native of Sumatra and Java. It yields the gum-benzoin, or benjamin of commerce, also used in medicine. [See STORAX, BENZOIN.] The hardy species of styrax are well adapted for shrubberies, on account of their foliage and handsome flowers.

STYRIAN, n. A native of Styria, a province of Austria.

STYRIAN, a. Of or belonging to Styria.

STYROLE, n. Oil of storax, obtained from styracine by distilling it with hydrate of lime.

STYTHY, v. t. To forge on an anvil. [See STITHY.]

STYX, n. [L.; Gr. Στυξ.] In ancient myth., the principal river of the infernal regions, which had to be crossed in passing to the regions of disembodied souls. The divinity of the river, fabled to dwell in a rock palace, was also called Styx.

SUABILITY, n. Liability to be sued; the state of being subject by law to civil process.

SU'ABLE, a. [from sue.] That may be sued; subject by law to be called to answer in court.

SUADE, for Persuade, is not in use.

SUAGE, for Assuage, is not in use.

SUARROW NUT, n. See SUWARROW NUT.

SUA'SIBLE, a. [L. suadeo.] That may be persuaded or easily persuaded.

SUASION, n. (sua'zhun.) The act of persuading. [See PERSUADE.]

SUA'SIVE, a. [L. suadeo.] Having power to persuade.

SUA'SIVELY, adv. In a manner tending to persuade.

SUA'SORY, a. [L. suasorius.] Tending to persuade; having the quality of convincing and drawing by argument or reason.

SUAVERIED, † pp. Rendered affable.

SUAVERY, † v. t. [L. suavis, sweet.] To make affable.

SUAVERYING, † ppr. Making affable.

SUAVIL'OUQUY, † n. [L. suavis and liquor.] Sweetness of speech.

SUAVITER IN MODO. [L.] Agreeable or kindly in manner.

SUAVITY, n. [L. suavitas; Fr. suavité; from L. suavis, sweet.] 1. † Sweetness, in a literal sense.—2. Sweetness, in a figurative sense; that which is to the mind what sweetness is to the tongue; agreeableness; softness; pleasantness; as, suavity of manners; suavity of language, conversation or address.

SUB, a Latin preposition, denoting under or below, used in English as a prefix, to express a subordinate degree, or some degree, and sometimes the least sensible degree of that which the word to which it is prefixed expresses. The last letter of this prefix is often changed into the letter which begins the next syllable; as in succinct, suffer, suggest, summon, suppress, &c. In chemical nomenclature, when sub is prefixed to the name of a salt, it denotes a deficiency of acid, and an excess of base.

SUBACID, a. [sub and acid.] Moderately acid or sour; as, a subacid juice.

SUBACID, n. A substance moderately acid.

SUBACRID, a. [sub and acid.] Moderately sharp, pungent or acid.

SUBACT', v. t. [L. subactus, subago; sub and ago.] To reduce; to subdue.

SUBACT'ION, n. The act of reducing to any state, as, of mixing two bodies completely, or of beating them to a powder.

SUBACÛTE, a. Acute in a modified degree.

SUBADAR, or SOUBAH DAR, n. In India, a viceroi, or provincial governor.—2. A native serjeant of infantry. The subadar-major is the principal native officer in a company's black regiment; the commissioned officers being all Europeans.

SUBAE'RIAL, a. Being under the air or sky. [Opposed to subaqueous.]

SUBAGITA'TION, n. [L. subagitatio.] Carnal knowledge.

SUBAH, n. In India, a province or viceroyskip.

SUBAHSHIP, n. The jurisdiction of a subahdar.

SUBAL'TERN, a. [Fr. subalterne; L. sub and alternus.] Inferior; subordinate; that in different respects is both superior and inferior; as, a subaltern officer. It is used chiefly of military officers.—Subaltern, or subalternating propositions, in Logic, universal and particular propositions, which agree in quality but not in quantity; as, every vine is a tree; some vine is a tree.

SUBAL'TERN, n. A subordinate officer in an army or military body. It is applied to officers below the rank of captain.

SUBALTERN'ATE, a. [supra.] Successive; succeeding by turns.

SUBALTERN'A'TION, n. State of inferiority or subjection.—2. Act of succeeding by course.

SUB-ANG'ULAR, a. Slightly angular.

SUBAP'ENNINE, a. Under or at the foot of the Apennine mountains.—2. In geol., a term applied to a series of strata of the older pliocene period. These strata rest unconformably upon the inclined beds of the Apennine range, and are composed of sand, clay, marl, and calcareous tufa.

SUBAQUAT'IC, } a. [L. sub and aqua,
SUBAQUEOUS, } water.] Being under water, or beneath the surface of water, formed under water, deposited under water; as, subaqueous formations.

SUBARRA'TION, n. [Low L. subarrare.] The ancient custom of betrothing.

SUBAS'TRAL, a. [sub and astral.] Beneath the stars or heavens; terrestrial.

SUBASTRIN'GENT, a. Astringent in a small degree.

SUBAUDI'TION, n. [L. subauditio; sub and audio, to hear.] The act of understanding something not expressed.

SUBAX'ILLARY, a. [L. sub and axilla, the arm-pit.] Placed under the axil or angle formed by the branch of a plant with the stem, or by a leaf with the branch.

SUB-BASE, n. In music, the deepest pedal stop or the lowest notes of an organ.

SUB-BEADLE, n. [sub and beadle.] An inferior or under beadle.

SUBBRA'CHIANS, n. An order of Malacopterygious fishes, comprising those which have the ventral fins situated either immediately beneath and between, or a little in front or behind the pectoral fins.

SUB-BRIGADIER, n. An officer in the horse guards, who ranks as cornet.

SUB-CAR'BONATE, n. A carbonate in which there is an excess of base.

SUB-CARBURETTED, a. Consisting of a greater number of equivalents of the base than of the carbon.

SUB-CARTILAG'INOUS, a. Partially gristly.

SUB-CAU'DAL, a. Being beneath the tail.

SUB-CELESTIAL, a. [sub and celestial.] Being beneath the heavens; as, sub-celestial glories.

SUB-CEN'TRAL, a. Being under the centre.

SUB-CHAN'TER, n. [sub and chanter.] An under chanter; a deputy of the precentor of a cathedral.

SUBCLA'VIAN, a. [L. sub and clavis, a key.] Situated under the clavicle or collar bone; as, the subclavian veins and arteries.

SUB-COMMIT'TEE, n. [sub and committee.] An under committee; a part or division of a committee.

SUB-COMPRESS'ED, a. Not fully compressed.

SUB-CONFORM'ABLE, a. Partially conformable.

SUB-CONICAL, a. Slightly conical.

SUB-CONSTELLA'TION, n. A subordinate constellation.

SUB-CON'TRACT, n. A contract under a previous contract.

SUB-CONTRACT'ED, a. [sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

SUB-CON'TRARY, a. [sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferior degree. In geom., when two similar triangles are so placed as to have a common angle at their vertex, and yet their bases not parallel, they are said to be sub-contrary, as the triangles ACB, CDE. In such triangles, the angles at the bases are equal, but on the contrary sides. Sub-contrary section. In geom., if an oblique cone with a circular base, be cut by a plane not parallel to the base, but inclined to the axis so that the section is a circle, then the section is said to be sub-contrary. In this case the plane of the section, and the section of the base, are equally inclined to the axis, but the inclinations are in opposite directions.—Sub-contrary propositions, in logic, are such propositions as agree in quantity, but differ in quality; as, some men are wise, some men are not wise.

SUB-CORD'ATE, a. [L. sub and cor, the heart.] In shape somewhat like a heart; as, a sub-cordate leaf.

SUB-COS'TAL, a. [L. sub and costa, a rib.] The sub-costal muscles are the internal intercostal muscles.

SUB-CRYS'TALLINE, a. Imperfectly crystallized.

SUB-CUTA'NEOUS, a. [sub and cutaneous; L. cutis, skin.] Situated under the skin. In anat., a term applied to the platysma myoides muscle, and to some nerves, vessels, glands, &c., which are very superficial.—Sub-cutaneous glands, sebaceous glands lying under the skin, which they perforate by their excretory ducts.

SUBCUTIC'ULAR, a. [L. sub and cuticula, cuticle.] Being under the cuticle or scarf-skin.

SUB-CYLINDRICAL, a. Imperfectly cylindrical.

SUBDEACON, n. [sub and deacon.] An under deacon; a deacon's servant in the Romish church.

SUBDEACONRY, } n. The order SUBDEACONSHIP, } and office of subdeacon in the Catholic church.

SUBDEAN, n. [sub and dean.] An under dean; a dean's substitute or vicegerent.

SUBDEANERY, n. The office and rank of subdean.

SUBDEE'ANAL, a. Relating to a subdeanery.

SUBDEE'UPLE, a. [L. sub and decuplus.] Containing one part of ten.

SUBDEL'EGATE, n. A subordinate delegate.

SUBDEL'EGATE, v. t. To appoint to act under another.

SUBDENT'ED, a. [sub and dent.] Indented beneath.

SUBDEPOSIT, n. That which is deposited beneath something else.

SUBDERISORIOUS, † a. [L. sub and derisor.] Ridiculing with moderation or delicacy.

SUBDERIVATIVE, n. A word following in immediate grammatical derivation.

SUBDIALECT, n. An inferior dialect.

SUB-DILATED, a. Partially dilated.

SUBDITI'TIOUS, a. [L. subdititius, from subdo, to substitute.] Put secretly in the place of something else. [Little used.]

SUBDIVERS'IFIED, pp. Diversified again.

SUBDIVERS'IFY, v. t. [sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified. [Little used.]

SUBDIVERS'IFYING, ppr. Diversifying again what is already diversified.

SUBDIVIDE, v. t. [sub and divide.] To divide a part of a thing into more parts; to part into smaller divisions.

In the rise of eight in tones, are two half tones; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the stops of a lute, it makes the number thirteen. Bacon.

The progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others. Dryden.

SUBDIVIDE, v. i. To be subdivided.

SUBDIVIDED, pp. Divided again or into smaller parts.

SUBDIVIDING, ppr. Dividing into smaller parts that which is already divided.

SUBDIVIS'IBLE, a. Susceptible of subdivision.

SUBDIVI'SION, n. The act of subdividing or separating a part into smaller parts.—2. The part of a thing made by subdividing; the part of a larger part.

In the decimal table, the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit. Arbuthnot.

SUB'DOLOUS, a. [L. subdolos; sub and dolos, deceit.] Sly; crafty; cunning; artful; deceitful. [Little used.]

SUBDOMINANT, n. In music, the fourth note above the tonic, being under the dominant. Thus in the key of C, F is the subdominant.

SUBDU'ABLE, a. That may be subdued.

SUBDU'AL, n. [from subdue.] The act of subduing.

SUBDUCE, } v. t. [L. subduco; sub
SUBDUCT, } and duco, to draw.]
1. To withdraw; to take away.

Or from my side subducting, took perhaps More than enough. Milton.

2. To subtract by arithmetical operation.

If out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generatives we should subduct ten. Hale.

SUBDUCED, pp. Withdrawn; taken away.

SUBDUCING, ppr. Withdrawing; subtracting by arithmetical operation.

SUBDUCTION, n. The act of taking away or withdrawing.—2. Arithmetical subtraction.

SUBDUE, v. t. (subdu') [L. subdo, subdere, from sub and do, to give, to cause, to effect.] 1. To conquer by force or the exertion of superior power, and bring into permanent subjection; to reduce under dominion. Thus Cesar subdued the Gauls; Augustus subdued Egypt; the English subdued Canada. Subduing implies conquest or vanquishing, but it implies also more permanence of subjection to the conquering power than either of these words. I will subdue all thine enemies; 1 Chron. xvii.

2. To oppress; to crush; to sink; to overpower so as to disable from further resistance.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters. Shak.

If aught were worthy to subdue The soul of man. Milton.

3. To tame; to break by conquering a refractory temper or evil passions; to render submissive; as, to subdue a stubborn child.—4. To conquer; to reduce to mildness; as, to subdue the temper or passions.—5. To overcome by persuasion or other mild means; as, to subdue opposition by argument or entreaties.—6. To overcome; to conquer; to captivate; as by charms.—7. To soften; to melt; to reduce to tenderness; as, to subdue ferocity by tears.—8. To overcome; to overpower and destroy the force of; as, medicines subdue a fever.—9. To make mellow; to break, as land; also, to destroy, as weeds.

SUBDUE'D, pp. Conquered and reduced to subjection; oppressed; crushed; tamed; softened.

SUBDUEMENT, n. Conquest.

SUBDU'ER, n. One who conquers and brings into subjection; a tamer.—2. That which subdues or destroys the force of.

SUBDU'ING, ppr. Vanquishing and reducing to subjection; crushing; destroying the power of resistance; softening.

SUBDU'PLE, a. [L. sub and duplus, double.] Containing one part of two. Subdu'ple ratio, in math., is when the antecedent is equal to half the consequent. [Little used.]

SUBDUPLICATE, a. [sub and duplicate.] Having the ratio of the square roots. In math., the subduplicate ratio of two quantities is the ratio of their square roots. Thus, the subduplicate ratio of a to b, is the ratio of \sqrt{a} to \sqrt{b} , or it is the ratio whose duplicate is that of a to b. The term is little used by modern mathematicians.

SUBELON'GATE, a. Not fully elongated.

SUBEQUAL, a. [sub and equal.] Nearly equal.

SUB'ERATE, n. [L. suber, cork.] A salt formed by the suberic acid in combination with a base; as, the suberate of ammonia.

SUBERIC, a. Pertaining to cork.—Suberic acid, an acid substance produced by treating rasped cork with nitric acid. It is also produced when nitric acid acts on stearic acid, margaric acid, oleic acid, and other fatty bodies. It forms small granular crystals; its acid powers are but feeble; it is very soluble in boiling water, in alcohol, and ether; it fuses at about 300°, and sublimes in acicular crystals. It consists of 8 equivalents of carbon, 6 of hydrogen, and 3 of oxygen.

SUB'ERINE, or SUB'ERIN, n. [L. suber, the cork tree.] The name given by Chevreul to the cellular tissue of cork, after the various soluble matters have been removed by the action of water and alcohol. It is very inflammable.

SUB'EROSE, a. [L. sub and erosus, gnawed.] In bot., having the appearance of being gnawed; appearing as if a little eaten or gnawed.

SUB'EROUS, a. [from suber, cork.] Corky; soft and elastic.

SUB'FAMILY, n. In nat. hist., a subdivision of a family.

SUBFUS'E, a. [L. subfuscus; sub and fuscus.] Dusky; moderately dark; brownish; tawny.

SUBGELAT'INOUS, a. Imperfectly gelatinous.

SUBGENERIC, a. Pertaining to a subgenus.

SUBGENUS, n. A subordinate genus.

SUB-GLOBOSE, a. Not quite globose.

SUBGLOB'ULAR, a. Having a form approaching to globular.

SUBGLUMA'CEOUS, a. Somewhat glumaceous.

SUB-GOVERNOR, n. An under governor.

SUBGRAN'ULAR, a. Somewhat granular.

SUBHASTA'TION, n. [L. sub hasta, under the spear.] A public sale of immovable property to the highest bidder, so called from the Roman practice of planting a spear on the spot where a public sale was to take place.

SUBHYDROSULPH'URET, n. A compound of sulphuretted hydrogen with a less number of equivalents of the base than of the sulphuretted hydrogen.

SUBINDICATE, v. t. To indicate in a less degree.

SUBINDICA'TION, n. [L. sub and indico.] The act of indicating by signs.

SUBINDUCE, † v. t. To offer indirectly.

SUBINFEDA'TION, n. [sub and infederation. See FEUD.] 1. In law, the act of enfeoffing by a tenant or feoffee, who holds lands of the crown; the act of a greater baron, who grants land or a smaller manor to an inferior person. By 34 Edward III. all subinfedations previous to the reign of king Edward I. were confirmed.—2. Under tenancy.

The widow is immediate tenant to the heir, by a kind of subinfederation or under tenancy. Blackstone.

SUBINGRES'SION, † n. [L. sub and ingressus.] Secret entrance.

SUBITA'NEOUS, a. [L. subitaneus.] Sudden; hasty.

SUB'ITANY, † a. Sudden.

SU'BITO, in music, quickly; suddenly; a term of direction; as, volti subito, turn (the leaf) quickly.

SU'BITO-VOLTO, n. [It.] An invention for turning leaves of music, by a pressure of the foot from an instrumental performer while playing.

SUBJA'CENT, a. [L. subjaceus; sub and jaceo, to lie.] 1. Lying under or below.—2. Being in a lower situation, though not directly beneath. A man placed on a hill, surveys the subjacent plain.—3. In geol., a term applied to rocks, beds, or strata, which lie under or are covered by others.

SUBJECT, a. [L. subjectus, from subjicio; sub and jacio, to throw, that is, to drive or force.] 1. Placed or situate under.

The eastern tower

Whose height commands, as subject, all the vale,

To see the fight. Shak.
2. Being under the power and dominion of another; as, Jamaica is subject to Great Britain.

Esau was never subject to Jacob. Locke.
3. Exposed; liable from extraneous causes; as, a country subject to extreme heat or cold.—4. Liable from inherent causes; prone; disposed.

All human things are subject to decay.

Dryden.

5. Being that on which any thing operates, whether intellectual or material; as, the subject matter of a discourse.—6. Obedient; Tit. iii.; Col. ii.

SUBJECT, n. [L. subjectus; Fr. sujet; It. soggetto.] 1. One that owes allegiance to a sovereign, and is governed by his laws. The natives of Great Britain are subjects of the British government. The natives of the United States, and naturalized foreigners, are subjects of the federal government. Men in free governments are subjects as well as citizens; as citizens, they enjoy rights and franchises; as subjects, they are bound to obey the laws.

The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, and human laws require it. Swift.

2. That on which any mental operation is performed; that which is treated or handled; as, a subject of discussion before the legislature; a subject of negotiation.

This subject for heroic song pleased me. Milton.

3. In logic, the subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied.—4. That on which any physical operation is performed; as, a subject for dissection or amputation.—5. That in which any thing inheres or exists.

Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects in whom it reigns. Bacon.

6. The person who is treated of; the hero of a piece.

Authors of biography are apt to be prejudiced in favour of their subject. Middleton.

7. In gram., the nominative case to a verb passive.—8. In music, the principal melody or theme of a movement.—

9. In the arts, the design of a composition or picture; any thing which constitutes the object or aim of any given art. In painting, sculpture, and engraving, it often designates the representation of an action, subject and object. In the intellectual philosophy, these terms are thus distinguished:—The subject is used to express the mind, soul, or personality of the thinker—the Ego. The object is its co-relative, and uniformly expresses any thing or every thing external to the mind; every thing or any thing distinct from it—the non-Ego. The universe itself, when considered as a unique existence, is an object to the thinker, and the very subject itself (the mind) can become an object by being psychologically considered. These co-relatives, subject and object, correspond to the first most important distinction in philosophy, viz., the original antithesis of self and not-self.—10. In anat., a dead body for the purposes of dissection.—Subject of a proposition, in logic, the term of which the other is affirmed or denied. Thus in the proposition, "Plato was a philosopher," Plato is the subject, philosopher being its predicate, or that which is affirmed of the subject. Also in the proposition, "No man living on earth can be completely happy," man living on earth is the subject, can be is the affirmative particle or copulative, and completely happy is the predicate, or that which is denied of the subject.

SUBJECT, v. t. To bring under the power or dominion of. Alexander subjected a great part of the civilized world to his dominion.

Firmness of mind that subjects every gratification of sense to the rule of right reason. Middleton.

2. To put under or within the power of.

In one short view subjected to our eye, Gods, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties lie. Pope.

3. To enslave; to make obnoxious. He is the most subjected, the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

4. To expose; to make liable. Credulity subjects a person to impositions.—5. To submit; to make accountable. God is not bound to subject his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts. Locke.

6. To make subservient.

Subjected to his service angel wings. Milton.

7. To cause to undergo; as, to subject a substance to a white heat; to subject it to a rigid test.

SUBJECTED, pp. Reduced to the dominion of another; enslaved; exposed; submitted; made to undergo.

SUBJECT'ING, ppr. Reducing to submission; enslaving; exposing; submitting; causing to undergo.

SUBJEC'TION, n. The act of subduing; the act of vanquishing and bringing under the dominion of another.

The conquest of the kingdom and the subjection of the rebels. Hale.

2. The state of being under the power, control, and government of another. The safety of life, liberty, and property, depends on our subjection to the laws. The islands of the West Indies are held in subjection to the powers of Europe. Our appetites and passions should be in subjection to our reason, and our will should be in entire subjection to the laws of God.

SUBJECT'IST, n. One versed in the subjective philosophy.

SUBJECTIVE, a. Relating to the subject, as opposed to the object.

Certainty is distinguished into objective and subjective; objective, is when the proposition is certainly true of itself; and subjective, is when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.

Subject and objective, in philosophy, terms expressing the distinction which in analyzing every intellectual act we necessarily make between ourselves, the conscious subject, and that of which we are conscious, the object. Subjective applies to the manner in which an object is conceived of by an individual subject, and objective is expressive of that which truly belongs to an object.

SUBJECT'IVELY, adv. In relation to the subject.

SUBJECT'IVENESS, n. State of being subjective.

SUBJECT'IVITY, n. In philosophy, individuality; that which relates or pertains to self, or to impressions made upon the mind.

SUBJECT MAT'TER, n. The matter or thought presented for consideration in some statement or discussion.

SUBJOIN', v. t. [sub and join; L. subjungo.] To add at the end; to add after something else has been said or written; as, to subjoin an argument or reason. [It is never used in a literal physical sense, to express the joining of material things.]

SUBJOIN'ED, pp. Added after something else said or written.

SUBJOIN'ING, ppr. Adding after something else said or written.

SUB JUDGE. [L.] Before the judge; not decided.

SUBJUGATE, v. t. [Fr. subjuguier; L. subjugo; sub and jugo, to yoke. See Yoke.] To subdue and bring under the yoke of power or dominion; to conquer by force, and compel to submit to the government or absolute control of another.

He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker. [Subjugate differs from subject only in implying a reduction to a more tyrannical or arbitrary sway; but they are often used as synonymous.]

SUBJUGATED, pp. Reduced to the absolute control of another.

SUBJUGATING, ppr. Conquering and bringing under the absolute power of another.

SUBJUGA'TION, n. The act of subduing and bringing under the power or absolute control of another; subjection.

SUBJUGATOR, n. One who subjugates.

SUBJUNC'TION, n. The act of subjoining, or state of being subjoined.

SUBJUNCTIVE, a. [L. subjunctivus; Fr. subjunctif; It. soggiunto. See Subjoin.] 1. Subjoined or added to something before said or written.—2. In gram., designating a form of verbs which follow other verbs or words expressing condition, hypothesis, or contingency; as, "veni ut me videas," I came that you may see me; "Si fecerint æquum," if they should do what is just.—3. Subjunctive is often used as a noun denoting the subjunctive mode.

SUBKING'DOM, n. A subordinate kingdom.

SUBLA'NATE, a. [L. sub and lana, wool.] In bot., somewhat woolly.

SUBLAPSA'RIAN, } a. [L. sub and SUBLAPS'ARY, } lapsus, fall.]
Done after the apostasy of Adam.

[See the noun.]

SUBLAPSA'RIAN, n. One who maintains the sublapsarian doctrine, that the sin of Adam's apostasy being inputed to all his posterity, God, in compassion, decreed to send his Son to rescue a great number from their lost state, and to accept his obedience and death on their account. The decree of reprobation, according to the sublapsarians, is nothing but a preterition or non-election of persons, whom God left as he found, involved in the guilt of Adam's transgression without any personal sin, when he withdrew some others as guilty as they. [Sublapsarian is opposed to supralapsarian.]

SUBLAP'SARY, n. A sublapsarian.
SUBLA'TION, n. [L. sublatio.] The act of taking or carrying away.

SUBLA'TIVE, a. Of depriving power.
SUB'LEASE, n. In Scotland, an under lease; a lease of a farm, a house, &c., granted by the original tenant or lease-holder.

SUBLET', v. t. [sub and let.] In Scotland, to underlet; to lease, as a lessee to another person.

SUBLEVA'TION, n. [L. sublevo.] The act of raising on high.

SUBLIBRA'RIAN, n. An under librarian.

SUBLIECTEN'ANT, n. An officer in the royal regiment of artillery and fusileers, in which there are no ensigns, and who is the same as second lieutenant. In the navy, an officer who holds a rank intermediate between that of the full lieutenant and the midshipman. This rank is now done away with.

SUBLIGA'TION, n. [L. subligo; and ligo, to bind.] The act of binding underneath.

SUBLIMABLE, a. [from sublime.] That may be sublimated; capable of being raised by heat into vapour, and again condensed by cold.

SUBLIMABLENESS, n. The quality of being sublimable.

SUBLIMATE, v. t. [from sublime.] To bring a solid substance, as camphor or sulphur, into the state of vapour by heat, which on cooling, returns again to the solid state. [See SUBLIMATION.]—2. To refine and exalt; to heighten; to elevate.

And as his actions rose, so raise they still their vein,

In words whose weight best suits a sublimated strain. Dryden.

SUBLIMATE, n. Any thing which is sublimed; the result of a process of sublimation. Corrosive sublimate is the bichloride of mercury, a valuable medicine, which, in excessive doses, produces poisonous effects, like every other medicine. It is sometimes simply called sublimate, by way of eminence. [See CORROSIVE.]—Blue sublimate is a preparation of mercury with flowers of sulphur and sal ammoniacum; used in painting.

SUBLIMATE, a. Brought into a state of vapour by heat, and again condensed, as solid substances.

SUBLIMATED, pp. or a. Brought into a state of vapour by heat, as a solid substance; refined.

SUBLIMATING, ppr. Converting into the state of vapour by heat, and condensing; as solid substances.

SUBLIMA'TION, n. In chem., a process by which solid substances are, by the aid of heat, converted into vapour, which is again condensed into the solid state by the application of cold. Sublimation bears the same relation to a solid, that distillation does to a liquid.

Both processes purify the substances to which they are severally applied, by separating them from the fixed and grosser matters with which they are connected. Sublimation is usually conducted in one vessel, the product being deposited in the upper part of the vessel in a solid state, and often in the crystalline form, while the impurity remains in the lower part. If iodine, for example, be heated in a Florence flask, a purple vapour rises, which almost immediately condenses in small brilliant, dark-coloured crystals in the upper part of the flask, the impurity remaining in the lower. The vapour of some substances which undergo the process of sublimation, condenses in the form of a fine powder called flowers: such are the flowers of sulphur, flowers of benzoïn, and others of the same kind. Other sublimes require to be in a solid and compact form, as camphor, hydrochlorate of ammonia, and all the sublimes of mercury.—2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

Religion, the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality. South.

SUBLIMATORY, a. Tending to sublimiate.

SUBLIME, a. [L. sublimis; Fr. It. and Sp. sublime.] 1. High in place; exalted aloft.

Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd. Dryden.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature; elevated.

Can it be that souls sublime Return to visit our terrestrial clime? Dryden.

3. High in style or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easy in style thy work, in sense sublime. Prior.

4. In natural objects, possessing grandeur and vastness; as, a sublime scene; sublime scenery.—5. In the fine arts, high or exalted in style.—6. Elevated by joy; as, sublime with expectation.—7. Lofty of mien; elevated in manner. His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd Absolute rule. Milton.

SUBLIME, n. A grand or lofty style; a style that expresses lofty conceptions.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase. Adison.

2. The grand in the works of nature as distinguished from the beautiful, as that which strikes the beholder on viewing a lofty mountain; a broad river, a wide prospect; the ocean; the sky, &c.—3. The grand and elevated in the fine arts as distinguished from the beautiful. The works of Michael Angelo and Raffaele furnish instances of the sublime.—4. The emotion produced in the mind by grand and vast objects, and by grandeur and elevation in style.

SUBLIME, v. t. To sublimiate,—which see.—2. To raise on high.—3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

The sun...

Which not alone the southern wit sublimes, But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

SUBLIME, v. i. To be brought or changed into a state of vapour by heat, and then condensed by cold, as a solid substance.

Particles of antimony which will not sublime alone. Newton.

SUBLIMED, pp. Brought into a state of vapour by heat, and when cooled, changed to a solid state.

SUBLIME GEOMETRY, n. A name given by the older mathematicians to the higher parts of geometry, in which the infinitesimal calculus, or something equivalent, was employed.

SUBLIMELY, adv. With elevated conceptions; loftily; as, to express one's self sublimely.

In English lays, and all sublimely great, Thy Homer charms with all his ancient heat. Parnell.

SUBLIMENESS, n. Loftiness of style or sentiment; sublimity.

SUBLIMIFICA'TION,† n. [L. sublimis, and facio.] Act of making sublime.

SUBLIMING, ppr. Sublimating; exalting.

SUBLIMITY, n. [Fr. sublimité; L. sublimitas.] 1. Elevation of place; lofty height.—2. Height in excellence; loftiness of nature or character; moral grandeur; as, God's incomprehensible sublimity.

The sublimity of the character of Christ owes nothing to his historians. Buckminster.

3. In oratory and composition, lofty conceptions, or such conceptions expressed in corresponding language; loftiness of sentiment or style.

Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sublimity of his thoughts. Adison.

4. Grandeur; vastness; elevation, whether exhibited in the works of nature or of art.

Note.—The true nature of sublimity is a subject of great interest and importance in mental philosophy, and it has always been a favourite subject of speculation. The term, psychologically considered, has two significations; one that of the quality or circumstance in objects, which raises the emotion named sublimity; the other that of the emotion itself. The invariable condition in objects, either material or moral, is vastness or intensity. The invariable condition of the emotion of sublimity—that which distinguishes this emotion from every other emotion—is a comprehension of this vastness, with a simultaneous feeling of our own comparative insignificance, together with a concomitant sense of present security from any danger which might result from this superior power. The antithesis to the emotion of sublimity is the emotion of contempt. In every case of sublimity in material objects, whatever feelings may simultaneously concenr, vastness will be found to be an invariable condition—vastness either of form or of power; as in the violent dashing of a cataract, in the roar of the ocean, in the violence of the storm, in the majestic quiet of Mount Blanc, preserving its calm amidst all the storms that play around it. In the moral world, the invariable condition of sublimity is intensity—intensity of will. Mere intensity is sufficient to produce the sublime. Lear, who appeals to the heavens, "for they are old like him," is sublime from the very intensity of his sufferings and his passions. Lady Macbeth is sublime from the intensity of her will, which crushes every female feeling for the attainment of her object. Scævola, with his hand in the burning coals, exhibits an intensity of will which is sublime. In all the cases above-mentioned we are moved by a vivid feeling of some greater power than our own; or some will more capable of suffering, more vast in its strength, than our feeble vacillating will.

SUBLINEATION, n. [L. sub and linea.] Mark of a line or lines under a word in a sentence.

SUBLINGUAL, a. [L. sub and lingua, the tongue.] Situated under the tongue; as, the sublingual glands.

SUBLUNAR, } a. [Fr. sublunaire ;
SUBLUNARY, } L. sub and luna, the moon.] Literally, beneath the moon; but sublunary, which is the word chiefly used, denotes merely terrestrial, earthly, pertaining to this world.

All things sublunary are subject to change. Dryden.

SUBLUNARY, } n. Any worldly thing.
SUBLUXATION, } n. [L. sub and luxatio.] In sur., an incomplete dislocation; a sprain.

SUBMARINE, a. [L. sub and marinus, from mare, the sea.] Being, acting, or growing under water in the sea; as, submarine volcanoes; submarine navigators; submarine plants.—2. Formed under the sea; as, submarine lava; submarine strata, &c.—Submarine forests, the name given by geologists to numerous accumulations of vegetable matter, involving roots, stems, branches, leaves, and fruits of trees, rarely in the attitude of growth, sometimes in the condition of having fallen, and locally with the appearance of having been drifted from some distance, but all occurring on the margin of the sea below the level of high water, and extending not infrequently much below the low water line. Submarine forests have been traced for several miles along the margins of the estuaries on the north and south shores of the county of Fife, and the existence of these may be accounted for by the encroachments of the sea in those estuaries.—Submarine descent, the art or operation of diving or descending to the bottom of the sea, and remaining there for a certain time, by means of diving bells or other contrivances. Various purposes are accomplished by submarine descents, such as levelling or clearing the bottoms of harbours, preparing a foundation for buildings under water, raising sunken materials, fishing for pearls, coral, sponges, &c. [See DIVING BELL.]—Submarine navigation, the art of sailing under the surface of the sea in vessels peculiarly constructed for that purpose. Various projects have been suggested for sailing under the surface of water, but none of them has hitherto succeeded.

SUBMAXILLARY, a. [L. sub and maxilla, the jaw-bone.] Situated under the jaw. The submaxillary glands are two salivary glands, situated, one on either side, immediately within the angle of the lower jaw.

SUBMEDIAL, or SUBMEDIAN, a. Lying under the middle.

Persons, who in their several subordinations, would be obliged to follow the example of their superiors. Swift.

4. Subjection; state of being under control or government.

The most glorious military achievements would be a calamity and a curse, if purchased at the expense of habits of subordination and love of order. J. Everts.

SUBORN', v. t. [Fr. subornier; L. suborno; sub and orno. The sense of orno, in this word, and the primary sense, is to put on, to furnish. Hence suborno, to furnish privately, that is, to bribe.] 1. In law, to procure a person to take such a false oath as constitutes perjury.—2. To procure privately or by collusion.

Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour. Shak.

3. To procure by indirect means.

Those who by despair suborn their death. Dryden.

SUBORNATION, n. [Fr.] In law, a secret or underhand preparing, instructing, and bringing forward a witness to give false testimony; any act that allures or disposes to perjury.—Subornation of perjury, the wilfully procuring of any person to take a false oath amounting to perjury. It is essential to this offence that the false oath should be actually taken. The same punishment is assigned to subordination as to perjury. In Scots law, subordination of perjury, may, in some cases, be summarily tried in the course of proceedings either on complaint, or by the court itself. Attempts to suborn or to procure false testimony are in English law misdemeanours, and in Scots law are indictable.—2. The crime of procuring one to do a criminal or bad action.

SUBORN'ED, pp. Procured to take a false oath, or to do a bad action.

SUBORN'ER, n. One who procures another to take a false oath, or to do a bad action.

SUB'ROGATE, † v. t. [L. subrogo.] To put in the place of another. [See SUBROGATE.]

SUBROGA'TION, n. In the civil law, the substituting of one person in the place of another, and giving him his rights; but in its general sense, the term implies a succession of any kind, whether of a person to a person, or of a person to a thing.

SUB RO'SA, [L.] Literally, under the rose; but meaning secretly; privately; in a manner that forbids disclosure.

SUBROTUND', a. [L. sub and rotundus, round.] Almost round; almost orbicular.

SUBSALINE, a. Moderately saline or salt.

SUB'SALT, n. A salt having an excess of the base. It is opposed to supersalt.

SUBSANNA'TION, n. [L. subsannio.] Derision; scorn.

SUBSCAP'ULAR, a. [L. sub and scapula.] The subscapular artery is the large branch of the axillary artery, which rises near the lowest margin of the scapula. The subscapular muscle is a tendinous and fleshy muscle situated under the shoulder-blade, adhering to the capsular ligament, and inserted into the upper part of the lesser tuberosity, at the head of the os humeri. Its principal office is to roll the arm inwards. It likewise serves to bring it close to the ribs.

SUBSCRIBABLE, a. That may be subscribed.

SUBSCRIBE, v. t. [L. subscribo & sub scribo, to write; Fr. souscrire.] Literally, to write underneath. Hence, —1. To sign with one's own hand; to give consent to something written, or to bind one's self by writing one's name beneath; as, parties subscribe a covenant or contract; a man subscribes a bond or articles of agreement.—2. To attest by writing one's name beneath; as, officers subscribe their official acts; and secretaries and clerks subscribe copies of records.—3. To promise to give by writing one's name; as, each man subscribed ten pounds or ten shillings.—4.† To submit.

SUBSCRIBE, v. i. To promise with others a certain sum for the promotion of an undertaking by setting one's name to a paper. The paper was offered and many subscribed.—2. To assent; as, I could not subscribe to his opinion.

SUBSCRIBER, n. One who subscribes; one who contributes to an undertaking by subscribing.—2. One who enters his name for a paper, book, map, and the like.—3. One who makes an announcement to the public, in a journal, &c., with his name appended; as, the subscriber has on sale some fine tea.

SUBSCRIBING, ppr. Writing one's name underneath; assenting to or attesting by writing the name beneath; entering one's name as a purchaser.

SUBSCRIPT, a. Underwritten; as, a Greek letter subscript; thus, μ , which is equivalent to μ .

SUBSCRIPT,† n. Something underwritten.

SUBSCRIPTION, n. [L. scriptio.] 1. Any thing, particularly a paper, with names subscribed.—2. The act of subscribing or writing one's name underneath; name subscribed; signature at the bottom of a letter, writing, or instrument.—3. Consent or attestation given by underwriting the name.—4. The act of contributing to any undertaking; the giving of any sum of money, or engaging to give it, for the furtherance of some common object in which several are interested; as, subscriptions in support of charitable institutions, and the like.—5. Sum subscribed; amount of sums subscribed. We speak of an individual subscription, or of the whole subscription to a fund.—6. In the book trade, an engagement to take a copy or a certain number of copies of some new publication on some stated terms.—7. In eccles. matters, a solemn declaration of one's assent to the articles of any church, by taking an oath, and subscribing one's name thereto, as occasion requires; as, subscription to the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England; subscription to the Confession of Faith of the Church of Scotland. Subscription to articles of religion is required of the clergy of every established church, and of some churches not established.—8.† Submission; or obedience.—Subscription of deeds. In Scots law, the subscription of deeds consists not only in the subscription of the grantor, but in the subscriptions of two witnesses specially named and designed. In English law, subscription is not essential to the validity of a deed, but sealing is absolutely necessary.

SUBSECTION, n. [L. sub and sectio.] The part or division of a section; a subdivision; the section of a section.

SUBSECUTIVE, a. [L. subsequor, subsecutus.] Following in a train or succession. [Little used.]

SUBSELLIA, n. plur. [L. subsellium, a bench or seat.] In eccles. arch., the small shelving seats in the stalls of churches or cathedrals, made to turn up upon hinges so as to form either a seat, or a form to kneel upon, as occasion required. They are still in constant use on the Continent, though comparatively seldom used in England. They are also called misereres.

Subsellia, All Souls, Oxford, the Seat turned up.

SUBSEMITONE, n. In music, the sharp seventh or sensible of any key.

SUBSEPTUPLE, a. [L. sub and septuplus.] Containing one of seven parts.

SUBSEQUENCE, n. [L. subsequor, SUBSEQUENCY,] subsequens; sub and sequor, to follow.] A following; a state of coming after something.

SUBSEQUENT, a. [Fr. from L. subsequens, supra.] 1. Following in time; coming or being after something else at any time, indefinitely; as, subsequent events; subsequent ages or years; a period long subsequent to the foundation of Rome.—2. Following in the order of place or succession; succeeding; as, a subsequent clause in a treaty. What is obscure in a passage may be illustrated by subsequent words.

SUBSEQUENTLY, adv. At a later time; in time after something else. Nothing was done at the first meeting; what was subsequently transacted, I do not know.—2. After something else in order. These difficulties will be subsequently explained.

SUBSERVE, v. t. (subserv'.) [L. subservio; sub and servio, to serve.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally. In most engines, we make the laws of matter subserve the purposes of art.

Not made to rule,

But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton.

SUBSERVED, pp. Served in subordination.

SUBSERVIENCE, n. Instrumental SUBSERVIENCY, n. use; use or operation that promotes some purpose.

The body, wherein appears much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions. Bentley.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheyne.

SUBSERVIENT, a. [L. subserviens.] 1. Useful as an instrument to promote a purpose; serving to promote some end.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarcely ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other. Fell.

2. Subordinate; acting as a subordinate instrument. These are the creatures of God, subordinate to him, and subservient to his will.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another. Ray.

SUBSERVIENTLY, adv. In a subservient manner.

SUBSERVING, ppr. Serving in subordination; serving instrumentally.

SUBSESILE, a. [L. sub and sessilis.] In bot., almost sessile; having very short footstalks.

SUBSEXUPLE, a. [L. sub and sexplus.] Containing one part in six.

SUBSIDE, v. i. [L. subsido; sub and sido, to settle. See SET.] 1. To sink or fall to the bottom; to settle; as leas.—2. To fall into a state of quiet; to cease to rage; to be calmed; to become tranquil. Let the passions subside. The tumults of war will subside. Christ commanded, and the storm subsid.—3. To tend downward; to sink; as, a subsiding hill. The land subsides into a plain.—4. To abate; to be reduced.

In cases of danger, pride and envy naturally subside. Middleton.

SUBSIDENCE, n. The act or process of sinking or falling, as in the lees of liquors.—2. The act of sinking or gradually descending, as ground or buildings.

SUBSIDIARY, a. [Fr. subsidaire; L. subsidiarius. See SUBSIDY.] 1. Aiding; assistant; furnishing help. Subsidiary troops are troops of one nation hired by another for military service.—2. Furnishing additional supplies; as, a subsidiary stream.—Subsidiary quantity or symbol, in math., a quantity or symbol which is not essentially a part of a problem, but is introduced to help in the solution. The term is particularly applied to angles in trigonometrical investigations.

SUBSIDIARY, n. An assistant; an auxiliary; he or that which contributes aid or additional supplies.

SUBSIDIZE, v. t. [from subsidy.] To furnish with a subsidy; to purchase the assistance of another by the payment of a subsidy to him. Great Britain subsidized some of the German powers in the late war with France.

SUBSIDIZED, pp. Engaged as an auxiliary by means of a subsidy.

SUBSIDIZING, ppr. Purchasing the assistance of by subsidies.

SUBSIDY, n. [Fr. subsidi; L. subsidium, from subsido, literally to be or sit under or by.] 1. Aid in money; supply given; a tax; something furnished for aid, as by the people to their prince; as, the subsidies granted formerly to the kings of England. Subsidies were a tax, not immediately on property, but on persons in respect of their reputed estates, after the nominal rate of 4s. the pound for lands, and 2s. 8d. for goods.—2. A sum of money paid by one prince or nation to another, in pursuance of a treaty, to purchase the service of auxiliary troops, or the aid of such foreign prince in a war against an enemy. Thus Great Britain paid subsidies to Austria and Prussia, to engage them to resist the progress of the French.

SUBSIGN, v. t. (subsi'ne.) [L. subsigno; sub and signo, to sign.] To sign under; to write beneath. [Little used.]

SUBSIGNATION, n. The act of writing the name under something for attestation. [Little used.]

SUB SILENTIO. [L.] In silence or secrecy.

SUBSIST, v. i. [Fr. subsister; L. subsisto; sub and sisto, to stand, to be fixed.] 1. To be; to have existence; applicable to matter or spirit.—2. To continue; to retain the present state.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve.
Milton.

3. To live; to be maintained with food and clothing. How many of the human race subsist on the labours of others! How many armies have subsisted on plunder!—4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else; as, qualities that subsist in substances.

SUBSIST, v. t. To feed; to maintain; to support with provisions. The king subsisted his troops on provisions plundered from the enemy.

SUBSISTENCE, } n. [Fr. subsistence;
SUBSISTENCY, } It. sussistenza.] 1. Real being; as, a chain of differing subsistencies.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing.
Stillingfleet.

2. Competent provisions; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province.
Addison.

3. That which supplies the means of living; as money, pay or wages.—4. Inherence in something else; as, the subsistence of qualities in bodies.

SUBSISTENT, a. [L. subsistens.] 1. Having real being; as, a subsistent spirit.—2. Inherent; as, qualities subsistent in matter.

SUBSOIL, n. [sub and soil.] Under-soil, the bed or stratum of earth or earthy matter which intervenes between the surface soil and the base, or rocks on which this under-stratum rests. Subsoils are retentive or porous. A retentive subsoil, is one which does not absorb the moisture which collects in the surface soil. A porous subsoil, is one which absorbs the superfluous moisture of the surface soil. The former consists of clay, marl, and stony beds of various kinds, and the latter of gravel or sand, or it is one in which gravel or sand predominates. Subsoil plough, a swing plough of somewhat stronger construction than that in common use, but without the coulter and mould-board. The use of this plough is to follow the common plough, and loosen the subsoil at the bottom of the furrow, without raising it to the surface. It is the invention of Mr. Smith of Deanstone in Perthshire.

SUBSOL'ARY, a. Being under the sun.

SUBSPE'CIES, n. [sub and species.] A subordinate species; a division of a species.

SUBSTANCE, n. [Fr.; It. sustanza; Sp. substancia; L. substantia, substo; sub and sto, to stand.] 1. In a general sense, being; something existing by itself; that which really is or exists; equally applicable to matter or spirit. Thus the soul of man is called an immaterial substance, a cogitative substance, a substance endowed with thought. We say, a stone is a hard substance; tallow is a soft substance.—2. In a philosophical sense, as contradistinguished from accident, that which exists independently and unchangeably, whilst accident denotes the changeable phenomena in substance, whether these phenomena are necessary or casual, in which latter case they are called accidents in a narrower sense. The relation of accident to substance is called the relation of inherence, and corresponds to the logical relation of subject and predicate; because the substance is the subject to which are assigned the qualities, states, and relations, as predicates; substance itself is the essence which is capable of these phenomena, and in spite of these changes, remains the same. Substance is, with respect to the mind, a merely logical distinction from its attributes. We can never imagine it, but we are compelled to assume it. We cannot conceive substance shorn of its attributes, because those attributes are the sole staple of our conceptions, but we must assume that substance is something different from its attributes. Substance is the unknown, unknowable substratum, on which rests all that we experience of the external world.—3. The essential part; the main or material part. In this epitome we have the substance of the whole book. This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burnet.

4. Something real, not imaginary; something solid, not empty. Heroic virtue did his action's guide,
And he the substance, not th' appearance chose
Dryden.

5. Body; corporeal nature or matter, that which is solid.—Simple substances. [See ELEMENTARY SUBSTANCES.] The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbutnot.

6. Goods; estate; means of living. Job's substance was seven thousand sheep, three thousand camels, &c.; Job i.

We are...exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest. Swift.

SUBSTANTIAL, a. Belonging to substance; real; actually existing.

If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Bentley.

2. Real; solid; true; not seeming or imaginary.

If happiness be a substantial good.

The substantial ornaments of virtue.
L'Estrange.

3. Corporeal; material.

The rainbow appears like a substantial arch in the sky. Watts.

4. Having substance; strong; stont; solid; as, substantial cloth; a substantial fence or gate.—5. Possessed of goods or estate; responsible; moderately wealthy; as, a substantial freeholder or farmer; a substantial citizen.

SUBSTANTIA'LIA, n. plur. [L.] In Scots law, those parts of a deed which are essential to its validity as a formal instrument.

SUBSTANTIALITY, n. The state of real existence.—2. Corporeity; materiality.

The soul is a stranger to such gross substantiality. Granville.

SUBSTANTIALIZE, v. t. To realize.

SUBSTANTIALLY, adv. In the manner of a substance; with reality of existence.

In him his Father shone, substantially expressed. Milton.

2. Strongly; solidly.—3. Truly; solidly; really.

The laws of this religion would make men, if they would truly observe them, substantially religious toward God, chaste and temperate. Tillotson.

4. In substance; in the main; essentially. This answer is substantially the same as that before given.—5. With competent goods or estate.

SUBSTANTIALNESS, n. The state of being substantial.—2. Firmness; strength; power of holding or lasting; as, the substantialness of a wall or column.

SUBSTANTIALS, n. plur. Essential parts.

SUBSTANTIATE, v. t. To make to exist.—2. To establish by proof or competent evidence; to verify; to make good; as, to substantiate a charge or allegation; to substantiate a declaration.

SUBSTANTIVE, a. Betokening existence; as, the substantive verb to be.—2. Not adjective; as a noun substantive.—3. Solid; depending on itself.—Substantive colours, those which, in the process of dyeing, remain fixed or permanent without the intervention of other substances, in distinction from adjective colours, which require the aid of mordants to fix them.

SUBSTANTIVE, n. In gram., a noun or name; the part of speech which expresses something that exists, either material or immaterial. Thus man, horse, city, goodness, excellence, are substantives. [Better called name, L. nomen, or even noun, a corruption of nomen.]

SUBSTANTIVELY, adv. In substance; essentially.—2. In gram., as a name or noun. An adjective or pronoun may be used substantively.

SUBSTILE, n. [sub and stile.] The line of a dial on which the stile is erected.

SUBSTITUTE, v. t. [Fr. substituer; L. substituo; sub and statuo, to set.] To put in the place of another.

Some few verses are inserted or substituted in the room of others. Congreve.

SUBSTITUTE, n. One person put in the place of another to answer the same purpose. A person may be a substitute with full powers to act for another in an office. Representatives in legislation are the substitutes of their constituents. The orthodox creed of Christians is that Christ died as the substitute of sinners.—2. One thing put in the place of another. If you have not one medicine, use another as its substitute.—3. In law, one delegated to act for another.—4. In the militia, one engaged to serve in the room of another.—Substitutes in an entail, in Scots law, those heirs who are called to the succession, failing the institute, whether dispoonee or grantee.

SUBSTITUTED, pp. Put in the place of another.

SUBSTITUTING, ppr. Putting in the place of another.

SUBSTITUTION, n. The act of putting one person or thing in the place of another to supply its place; as, the substitution of an agent, attorney or representative to act for one in his absence; the substitution of bank notes for gold and silver, as a circulating medium.—2. State of being put in the place of another.—3. In gram., syllepsis, or the use of one word for another.—4. In civil law, the designation of a second, third, or other heir to enjoy in default of a former heir, or after him. It includes all those modes of disposition which are known by the names of entail, remainder, executory, devise, &c. Vulgar substitution is that in which the testator names a second heir to receive the succession, if the first should be unable or unwilling to do so.—Fidei commissary substitution, is that in which the second heir is named to receive the succession after the first. In Scots law, substitution is defined to be an enumeration of a series of heirs described in proper technical language. The substitution may be simple, calling certain heirs in their order, which the person in possession may at any time put an end to, even by a gratuitous deed; or it may be a substitution with prohibitory clauses, guarding the destination against the gratuitous deeds of the person in possession; or lastly, the substitution may be guarded by irritant and resolute clauses, whereby it becomes a statutory entail. There are substitutions also in movables, as in bonds of provision, legacies, &c.—5. In alge, the putting of one quantity in the place of another, to which it is equal but differently expressed. This process is frequently employed in the solution of equations.—Chords of substitution in music, are those of the ninth major and minor.

SUBSTITUTIONAL, a. Pertaining to substitution.

SUBSTITUTIVE, a. Furnishing a substitute.

SUBTRACT, v. t. [L. subtrahō, subtractum.] To subtract.

Note.—Subtract was formerly used in analogy with abstract. But in modern usage, it is written according to the Latin, subtract.—See this word and its derivatives.

SUBSTRAC'TION, n. In law, the withdrawing or withholding of some right. Thus the subtraction of conjugal rights, is when either the husband or wife withdraws from the other and lives separate. The subtraction of a legacy, is the withholding or detaining of it from the legatee by the executor. In like manner, the withholding of any service, rent, duty, or custom is a subtraction, for which the law gives a remedy.

SUBSTRATE, n. That which lies beneath.

SUBSTRATE, a. Having very slight furrows.

SUBSTRATUM, n. [L. substratus, spread under; sub and sternō.] 1. That which is laid or spread under a stratum of earth lying under another. In agriculture, the subsoil.—2. In meta., the matter or substance supposed to furnish the basis in which the perceptible qualities inhere. [See SUBSTANCE.]

SUBSTRUC'TION, n. [L. constructio.] Under building.

SUBSTRUCTURE, n. [L. sub and structure.] An under structure; a foundation.

SUBSTYLAR, a. In dialling, the substylar line is a right line on which the gnomon or style is erected at right angles with the plane.

SUBSTYLE, n. [sub and style.] In dialling, the line on which the gnomon stands. It is formed by the intersection of the face of the dial with the plane which passes through the gnomon.

SUBSULPHATE, n. A sulphate with an excess of the base.

SUBSULTIVE, a. [from L. subsultus; sub and saltus.] Bounding; leaping; moving by sudden leaps or starts, or by twitches.

SUBSULTORILY, adv. In a bounding manner; by leaps, starts, or twitches.

SUBSULT'US, n. [L.] In med., a starting, twitching, or convulsive motion; as, subsultus tendinum. Convulsive motions or twitchings of the tendons, which are observed in the extreme stages of debility produced by low nervous and typhus fevers.

SUBSŪME, † v. t. [L. sub and sumo.]

To assume as a position by consequence. SUBSUMPTION OF LIBEL. In Scots law, a narrative of the alleged criminal act, which, to be good, must narrate facts amounting to the crime charged. It must also specify the manner, place, and time of the crime libelled, the person injured, &c.

SUBTACK, n. In Scots law, an under lease; a lease of a farm, a tenement, &c., granted by the principal tenant or leaseholder.

SUBTANGENT, n. In the conic sections, the segment of a produced diameter or produced axis, intercepted between an ordinate and a tangent, both drawn from the same point in the curve. Thus, let C A be part of a parabola, A G its axis, C T a tangent to the curve at the point C, meeting the axis produced in T, and C D an ordinate to the axis, drawn from the point C; then the segment D T of the produced axis intercepted between C T and C D is called the subtangent.

Also, if C G be drawn from the point C, perpendicular to the tangent C T, and meeting the axis in G, then C G is called the normal; and D G the part of the axis intercepted between the ordinate C D and the normal, is called the subnormal.

SUBTEND, v. t. [L. sub and tendo, to stretch.] To extend under; to extend or be opposite to; as, the line of a triangle which subtends the right angle; to subtend the chord of an arch. The apparent diameter of the sun subtends an angle at the observer's eye of rather more than 30 minutes.

SUBTEND'ED, pp. Extended under; being opposite to; as the greater angle of every triangle is subtended by the greater side.

SUBTEND'ING, ppr. Extending under; being opposite to.

SUBTENSE, n. (subtens'). [L. sub and tensus.] The chord of an arch or arc. A line or angle opposite to a line or angle spoken of. [Not much used.]

SUBTEPID, a. [L. sub and tepidus, warm.] Very moderately warm.

SUBTER, a Latin preposition, signifies under.

SUBTERFLUENT, a. [L. subterflu-

SUBTERFLUOUS, ens, subterfluus.]

Running under or beneath.

SUBTERFUGE, n. [Fr. from L. subter and fugio, to flee.] Literally, that to which a person resorts for escape or concealment; hence, a shift; an evasion; an artifice employed to escape censure or the force of an argument, or to justify opinions or conduct.

Affect not little shifts and subterfuges, to avoid the force of an argument. Walt.

SUBTERRANE, n. [infra.] A cave or room under ground.

SUBTERRANEAN, a. [L. subter, SUBTERRANEUS,] under, and terra, earth; Fr. souterrain; It. sotterraneo.] Being or lying under the surface of the earth; situated within the earth or under ground; as, subterranean springs; a subterranean passage. Subterranean forests, accumulations of vegetable matter, involving roots, stems, branches, leaves, and fruits of trees, lying below the surface of the earth, and generally covered with peat to a greater or less depth. These differ from submarine forests, in not being limited to any particular level, nor to a close proximity with the sea. Such forests are found in various parts of Scotland, England, Ireland, and the Continent. [Subterranean and Subterrany are not in use.]

SUBTERRANITY, † n. A place under ground.

SUBTERRANY, † n. What lies under ground.

SUBTERRENE, a. Subterranean.

SUBVARI'ETY, n. [sub and variety.] A subordinate variety, or division of a variety.

SUBVENTA'NEOUS, } a. [L. subven-taneus; sub and ventus.] Adde; windy.

SUBVEN'TION, n. [L. subvento.] 1. The act of coming under.—2. The act of coming to relief; support; aid. [Little used.]

SUBVERSE, } v. t. (subvers'.) To subvert.

SUBVER'SION, n. [Fr. from L. subversio. See SUBVERT.] Entire overthrow; an overthrow of the foundation; utter ruin; as, the subversion of a government or state; the subversion of despotic power; the subversion of the constitution or laws; the subversion of an empire.

SUBVER'SIVE, a. Tending to subvert; having a tendency to overthrow and ruin. Every immorality is subversive of private happiness. Public corruption of morals is subversive of public happiness.

SUBVERT', v. t. [L. subverto; sub and verito, to turn; Fr. and Sp. subvertir.] 1. To overthrow from the foundation; to overturn; to ruin utterly. The northern nations of Europe subverted the Roman empire. He is the worst enemy of man, who endeavours to subvert the Christian religion. The elevation of corrupt men to office will slowly, but surely, subvert a republican government.

This would subvert the principles of all knowledge. Locke.

2. To corrupt; to confound; to pervert the mind, and turn it from the truth; 2 Tim. ii.

SUBVERT'ANT, } In her., reversed;
SUBVERT'ED, } turned upside down, or contrary to the natural position or usual way of bearing.

SUBVERT'ED, pp. Overthrown; overturned; entirely destroyed.

SUBVERT'ER, n. One who subverts; an overthrower.

SUBVERT'IBLE, a. That may be subverted.

SUBVERT'ING, ppr. Overthrowing; entirely destroying.

SUBWOR'KER, n. [sub and worker.] A subordinate worker or helper.

SUCCEDA'NEOUS, a. [L. succedaneus; sub and cedo.] Supplying the place of something else; being or employed as a substitute.

SUCCEDA'NEUM, n. [supra.] That which is used for something else; a substitute, a medicine or remedy substituted for another.

SUCCEED, v. t. [Fr. succeder; L. succedo; sub and cedo, to give way, to pass.] 1. To follow in order; to take the place which another has left; as, the king's eldest son succeeds his father on the throne. Queen Victoria succeeded her uncle, his late majesty William IV.; Nicholas, Emperor of Russia, succeeded his brother Alexander; General Taylor succeeded Mr. Polk in the presidency of the United States.—2. To follow; to come after; to be subsequent or consequent.

Those destructive effects succeeded the curse. Brown.

3. To prosper; to make successful. Succeed my wish, and second my design. Dryden.

SUCCEED, v. i. To follow in order. Not another comfort like to this, Succeeds in unknown fate. Shak.

2. To come in the place of one that has died or quitted the place, or of that which has preceded. Day succeeds to night, and night to day. Enjoy till I return

Short pleasures; for long woes are to succeed. Milton.

Revenge succeeds to love, and rage to grief. Dryden.

3. To obtain the object desired; to accomplish what is attempted or intended; to have a prosperous termination. The enemy attempted to take the fort by storm, but did not succeed. The assault was violent, but the attempt did not succeed.

It is almost impossible for poets to succeed without ambition. Dryden.

4. To terminate with advantage; to have a good effect.

Spenser endeavoured imitation in the Shepherd's Kalender; but neither will it succeed in English. Dryden.

5. To go under cover. Or will you to the cooler cave succeed? [Not much used.] Dryden.

SUCCEED'ANT, ppr. In her., succeeding or following one another.

SUCCEDED, pp. Followed in order; prospered; attended with success.

SUCCEEDER, n. One that follows or comes in the place of another; a successor. [But the latter word is generally used.]

SUCCEEDING, ppr. Following in order; subsequent; coming after; as, in all succeeding ages. He attended to the business in every succeeding stage of its progress.—2. Taking the place of another who has quitted the place, or is dead; as, a son succeeding his father; an officer succeeding his predecessor.—3. Giving success; prospering.

SUCCEEDING, n. The act or state of prospering or having success. There is a good prospect of his succeeding.

SUCCENT'OR, n. A person who sings the bass in a concert.

SUCCESS, n. [Fr. succès; L. successus, from succedo.] 1. The favourable or prosperous termination of anything attempted; a termination which answers the purpose intended; properly in a good sense, but often in a bad sense.

Or teach with more success her son, The vices of the time to shun. Waller. Every reasonable man cannot but wish me success in this attempt. Tillotson.

Be not discouraged in a laudable undertaking at the ill success of the first attempt. Anon.

Military successes, above all others, elevate the minds of a people. Atterbury.

2. † Succession.

Note.—Success, without an epithet, generally means a prosperous issue.

SUCCESSFUL, a. Terminating in accomplishing what is wished or intended; having the desired effect; hence, in a good sense, prosperous; fortunate; happy; as, a successful application of medicine; a successful experiment in chemistry or in agriculture; a successful enterprise.—2. In a bad sense; as, a successful attempt to subvert the constitution.

SUCCESSFULLY, adv. With a favourable termination of what is attempted; prosperously; favourably.

A reformation successfully carried on.

Swift.

SUCCESSFULNESS, n. Prosperous conclusion; favourable event; success.

SUCCESSION, n. [Fr. from L. successio.] 1. A following of things in order; consecution; series of things following one another, either in time or place. Thus we speak of a succession of events in chronology, a succession of kings or bishops, and a succession of words or sentences.—2. The act of succeeding or coming in the place of another; as, this happened after the succession of that prince to the throne. So we speak of the succession of heirs to the estates of their ancestors, or collateral succession.—3. Lineage; an order or series of descendants.

A long succession must ensue. Milton.

4. The power or right of coming to the inheritance of ancestors. He holds the property by the title of succession. What people is so void of common sense, To vote succession from a native prince? Dryden.

5. In music, the successive notes in melody, in distinction from the successive chords of harmony, called progression.—Law of succession, in political economy, the law or rule according to which the succession to the property of deceased individuals is regulated. In general, this law obtains only in cases where a deceased party has died intestate, or in cases where the power of bequeathing property by will is limited by the legislature. In most countries, a preference has been given, in regulating the succession to property vacant by intestacy, and in defining the power to leave property by will, in favour of male heirs; and in some countries, especially in modern times, a marked predilection has been shown in favour of the eldest son, or, as it is usually termed, in favour of the right of primogeniture. In England and also in Scotland, when a person possessed of landed property dies intestate, his estate descends entire to his eldest son. The laws of England and of Scotland differ in some respects in regard to succession; but in both countries, the succession opens first to descendants, the preference being given to males. According to the law of England, when there is a failure of lineal descendants, the nearest lineal ancestor succeeds, a father inheriting before a brother, a grandfather before an uncle, &c. In default of father, brothers, or sisters of the whole blood and their issue, the succession opens to the eldest brother or sister of the half blood by a different mother. On failure of male ancestors on the paternal side, and their descendants, female paternal ancestors and their descendants succeed. On failure of these, the mother, her ancestors—first male, then female,—and their respective descendants. In the law of Scotland, in default of descendants, the succession opens to collaterals, as brothers and sisters; but brothers and sisters uterine (that is children by the same mother, but not, by the same father) do not succeed at all, there being no succession through the mother. Failing descendants and collaterals, the succession opens to ascendants; as, father, grandfather, &c., the mother being excluded. In regard to movable property, the order of succession is the same as in real or heritable property; but here no right of primogeniture, nor any preference of males to females is recognised, the property being divided in equal portions among the children or kinsmen of the deceased, without respect to sex or seniority.—Apostolical succession, in theol., the uninterrupted succession of priests in the church by regular ordination, from the first apostles down to the present day.—Doctrine of the apostolical succession, the belief that the clergy thus regularly ordained, have a commission from God to preach the gospel, administer the sacraments, and guide the church; and that through their ministrations only, we can derive the grace which is communicated by the word and sacraments. Hence, according to this doctrine, those bodies of Christians whose pastors have not this regular succession, have, properly speaking, neither church nor sacraments. This doctrine is maintained by the church of Rome, and by the high-church party in the church of England; but it is repudiated by all other protestant churches.—Succession of the signs, in astron., is the order in which the sun enters the signs of the Zodiac; as, Aries, Taurus, Gemini, &c.—Succession of crops, in agriculture, is more generally called rotation.

SUCCESSIONAL, a. Relating to succession; implying succession.

SUCCESSIONALLY, adv. By way of succession.

SUCCESSIONIST, n. One who adheres to succession.

SUCCESSIVE, a. [Fr. successif; It. successivo.] 1. Following in order or uninterrupted course, as a series of persons or things, and either in time or place; as, the successive revolutions of years or ages; the successive kings of Egypt. The author holds this strain of declamation through seven successive pages or chapters.

Send the successive ills through ages down. Prior.

2. Inherited by succession; as, a successive title; a successive empire. [Little used.]

SUCCESSIVELY, adv. In a series or order, one following another. He left three sons, who all reigned successively.

The whiteness at length changed successively into blue, indigo and violet. Newton.

SUCCESSIVENESS, n. The state of being successive.

SUCCESSLESS, a. Having no success; unprosperous; unfortunate; failing to accomplish what was intended.

Successless all her soft caresses prove. Pope.

Best temper'd steel successless prov'd in field. Phillips.

SUCCESS'LESSNESS, n. Unprosperous conclusion.

SUCCESS'OR, n. [L.] One that succeeds or follows; one that takes the place which another has left, and sustains the like part or character; correlative to predecessor; as, the successor of a deceased king; the successor of a president or governor; a man's son and successor.

A gift to a corporation, either of lands or of chattels, without naming their successors, vests an absolute property in them so long as the corporation subsists. Blackstone.

SUCCID'UOUS, a. [L. succidus; sub and cado.] Ready to fall; falling. [Little used.]

SUCCIP'EROUS, a. [L. succus, juice, and fero, to bear.] Producing or conveying sap.

SUCCIN'AMIDE, n. A substance formed by the action of ammonia upon succinate of oxide of ethule. It is a crystalline solid, soluble in water and alcohol.

SUCCINATE, n. [from L. succinum, amber.] A salt formed by the succinic acid and a base; as, the succinate of ammonia.

SUCCINATED, a. Combined with succinic acid.

SUCCINCT', a. [L. succinctus; sub and cingo, to surround.] 1. Tucked up; girded up; drawn up to permit the legs to be free.

His habit fit for speed succinct. [Lit. us.] Milton.

2. Compressed into a narrow compass; short; brief; concise; as, a succinct account of the proceedings of the council.

Let all your precepts be succinct and clear. Roscommon.

SUCCINCTLY, adv. Briefly; concisely. The facts were succinctly stated.

SUCCINCTNESS, n. Brevity; conciseness; as, the succinctness of a narration.

SUCCIN'IC, a. Pertaining to amber.—Succinic acid, an acid obtained from amber by distilling it. It is also one of the products of the oxidation of stearic and margaric acids. When pure it is a white crystalline substance. It was formerly employed in medicine under the name of salt of amber, but it is now chiefly used in combination with ammonia, forming succinate of ammonia, in chemical investigations, especially in precipitating iron from solution.

SUCCINITE, n. [L. succinum, amber.] A mineral of an amber colour, considered as a variety of garnet. It frequently occurs in globular or granular masses, about the size of a pea.

SUCCINOUS, a. Pertaining to amber. SUCCINUM, n. [L.] The Latin name for amber. It was called $\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\theta\rho\upsilon\sigma$, (electron) by the Greeks, whence our word electricity. [See AMBER.]

SUCC'ORY, or CHIE'ORY, n. Wild endive, a plant of the genus Cichorium, the C. intybus, found growing wild on calcareous soils in England, and in most countries of Europe. In its natural state the stem rises from 1 to 3 feet high, but when cultivated it rises to the height of 5 or 6 feet. The root is white, fleshy, and yields a milky juice. It is cultivated in this country to some extent as an herbage plant; but in Germany, and some other parts of the Continent, it is extensively cultivated for the sake of its root, which, when dried and ground, is used as a substitute for coffee, but as it wants the essential oil and rich aromatic flavour of coffee, it has nothing in common with that article, except its colour, and little to recommend it except its cheapness. It has of late been used in this country as a substitute for, but more particularly to adulterate coffee. [See CICHORIUM, ENDIVE.]

Succory (Cichorium intybus).

SUC'COTASH, n. In America, green maize and beans boiled together. The dish, as well as the name, is borrowed from the native Indians.

SUC'COUR, v. t. [Fr. secourir; L. succurro; sub and curro, to run.] Literally, to run to, or run to support; hence, to help or relieve when in difficulty, want or distress; to assist and deliver from suffering; as, to succour a besieged city; to succour prisoners.

He is able to succour them that are tempted; Heb. ii.

SUC'COUR, n. Aid; help; assistance; particularly, assistance that relieves and delivers from difficulty, want or distress.

My father

Flying for succour to his servant Banister.

Shak.

2. The person or thing that brings relief. The city when pressed received succours from an unexpected quarter. The mighty succour which made glad the foe.

Dryden.

SUC'COUR'D, pp. Assisted; relieved. SUC'COURER, n. He that affords relief; a helper; a deliverer.

SUC'COURING, ppr. Assisting; relieving.

SUC'COURLESS, a. Destitute of help or relief.

SUC'CUBA, } n. [L. sub and cubo.] A SUC'CUBUS, } [pretended kind of demon.

SUC'CULA, n. In mech., a bare axis or cylinder, with staves on it to move round.

SUC'CULENCE, } n. [See SUCCULENT.] SUC'CULENCY, } Juiciness; as, the succulence of a peach.

SUC'CULENT, a. [Fr.; L. succulentus, from succus, juice.] Full of juice; juicy. Succulent plants are such as have a juicy and soft stem, as distinguished from such as are ligneous, hard, and dry. Thus the grasses are succulent herbs; as are peas, beans, and the like.

SUCCULENTÆ, n. A nat. order of plants in the Linnæan system. It includes those families which are remarkable for the succulent character of their leaves, as Saxifragaceæ, Crasulaceæ, Ficoidæ, &c.

SUC'CULENTLY, adv. Juicily.

SUCCUMB'ING, ppr. Yielding; submitting; sinking.

SUC'CUS, n. [L.] In med., a term frequently employed to denote the extracted juice of different plants; as, succus liquoritiæ, Spanish liquorice, &c.

SUCCUSSA'TION, n. [L. succusso, to shake.] 1. A trot or trotting.—2. A shaking; or concussion.

SUCCUS'SION, n. [L. succussio, from succusso, to shake; sub and quasso.] 1. The act of shaking; a violent shock.—2. In med., an ague; a shaking, particularly of the nervous parts by medicinal stimulants.—3. A mode of exploring the chest, which consists in shaking the patient's body, and listening to the sounds thereby produced.

SUCH, a. [It is possible that this word may be a contraction of Sax. swelc, swyle, G. solch, D. zolk. More probably it is the Russ. sitze, sitzew, the old Scotch sich. Qu. Lat. sic.] 1. Of that kind; of the like kind. We never saw such a day; we have never had such a time as the present. It has as before the thing to which it relates. Give your children such precepts as tend to make them wiser and better.

It is to be noted that the definitive adjective a, never precedes such, but is placed between it and the noun to which it refers; as, such a man; such an honour.—2. The same that. This was the state of the kingdom at such time as the enemy landed.—3. The same as what has been mentioned. That thou art happy, owe to God; That thou continu'st such, owe to thyself.

Milton.

4. Referring to what has been specified. I have commanded my servant to be at such a place.—5. Such and such, is used in reference to person, place, or thing of a certain kind.

The sovereign authority may enact a law, commanding such and such an action.

South.

Note.—Such is usually considered by grammarians as an adjective pronoun.

SUCK, v. t. [Sax. sucan, succan; G. saugen; Ir. sagham; W. sugaw; L. sugo; Fr. sucer; Sp. and Port. sacar, to draw out.] 1. To draw with the mouth; to draw out, as a liquid from a cask, or milk from the breast; to draw into the mouth. To suck is to exhaust the air of the mouth or of a tube; the fluid then rushes into the mouth or tube by means of the pressure of the surrounding air.—2. To draw milk from with the mouth; as, the young of an animal sucks the mother or dam, or the breast.—3. To draw into the mouth; to imbibe; as, to suck in air; to suck the juice of plants.—4. To draw or drain. Old ocean suck'd through the porous globe.

Thomson.

5. To draw in, as a whirlpool; to absorb.—6. To inhale.—To suck in, to draw into the mouth; to imbibe; to absorb.—To suck out, to draw out with the mouth; to empty by suction.—To suck up, to draw into the mouth.

SUCK, v. i. To draw by exhausting the air, as with the mouth, or with a tube.—2. To draw the breast; as, a child, or the young of an animal, is first nourished by sucking.—3. To draw in; to imbibe.

SUCK, n. The act of drawing with the mouth.—2. Milk drawn from the breast by the mouth.

SUCK'ED, pp. Drawn with the mouth, or with an instrument that exhausts the air; imbibed; absorbed.

SUCKEN, n. [Sax. soene, privilege, immunity.] In Scots law, the jurisdiction attached to a mill, or the whole lands astricted to a mill, the tenants of which are bound to bring their grain to the mill to be ground. The tenants subjected to this striction are called suckeners. [See THIRLAGR.]

SUCK'ER, n. He or that which draws with the mouth.—2. A name vulgarly given to the piston of the common sucking pump.—3. A pipe through which anything is drawn.—4. In bot., a shoot or branch which proceeds from the neck of the root of a plant beneath the surface, and becomes erect as soon as it emerges from the earth, immediately producing leaves and branches, and subsequently roots from its base, as in many roses. It is so called perhaps from its drawing its nourishment from the root or stem.—5. A fish, called also remora; also, a name of the Cyclopterus or lump-fish.—6. The name of a common river fish in New England; a species of Catastomus.—7. A piece of leather laid wet upon a stone, which adheres to the stone, and owing to the pressure of the atmosphere, requires considerable force to pull it off. The feet of various insects adhere to surfaces on the same principle.

SUCK'ET, n. A sweetmeat for the mouth.

SUCK'ING, ppr. Drawing with the mouth or with an instrument; imbibing; absorbing.

SUCK'ING-BOTTLE, n. A bottle to be filled with milk for infants to suck instead of the pap.

SUCK'ING-FISH, n. A fish of the genus Echineis, the E. remora, belonging to the order Malacopterygii sub-brachiati, Cuvier. It inhabits the Mediterranean sea, the Indian ocean, &c. [See REMORA.]

SUCK'ING-PUMP, or SUC'TION-PUMP, n. The common pump, in which the two valves open upwards. It is so named from an erroneous idea that the piston draws the water up after it by a sort of attraction. [See PUMP SUCTION.] SUCK'LE, † n. A teat.

SUCK'LE, v. t. To give suck to; to nurse at the breast. Romulus and Remus are fabled to have been sucked by a wolf.

SUCK'LED, pp. Nursed at the breast. SUCK'LING, ppr. Nursing at the breast.

SUCK'LING, n. A young child or animal nursed at the breast; Ps. viii.—2. A sort of white clover.

SUC'TION, n. [Fr.] The act of sucking or drawing into the mouth fluids and other substances, by removing more or less from the surface of the part on which the operation is performed the pressure of the air, whilst on every other portion the ordinary pressure remains. Suction, strictly speaking, consists in producing a partial vacuum, into which, when made by the mouth or otherwise, the fluid is forced by the external pressure of the atmosphere. The child obtains milk from the breast, by making a vacuum in its mouth, which exhausts the air from the pores of the nipple, and the milk is consequently ejected from the breast by the unresisted elasticity of the air within.—2. The act of drawing, as fluids, into a pipe or other thing, which is effected on the same principle as that stated above.

SUCTORIAL, } a. Adapted for suck-SUCTORIOUS, } ing; that live by sucking; as, the humming birds are suctorial.

SUCTORIANS, n. A tribe of cartilaginous fishes, comprehending those which have a circular mouth adapted for suction; as the lamprey.

SU'DARY,† n. [L. sudarium, from sudo, to sweat.] A napkin or handkerchief.

SUDA'TION, n. [L. sudatio.] A sweating.

SU'DATORY, n. [L. sudatorium, from sudo, to sweat.] A hot house; a sweating bath.

SU'DATORY, a. Sweating.

SUD'DEN, a. [Sax. soden; Fr. soudain; L. subitaneus.] 1. Happening without previous notice; coming unexpectedly, or without the common preparatives.

And sudden fear troubleth thee; Job xxii.

For when they shall say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them; 1 Thess. v.

2.† Hasty; violent; rash; precipitate; passionate.

SUD'DEN,† n. An unexpected occurrence; surprise.—On a sudden, sooner than was expected; without the usual preparatives.

How art thou lost, how on a sudden lost! Milton.

[Of a sudden, is not usual, and is less elegant.]

SUD'DENLY, adv. In an unexpected manner; unexpectedly; hastily; without preparation.

Therefore his calamity shall come suddenly; Prov. vi.

2. Without premeditation.

SUD'DENNESS, n. State of being sudden; a coming or happening without previous notice. The suddenness of the event precluded preparation.

SUD'DER, n. In India, the chief seat or head-quarters of government, as distinguished from the Mofussil or interior of the country.

SU'DOR, n. [L.] Sweat or perspiration.

SU'DOR ANGLICA'NUS. See SWEATING-SICKNESS.

SUDORIFIC, a. [Fr. sudorifique; L. sudor, sweat, and facio, to make.] Causing sweat; as sudorific herbs.

SUDORIFIC, n. A medicine that produces sweat, a diaphoretic. Volatile salts, essential oils, guaiacum, antimonial and mercurial preparations, opium, musk, camphore, &c., are employed as sudorifics.

SU'DOROUS, a. [L. sudor, sweat.] Consisting of sweat.

SU'DRA, } n. The lowest of the SOO'DRAH, } four great castes among the Hindoos.

SUDS, n. plur. [from Sax. seothan, to seethe, pret. Sod, pp. Sodden.] A lixivium of soap and water, or water impregnated with soap, and forming a frothy mass.

SUE, v. t. (su.) [Fr. suiure, to follow, L. sequor. See SEEK and ESSAY.] 1. To seek justice or right from one by legal process; to institute process in law against one; to prosecute in a civil action for the recovery of a real or supposed right; as, to sue one for debt; to sue one for damages in trespass; Matt. v.—2. To gain by legal process.—3. To clean the beak, as a hawk; a term of falconry.—To sue out, to petition for and take out; or to apply for and obtain; as, to sue out a writ in chancery; to sue out a pardon for a criminal.

SUE, v. i. To prosecute; to make legal claim; to seek for in law; as, to sue for damages.—2. To seek by request; to apply for; to petition; to entreat.

By adverse destiny constrain'd to sue
For counsel and redress, he sues to you. Pope.

3. To make interest for; to demand.

Cesar came to Rome, to sue for the double honour of a triumph and the consulship. Middleton.

SU'IED, pp. Prosecuted; sought in law.

SU'ENT, a. Even; smooth; plain; regular. [Local.]

SU'ENTLY, adv. Evenly; smoothly; regularly.

SU'ET, n. [W. swyv and swyved, a surface, coating, suet, yeast, &c.] The fat situated about the loins and kidneys of animals. There are several kinds of it, according to the species of animal from which it is procured, as that of the hart, the goat, the ox, and the sheep. That of the ox and sheep is chiefly used, and when melted out of its containing membranes, it forms tallow. Mutton suet is used as an ingredient in cerates, plasters, and ointments, and beef suet, and also mutton suet, are used in cookery.

SU'ETY, a. Consisting of suet, or resembling it; as, a suet substance.

SUF'FER, v. t. [L. suffero; sub, under, and fero, to bear; as we say, to undergo; Fr. souffrir. See BEAR.] 1. To feel or bear what is painful, disagreeable or distressing, either to the body or mind; to undergo. We suffer pain of body; we suffer grief of mind. The criminal suffers punishment; the sinner suffers the pangs of conscience in this life, and is condemned to suffer the wrath of an offended God. We often suffer wrong; we suffer abuse; we suffer injustice.—2. To endure; to support; to sustain; not to sink under.

Our spirit and strength entire,
Strongly to suffer and support our pains. Milton.

3. To allow; to permit; not to forbid or hinder. Will you suffer yourself to be insulted?

I suffer them to enter and possess. Milton.

Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him; Lev. xix.

4. To undergo; to be affected by. Substances suffer an entire change by the action of fire, or by entering into new combinations.—5. To sustain; to be affected by; as, to suffer loss or damage.

SUF'FER, v. i. To feel or undergo pain of body or mind; to bear what is inconvenient. We suffer with pain, sickness, or sorrow. We suffer with anxiety. We suffer by evils past, and by anticipating others to come. We suffer from fear and from disappointed hopes.—2. To undergo, as punishment.

The father was first condemned to suffer on a day appointed, and the son afterward, the day following. Clarendon.

3. To be injured; to sustain loss or damage. A building suffers for want of reasonable repairs. It is just that we should suffer for neglect of duty.

Public business suffers by private infirmities. Temple.

SUF'FERABLE, a. That may be tolerated or permitted; allowable.—2. That may be endured or borne.

SUF'FERABLENESS, n. Tolerableness.

SUF'FERABLY, adv. Tolerably; so as to be endured.

SUF'FERENCE, n. The bearing of pain; endurance; pain endured; misery. He must not only die,

But thy unkindness shall the death draw out

To ling'ring sufferance. Shak.

2. Patience; moderation; a bearing with patience.

But hasty head temp'ring with sufferance wise. Spenser.

3. Toleration; permission; allowance; negative consent by not forbidding or hindering.

In process of time, sometimes by sufferance, sometimes by special leave and favour, they erected to themselves oratories.

Hooker.

In their beginning, they are weak and wan,
But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end. Spenser.

An estate at sufferance, in law, is where a person comes into possession of land by lawful title, but keeps it after the title ceases, without positive leave of the owner. Such person is called a tenant at sufferance.

SUF'FERED, pp. Borne; undergone; permitted; allowed.

SUF'FERER, n. One who endures or undergoes pain, either of body or mind; one who sustains inconvenience or loss; as, sufferers by poverty or sickness. Men are sufferers by fire or losses at sea; they are sufferers by the ravages of an enemy; still more are they sufferers by their own vices and follies.—2. One that permits or allows.

SUF'FERING, ppr. Bearing; undergoing pain, inconvenience, or damage; permitting; allowing.

SUF'FERING, n. The bearing of pain, inconvenience, or loss; pain endured; distress, loss, or injury incurred; as, sufferings by pain or sorrow; sufferings by want or by wrongs.

SUF'FERINGLY, adv. With suffering or pain.

SUF'FERINGS MEETING, n. Called also Meeting for Sufferings; a standing committee of the Friends' Yearly Meeting, resembling the Commission of the General Assembly of the Established and Free Churches of Scotland. It is so called, because originally appointed to have charge of the sufferings sustained by Friends, in the support of their testimony against the exactions of the State Church; by which several thousand pounds are still annually taken from the society, for tithes, church rates, &c.

SUFFICE, v. i. (suffi'ze.) [Fr. suffire; L. sufficio; sub and facio.] To be enough or sufficient; to be equal to the end proposed.

To recount Almighty works
What words or tongue of seraph can suffice? Milton.

SUFFICE, v. t. (suffi'ze.) To satisfy; to content; to be equal to the wants or demands of.

Let it suffice thee; speak no more to me of this matter; Deut. iii.

Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us; John xiv.; Ruth ii.

2. To afford; to supply.

The pow'r appeas'd, with wind suffic'd the sail.†
Dryden.

SUFFICED, pp. (suffi'zed.) Satisfied; adequately supplied.

SUFFYCIENCE, a. Sufficiency.

SUFFYCIENCY, n. The state of being adequate to the end proposed.

His sufficiency is such, that he bestows and possesses, his plenty being unexhausted.
Boyle.

2. Qualification for any purpose.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency as not willingly to admit the counsel of others.
K. Charles.

3. Competence; adequate substance or means.

An elegant sufficiency, content. Thomson.

4. Supply equal to wants; ample stock or fund.—5. Ability; adequate power.

Our sufficiency is from God; 2 Cor. iii.

6. Conceit; self-confidence. [See SELF-SUFFICIENCY.]

SUFFYCIENT, a. [L. sufficiens.] 1. Enough; equal to the end proposed; adequate to wants; competent; as, provision sufficient for the family; water sufficient for the voyage; an army sufficient to defend the country.

My grace is sufficient for thee; 2 Cor. xii.

2. Qualified; competent; possessing adequate talents or accomplishments; as, a man sufficient for an office.—3. Fit; able; of competent power or ability.

Who is sufficient for these things? 2 Cor. ii.

Sufficient reason, a term, or rather a principle, introduced by Leibnitz into his system of philosophy. According to this philosopher, all our reasonings are based upon two great principles; the one, that of consistency, by means of which we judge that to be false which involves a contradiction, and that to be true which is the reverse of the false; the other, that of sufficient reason, which admits nothing to exist without a sufficient reason of its existence, though that reason may not be known to us. Of contingent truths or facts, a sufficient reason must be found which may be traced up through a series of preceding contingencies, till they ultimately terminate in a necessary substance, which is a sufficient reason of the whole series of changes, and with which the whole series is connected. In this way Leibnitz demonstrated the being of God. The same principle has been employed in mathematics, to prove the equality of symmetrical solids or magnitudes which cannot be made to coincide or to fill the same space. Playfair, in his notes to his edition of Euclid's Elements, has expressed this principle as a general axiom, thus: "Things of which the magnitude is determined by conditions that are exactly the same, are equal to one another; or two magnitudes A and B are equal, when there is no reason that A should exceed B, rather than that B should exceed A." [See SYMMETRICAL.] By the aid of the principle of sufficient reason, we can compare geometrical quantities, whether they be of one, of two, or of three dimensions, nor is there any danger of being misled by this principle so long as it is confined to the objects of mathematical investigation; but in physical questions the same principle cannot be applied with equal safety, because in such cases we have seldom a complete definition of the thing which we reason about, or one which includes all its properties.

Still less admissible is this principle in questions of a metaphysical character. SUFFYCIENTLY, adv. To sufficient degree; enough; to a degree that answers the purpose, or gives content; as, we are sufficiently supplied with food and clothing; a man sufficiently qualified for the discharge of his official duties.

SUFFICING, ppr. (suffi'zing.) Supplying what is needed; satisfying.

SUFFYCIINGNESS, n. The quality of being sufficient, or of affording 'satisfaction.

SUFFY'SANCE, † n. [Fr.] Sufficiency; plenty.

SUFFYX, n. [L. suffixus; suffigo; sub and figo, to fix.] A letter or syllable added or annexed to the end of a word.

—2. A term lately introduced into mathematical language to denote the indices which are written under letters; as, x_0, x_1, x_2, x_3 , &c.

SUFFYX', v. t. To add or annex a letter or syllable to a word.

SUFFYX'ED, pp. Added to the end of a word.

SUFFYX'ING, ppr. Adding to the end of a word.

SUFFLAMINATE, v. t. [L. sufflamen, a stop.] 1. To retard the motion of a carriage by preventing one or more of its wheels from revolving either by a chain or otherwise.—2. † To stop; to impede.

SUFFLATE, v. t. [L. sufflo; sub and flo, to blow.] To blow up; to inflate.

[Little used.]

SUFFLATION, n. [L. sufflatio.] The act of blowing up or inflating.

SUFFOCATE, v. t. [Fr. suffoquer; L. suffoco; sub and focus, or its root.]

1. To choke or kill by stopping respiration. Respiration may be stopped by the interception of air, as in hanging and strangling, or by the introduction of smoke, dust, or mephitic air into the lungs. Men may be suffocated by the halter; or men may be suffocated in smoke or in carbonic acid gas, as in mines and wells.

And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate.
Shak.

2. To stifle; to destroy; to extinguish; as, to suffocate fire or live coals.

A swelling discontent is apt to suffocate and strangle without passage.
Collier.

SUFFOCATE, a. Suffocated.

SUFFOCATED, pp. Choked; stifled.

SUFFOCATING, ppr. Choking; stifling.

SUFFOCATINGLY, adv. So as to suffocate; as, suffocatingly hot.

SUFFOCATION, n. The act of choking or stifling; a stopping of respiration, either by intercepting the passage of air to and from the lungs, or by inhaling smoke, dust, or air that is not respirable.—2. The act of stifling, destroying, or extinguishing.

SUFFOCATIVE, a. Tending or able to choke or stifle; as, suffocative catarrhs.

SUFFOLK CRAG, n. In geol., a marine deposit of the older pliocene period. It consists of beds of sand and gravel, abounding in shells and corals. This deposit is so named from its being found in Suffolk, crag being a local name for gravel.

SUFFOSSION, n. [L. suffossio; sub and fodio, to dig.] A digging under; an undermining.

SUFFRAGAN, a. [Fr. suffragant; It. suffraganeo; L. suffragans, assisting; suffragor, to vote for, to favour.] Assisting; as, a suffragan bishop; but in ecclesiastical usage, every bishop is said to be suffragan relatively to the archbishop of his province.

SUFFRAGAN, n. A titular bishop ordained to assist a bishop in his spiritual functions. By 26 Henry VIII. suffragans are to be denominated from some principal place in the diocese of the prelate whom they are to assist.—2. A term of relation applied to every bishop, with respect to the archbishop who is his superior.

SUFFRAGANSHIP, n. The station of suffragan.

SUFFRAGANT, † n. An assistant; a favourer; one who concurs with.

SUFFRAGANT, a. Assisting.

SUFFRAGATE, † v. t. [L. suffragator.] To vote with.

SUFFRAGATOR, n. [L.] One who assists or favours by his vote.

SUFFRAGE, n. [L. suffragium; Fr. suffrage; Sax. frægnan, to ask, G. fragen.] 1. A vote; a voice given in deciding a controverted question, or in the choice of a man for an office or trust. Nothing can be more grateful to a good man than to be elevated to office by the unbiased suffrages of a free enlightened people.

Lactantius and St. Austin confirm by their suffrages the observation made by heathen writers. Atterbury.

2. United voice of persons in public prayer.—3. † Aid; assistance; a Latinism.

SUFFRAGINOUS, a. [L. suffrago, the pastern or hough.] Pertaining to the knee-joint of a beast.

SUFFRUTESCENT, a. Moderately frutescent.

SUFFRUTICOSE, } a. [L. sub and SUFFRUTICOSUS, } fruticosus; frut- tex, a shrub.] In bot., under-shrubby, or part shrubby; permanent or woody at the base, but the yearly branches decaying; as sage, thyme, hyssop, &c.

SUFFUMIGATE, v. t. [L. suffumigo.] To apply fumes or smoke to the parts of the body, as in medicine.

SUFFUMIGATING, ppr. Applying fumes to the parts of the body.

SUFFUMIGATION, n. Fumigation; the operation of smoking any thing, or rather of applying fumes to the parts of the body.—2. A term applied to all medicines that are received in the form of fumes.

SUFFUMIGE, n. A medical fume.

SUFFUSE, v. t. (suffu'ze.) [L. suffusus, suffundo; sub and fundo, to pour.] To overspread, as with a fluid or tincture; as, eyes suffused with tears; cheeks suffused with blushes.

When purple light shall next suffuse the skies.
Pope.

SUFFUSED, pp. Overspread, as with a fluid or with colour.

SUFFUSING, ppr. Overspreading, as with a fluid or tincture.

SUFFUSION, n. [Fr. from L. suffusio.] 1. The act or operation of overspreading, as with a fluid or with a colour.—2. The state of being suffused or spread over.

To those that have the jaundice or like suffusion of eyes, objects appear of that colour. Ray.

3. That which is suffused or spread over.—4. In med., a cataract. Also an extravasation of some humour, as the blood. Thus we say, a suffusion of blood in the eye, when it is what is vulgarly called bloodshot.

SU'FL, } n. A kind of Mussulman re-
SO'FL, } cluse, of contemplative habits.
SUG, n. [L. sugo, to suck.] A small kind of worm.

SUGAR, n. (shug'ar.) [Fr. sucre; G. zucker; D. suiker; W. sugyr; Ir. sacra; L. saccharum; Gr. σακχαρος; Pers. Ar. sukhar; Sans. scharhara. It is also in the Syr. and Eth.] 1. A well known sweet granular substance, prepared chiefly from the expressed juice of the sugar-cane (Saccharum officinarum), but obtained also from a great variety of other plants; as maple, beet root, birch, parsnep, &c. The process of manufacturing sugar, as carried on in our West India Islands, consists in pressing out the juice of the canes by passing them between the rollers of a rolling-mill. The juice is received in a shallow trough placed beneath the rollers. This saccharine liquor is concentrated by boiling, which expels the water; lime is added to neutralize the acid that is usually present; the grosser impurities rise to the surface, and are separated in the form of scum. When duly concentrated, the syrup is run off into shallow wooden coolers, where it concretes; it is then put into hogsheads with holes in the bottom, through which the molasses drain off into cisterns below, leaving the sugar in the state known in commerce by the name of raw or muscovado sugar. This is further purified by means of clay, or more extensively by bullocks' blood, which, forming a coagulum, envelopes the impurities. Thus clarified, it takes the names of lump, loaf, refined, &c., according to the different degrees of purification. The manufacture of sugar from beet root is carried on to a very considerable extent in several parts of the Continent, particularly in France. In the United States and in Canada, great quantities of sugar are obtained from the sap of the sugar maple (Acer saccharinum), but this kind of sugar is inferior both in grain and strength to that which is produced from the cane. Sugar is a proximate element of the vegetable kingdom, and is found in most ripe fruits, and many farinaceous roots. By fermentation, sugar is converted into alcohol, and hence forms the basis of those substances which are used for making intoxicating liquors, as molasses, grapes, apples, malt, &c. The ultimate elements of sugar are oxygen, carbon, and hydrogen. The West Indies, Brazil, Surinam, Java, Mauritius, Bengal, Siam, the Isle de Bourbon, and the Philippine Islands, are the principal sources whence the supplies of sugar required for the European and American markets are derived. Sugar in this country ranks rather among the indispensable necessities of life, than among luxuries. Of all vegetable principles, it is considered by many eminent physicians as the most wholesome and nutritious.—2. Sugar of lead, the acetate of lead; called saccharum saturni by the older chemists, from a supposed resemblance in its crystals to sugar, or from their having a slight sweetness in the mouth. Sugar of lead, though poisonous, is useful in medicine, having a strongly detensive quality; and is much employed in calico-printing.—3. Sugar of milk, lactine,—which see. SUGAR, a. (shug'ar.) Made of sugar; sugary.

SUGAR, v. t. (shug'ar.) To impregnate, season, cover, sprinkle, or mix with sugar.—2. To sweeten.
But flattery still in sugar'd words betrays.

SUGAR-BAKER, n. One who refines sugar, or makes loaf-sugar.

SUGAR-CANDY, n. [sugar and candy.] Sugar clarified and concreted or crystallized.

SUGAR-CANE, n. [sugar and cane] The cane or plant from whose juice sugar is obtained; Saccharum officinarum. It resembles the reeds common in morasses, except that its skin is soft, and its pulp a spongy substance. It usually grows to the height of 18 to 20 feet, with a diameter of two inches. It is divided by knots at the distance of 18 inches from each other. At its top it protrudes several long green leaves, and in the centre of these is its flower. When the leaves springing from the knots decay, the plant is ripe. It is then cut, stripped of its leaves, and carried to the mills, where it is crushed and its juice expressed. [See SACCHARUM.]

Sugar Cane
(Saccharum officinarum).

SUGARED, pp. Sweetened.

SUGAR-HOUSE, n. A building in which sugar is refined.

SUGAR-KETTLE, n. A boiler used for boiling down saccharine juice.

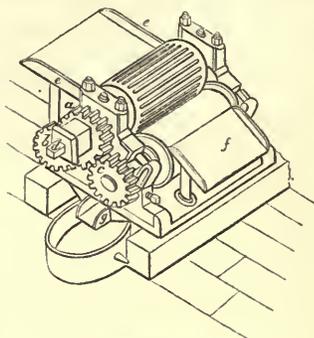

SUGARLESS, a. Free from sugar.

SUGAR-LOAF, n. A conical mass of refined sugar.

SUGAR-MAPLE, n. A tree of the genus Acer, the A. saccharinum, a native of North America, where it is also known under the name of rock maple. Its average height is from 50 to 60 feet, with a diameter of from 12 to 18 inches. To obtain the sap the trees are perforated at the proper season (February and March), and tubes inserted into the orifices. Through these tubes the sap flows, and is received in troughs. From the troughs it is conveyed to boilers, and manufactured into sugar on the spot. [See MAPLE.]

SUGAR-MILL, n. A machine for pressing out the juice of the sugar-cane. It consists of three rollers placed vertically or horizontally, and parallel to each other. These are driven by a steam-engine, by water, or by animal power. The canes are made to pass between the rollers, by which means they are crushed, and the juice expressed from them. The annexed illustration represents the form of sugar-mill generally in use in our colonies. The motive power (derived either from a steam-engine or a cattle gin), is applied to the upper roller a, through the shaft d, and is communicated with an equal velocity, by means of the spur pinions b and c, to the two lower rollers, which are brought nearly into contact with the upper. The canes are spread upon the feeding table e, regularly, and, as nearly as possible, at right angles to the axes of the rollers, by which they are drawn forward and crushed so as to separate the liquor, which flows downwards into the hol-

Horizontal Sugar Mill

low bed of the mill, and is then drawn off by a spout g, while the empty canes are detached from the rollers, and guided to the floor of the mill by the delivering board f.

SUGAR-MITE, n. [sugar and mite.] A winged insect; Lepisma. The Lepisma saccharina is an apterous or wingless insect, covered with silvery scales.

SUGAR-PLUM, n. [sugar and plum.] A species of sweetmeat in small balls.

SUGAR-REFINERY, a. A sugar-house.

SUGAR-TREE, n. The sugar-maple,—which see.

SUGARY, a. Tinctured or sweetened with sugar; sweet; tasting like sugar.—2. Fond of sugar, or of sweet things.

—3. Containing sugar.—4. Like sugar. SUGES'CENT, a. [L. sugens, sucking.] Relating to sucking.

SUG'GEST, v. t. [L. suggero, suggestus; sub and gero; Fr. suggerer.] 1. To hint; to intimate or mention in the first instance; as, to suggest a new mode of cultivation; to suggest a different scheme or measure; to suggest a new idea.—2. To offer to the mind or thoughts.

Some ideas are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflection.

Locke.

3. To seduce; to draw to ill by insinuation.

Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested. Shak.

4. To inform secretly.

We must suggest the people. Shak.

SUGGESTED, pp. Hinted; intimated.

SUGGESTER, n. One that suggests.

SUGGESTING, ppr. Hinting; intimating.

SUGGES'TION, n. [Fr.; from suggest.] A hint; a first intimation, proposal, or mention. The measure was adopted at the suggestion of an eminent philosopher.—2. Presentation of an idea to the mind; as, the suggestions of fancy or imagination; the suggestions of conscience.—3. Insinuation; secret notification or incitement.—4. In law, information without oath.—Principle of suggestion, a term employed by Dr. Brown to express what other philosophers call the association of ideas. That mental capacity by which feelings, formerly existing, are revived, in consequence of the mere existence of other feelings, Dr. Brown terms simple suggestion; and that mental capacity of feeling, resemblance, difference, proportion, or relation in general, when two or more external objects, or two or more feelings of the mind itself, are considered by us, he calls, in distinction from the former, the capacity of relative suggestion. [See ASSOCIATION.]

SUGGES'TIVE, a. Containing a hint or intimation.

SUG'GIL, † v. t. [L. suggillo.] To defame.

SUG'GILATE, † v. t. [L. suggillo.] To beat livid or black and blue.

SUGGILA'TION, † n. A livid or black and blue mark; a blow; a bruise.

SU'ICIDAL, } a. Partaking of the SUICI'DAL, } crime of suicide.

SUICI'DALLY, adv. In a suicidal manner.

SU'ICIDE, n. [Fr. from I. suicidium; se and cædo, to slay.] 1. Self-murder; the act of designedly destroying one's own life. To constitute suicide, in a legal sense, the person must be of years of discretion and of sound mind.

Suicide, by the law of England, is a crime, the legal effect of which is a forfeiture to the crown of all the personal property which the party had at the time he committed the act by which the death was caused, including debts due to him, but it is not attended with forfeiture of freehold, or corruption of blood. In order to vest these chattels in the crown, the fact of self-murder must be proved by an inquisition. In Scots law, suicide draws after it the falling of the single escheat, or forfeiture to the crown of the person's movable estate; and a proof of the self-murder may be brought in an action before the court of session, at the instance of the queen's donatory, against the executors of the deceased.

—2. One guilty of self-murder; a felo de se, or a person who, being of the years of discretion and in his senses, destroys himself.

SU'ICIDISM, n. State of self-murdering.

SU'ICISM, for Suicide, is not in use.

SU'IDÆ, n. [L. sus, a hog or a swine.] Swine, a family of pachydermatous mammalia, of high importance to man for economical purposes. The animals composing this family are characterized by having on each foot two large principal toes, shod with stout hoofs, and two lateral toes, which are much shorter, and hardly touch the earth. The incisor teeth are variable in number, but the lower incisors are all levelled forwards; the canines are projected from the mouth and recurved upwards. The muzzle is terminated by a truncated snout, fitted for turning up the ground. The family includes the domestic hog, of which there is an endless variety of domestic hog; the masked boar of Africa, Phacochaerus; the Babyroussa, Collared Peccary (Sus tajassu.)

a native of Asia; and the Peccary, (Dicotyles, Cuv.), a native of America.

SUI'GENERIS. [L.] Of its own or peculiar kind; singular.

SULL'AGE, † n. [Fr. souillage.] Drain of filth.

SU'ING, ppr. of Sue. Prosecuting.

SU'ING, † n. [Fr. suer, to sweat, L. sudo.] The process of soaking through any thing.

SUIT, n. [Norm. suit or svyt; Fr. suite, from suivre, to follow, from L. sequor. See SEEK. In Law Latin, secta is from the same source.] Literally, a following; and so used in the old English statutes. 1. Consecution; succession; series; regular order; as, the same kind and suit of weather. [Not now so applied.]—2. A set; a number of things used together, and in a degree necessary to be united, in order to answer the purpose; as, a suit of curtains; a suit of armour; a suit of sails for a ship; sometimes with less dependence of the particular parts on each other, but still united in use; as, a suit of clothes; a suit of apartments.

—3. A set of the same kind or stamp; as, a suit of cards.—4. Retinue; a company or number of attendants or followers; attendance; train; as, a nobleman and his suit. But in this sense the word is usually written suite,—which see.—5. A petition made to the king or to any great person; a seeking for something by petition or application.

Many shall make suit to thee; Job xi.

6. Solicitation of a woman in marriage; courtship.—7. In law, an action or process for the recovery of a right or claim; legal application to a court for justice; prosecution of right before any tribunal; as, a civil suit; a criminal suit; a suit in chancery. Where the remedy is sought in a court of law, the term suit is synonymous with action; but when the proceeding is in a court of equity, the term suit alone is used. The term is also applied to proceedings in the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts.

In England, the several suits or remedial instruments of justice, are distinguished into three kinds, actions personal, real, and mixed.

Blackstone.

8. Pursuit; prosecution; chase.—Suit and service, in feudal law, the duty of feudatories to attend the courts of their lords or superiors in time of peace, and in war to follow them and perform military service.—To bring suit, a phrase in law, denoting literally to bring secta, followers or witnesses to prove the plaintiff's demand. The phrase is antiquated, or rather it has changed its signification; for to bring a suit, now is to institute an action.—

Out of suits, having no correspondence.

—Suit-covenant, in law, is a covenant to sue at a certain court.—Suit-court, in law, the court in which tenants owe attendance to their lord.—Suit of court, an obligation to follow; that is, to attend, and to assist in constituting a court. It is either real or personal.

Suit-real, or rather suit-regal, is the obligation under which all the residents within a leet or town are bound, in respect of their allegiance as subjects, to attend the king's criminal court for the district.—Suit-personal, is an obligation to attend the civil courts of the lord under whom the suitor holds lands or tenements, and this is either suit-service or suit-custom. If freehold lands, &c., be holden of the king immediately, suit-service is performed by attendance at the county court. If freehold lands, &c., are held mediately only of the king, but immediately of an inferior lord, the suit-service demandable is attendance at the court—baron of the lord. In manners where there are copyhold estates, the custom of the manor imposes upon the copyholder an obligation to attend the lord's customary court; but as this obligation is not annexed by the tenure to the land held by the copyholder, but is annexed by custom to his position as tenant, the suit is not suit-service, but suit-custom.

SUIT, v. t. To fit; to adapt; to make proper. Suit the action to the word. Suit the gestures to the passion to be expressed. Suit the style to the subject.—2. To become; to be fitted to.

Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well.

Dryden.

Raise her notes to that sublime degree, Which suits a song of piety and thee. Prior.

3. To dress; to clothe.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too, So went he *suit*ed to his watery tomb.

Shak.

4. To please; to make content. He is well *suit*ed with his place.

SUIT, v. i. To agree; to accord; as, to suit with; to suit to. Pity suits with a noble nature.

Give me not an office That suits with me so ill. Addison.

The place itself was *suit*ing to his care. Dryden.

[The use of with, after suit, is now most frequent.]

SUITABILITY, n. Suitableness,—which see.

SUITABLE, a. Fitting; according with; agreeable to; proper; becoming; as, ornaments suitable to one's character and station; language suitable to the subject.—2. Adequate. We cannot make suitable returns for divine mercies.

SUITABLENESS, n. Fitness; propriety; agreeableness; a state of being adapted or accommodated. Consider the laws, and their suitableness to our moral state.

SUITABLY, adv. Fitly; agreeably; with propriety. Let words be suitably applied.

SUITE, n. (sweet.) [Fr.] Retinue; a company or number of attendants or followers; attendance; train; as, a nobleman and his suite.

SUITED, pp. Fitted; adapted; pleased.

SUITING, ppr. Fitting; according with; becoming; pleasing.

SUITOR, n. One that sues or prosecutes a demand of right in law, as a plaintiff, petitioner, or an appellant.—

Wild Boar (Sus scrofa).

breeds; the wild boar, (Sus scrofa, Linn.,) which is the parent stock of our

2. One who attends a court, whether plaintiff, defendant, petitioner, appellant, witness, juror, or the like. These, in legal phraseology, are all included in the word suitors.—3. A petitioner; an applicant.
She hath been a *suito*r to me for her brother.

Shak.

4. One who solicits a woman in marriage; a wooer; a lover.
SÜITRESS, n. A female supplicant.
SUL/CATE, } a. [L. sulcus, a furrow.]
SUL/CATED, } In bot., furrowed; grooved; scored with deep broad channels longitudinally. Applied to stems, leaves, seeds, &c., of plants.—2. In zool., a term applied to a surface that is deeply impressed with longitudinal parallel lines; as various shells.

SUL/CUS, n. plur. Sulci. [L.] A groove or furrow.

SULK, v. i. To be sullen; to become sour.—To be in the sulks, to be in a state of sullenness. [Colloq.]

SUL/KILY, adv. Sullenly; morosely.

SUL/KINESS, n. [from sulky.] Sullenness; sourness; moroseness.

SULKS, n. plur. State of sulkiness; as, to be in the sulks; to have a fit of the sulks. [Familiar.]

SUL/KY, a. [Sax. solcen, sluggish.] Sullen; sour; heavy; obstinate; morose.

While these animals remain in their inclosures, they are sulky.

As. Res.

SUL/KY, n. A carriage for a single person.

SULL,† n. [Sax. sulh.] A plough.

SUL/LAGE, n. [See SULLIAGE.] A drain of filth, or filth collected from the street or highway.

SUL/LEN, a. [perhaps set, fixed, and allied to silent, still, &c.] 1. Gloomily, angry, and silent; cross; sour; afflicted with ill humour.

And sullen I forsook th' imperfect feast.

Prior.

2. Mischievous; malignant.

Such sullen planets at my birth did shine.

Dryden.

3. Obstinate; intractable.

Things are as sullen as we are. Tillotson.

4. Gloomy; dark; dismal.

Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth?

Shak.

Night with her sullen wings.

Milton.

No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows.

Pope.

5. Heavy; dull; sorrowful.

Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,

And sullen presage of your own decay.

Shak.

SUL/LEN,† v. t. To make sullen.

SUL/LENLY, adv. Gloomily; malignantly; intractably; with moroseness.

SUL/LENNESS, n. Ill nature with silence; silent moroseness; gloominess; malignity; intractableness.

SUL/LENS,† n. plur. A morose temper; gloominess.

SUL/LIAGE, n. [Fr. souillage.] Foulness; filth.

SUL/LIED, pp. Soiled; tarnished; stained.

SUL/LY, v. t. [Fr. souiller; from the root of soil, G. süle.] 1. To soil; to dirt; to spot; to tarnish.

And statues sullied yet with sacrilegious smoke.

Roscommon.

2. To tarnish; to darken.

Let there be no spots to sully the brightness of this solemnity.

Atterbury.

3. To stain; to tarnish; as, the purity of reputation; as, virtues sullied by slanders; character sullied by infamous vices.

SUL/LY, v. i. To be soiled or tarnished.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding.

Bacon.

SUL/LY, n. Soil; tarnish; spot.

A noble and triumphant merit breaks through little spots and sullies on his reputation.

Spectator.

SUL/LYING, ppr. Soiling; tarnishing; staining.

SULPHAME'THYLANE, n. A crystalline compound, produced when a current of dry ammonia is made to act upon neutral sulphate of methule. It is a very deliquescent compound, analogous to oxamethylane.

SULPHA'SATYDE, n. A substance formed by the action of potash on sulphate, from which it differs but slightly. It is a white crystalline powder.

SULPHATE, n. [from sulphur.] A salt formed by sulphuric acid in combination with any base; as, sulphate of lime. Of the sulphates, some are found native; some are very soluble, some sparingly soluble, and some insoluble. All those that are soluble are recognized in solution by the test of nitrate of baryta, which causes a white precipitate of sulphate of baryta, insoluble in acids. All the insoluble sulphates, when fused with carbonate of soda, yield sulphate of soda, which may be recognized as above. Some neutral sulphates occur in the anhydrous state, and others occur combined with water. The most important sulphates are:—

Sulphate of alumina and potash or alum; sulphate of ammonia, employed for making carbonate of ammonia; sulphate of copper, or blue vitriol, much used as an escharotic in surgery; and also used in dyeing, and for preparing certain green pigments; sulphate of iron, or green vitriol, used in making ink, and very extensively in dyeing, and calico printing; it is also much used in medicine; sulphate of lime or gypsum; sulphate of magnesia, or Epsom salts; sulphate of manganese, used in calico printing; sulphate of peroxide of mercury, used in the preparation of corrosive sublimate, and of calomel; bisulphate of potash, much used as a flux in mineral analysis; sulphate of soda, or Glauber's salts; sulphate of quinia, much used in medicine; sulphate of zinc, or white vitriol, used in surgery, also in the preparation of drying oils for varnishes, and in the reserve or resist pastes of the calico printer. Some of the sulphates are double; as the sulphate of magnesia and potash, the sulphate of alumina and potash or alum.

SULPHATIE, a. Relating to sulphate.
SULPHE'SATYDE, n. A substance formed by the action of sulphuretted hydrogen on isatine, dissolved in alcohol. It is a greyish yellow amorphous powder.

SULPHITE, n. [from sulphur.] A salt formed by a combination of sulphurous acid with a base. The sulphites are recognized by giving off the suffocating smell of sulphurous acid when acted on by a stronger acid. A very close analogy exists between them and the carbonates.

SULPHOBENZIDE, n. A substance obtained in colourless crystals, when anhydrous sulphuric acid is made to act upon benzole. It is an inodorous indifferent body, composed of 12 equivalents of carbon, 5 of hydrogen, and 2 of sulphuric acid.

SULPHOCAMPHIC ACID, n. An acid obtained from camphogene when acted on by sulphuric acid.

SULPHOCAMPHORIC ACID, n. An acid formed by the action of sulphuric acid on anhydrous camphoric acid. It is crystallizable, and forms crystallizable salts.

SULPHOCYANIC ACID, n. An acid composed of sulphur, cyanogen, and hydrogen. It occurs in the seeds and blossoms of cruciferous plants, and in the saliva of man and sheep. It is a colourless liquid of a pure acid taste, and smells somewhat like vinegar. It colours the salts of peroxide of iron blood-red. It is more properly called hydro-sulphocyanic acid.

SULPHOCYANIDE, n. A compound formed by the union of hydro-sulphocyanic acid with a metallic base.

SULPHOCYANOGEN, n. A compound of sulphur and cyanogen, called also bisulphuret of cyanogen. It is obtained in the form of a deep yellow amorphous powder, insoluble in water, alcohol, and ether, but is dissolved by strong sulphuric acid.

SULPHOGLYCERIC ACID, n. An acid formed by treating glycerine with sulphuric acid. It forms double salts, analogous to the sulphovinatates.

SULPHOINDIGOTIC ACID, n. An acid formed by the action of sulphuric acid on indigo. When 1 part of pure indigo is added to 8 parts of sulphuric acid, the addition of water causes the deposition of a purple powder called sulpho-purpuric acid, while a blue solution is obtained. The blue solution contains two acids, sulphoindigotic acid, and hypo-sulphoindigotic acid.

SULPHOLEIC ACID, n. When a mixture of oleine and margarine is acted on by sulphuric acid, two new acids are formed, sulpholeic acid, and sulphomargaric acid. Little is known respecting them.

SULPHOMETHYLIC ACID, n. Bisulphate of oxide of methyle, perfectly analogous to sulphovinic acid, forming double salts, which are often called sulphomethylates.

SULPHONAPHTHALIC ACID, n. An acid compounded of sulphuric acid and naphthaline, discovered by Faraday. When naphthaline is dissolved in excess by sulphuric acid, two new compounds are formed, sulphonaphthaline, and sulphonaphthalide; both insoluble in water.

SULPHOPROTEIC ACID, n. An acid resulting from the union of diluted sulphuric acid with proteine.

SULPHOPURPURIC ACID, n. A purple powder, obtained by dissolving 1 part of indigo in 8 parts of oil of vitriol, and adding water to the solution. It gives purple salts with bases, and is soluble in pure water.

SULPHOSACCHARIC ACID, n. An acid formed by dissolving grape sugar in strong sulphuric acid. It is a sweet liquid, slightly acid, and forming soluble salts with almost all bases.

Its true composition is not yet known.

SULPHOSELS, } The name
SULPHUR SALTS, } given by Berzelius to certain double sulphurets. The simple sulphurets, by the union of which a sulphur salt is formed, are bi-elementary compounds, strictly analogous in their constitution to acids and alkaline bases; and, like them, are capable of assuming opposite electric energies in relation to each other. Electro-positive sulphurets are termed sulphur bases, and the electro-negative sulphurets, sulphur acids. The principal sulphur bases are the protosulphurets of potassium, sodium, lithium, barium, strontium, calcium, and magnesium, and hydro-sulphate of ammonia; and the principal sulphur acids are the sulphurets of arsenic, antimony, tungsten, molybdenum, tellurium, tin, and gold, together with hydrosulphuric acid, bisulphuret of carbon, and sulphuret of selenium. The compounds resulting from the union of a sulphuret of the former class with one of the latter, constitute sulphur salts, or sulphosels. These are analogous to oxy-salts.

SULPHOSINAP'ISINE, n. In chem., a crystallizable substance, obtained from mustard-seed.

SULPHOVINATE, n. A double salt formed by the union of sulphovinic acid with a base; as, sulphovinate of etherole, or heavy oil of wine.

SULPHOVIN'IC ACID, n. An acid produced by the action of sulphuric acid upon alcohol, and called also acid sulphate of oxide of ethyle. To obtain it pure, the double sulphate of ethyle and baryta in solution is decomposed by sulphuric acid, and the filtered liquid is a solution in water of the acid sulphate. It has a very sour taste, and cannot be concentrated by evaporation without being decomposed into alcohol and sulphuric acid. It forms with most bases crystallizable double salts, called sulphovinates, which are all soluble.

SULPHUR, n. [L., whence Fr. soufre.] Brimstone, a simple non-metallic combustible substance, which has been known from the earliest ages of the world. It occurs in great abundance in the mineral, sparingly in the vegetable, and still more sparingly in the animal kingdom. It occurs sometimes pure or merely mixed, and sometimes in chemical combination with oxygen and various metals, forming sulphates and sulphurets. It is found in greatest abundance and purity in the neighbourhood of volcanoes, modern or extinct, as at Solfatara, in Italy; and, as an article of commerce, is chiefly imported from the Mediterranean. That which is manufactured in this country is obtained by the roasting of iron pyrites. It is commonly met with in two forms; that of a compact, brittle solid, and a fine powder. It is nearly tasteless, of a greenish yellow colour, and when rubbed or melted emits a peculiar odour. Its specific gravity is 1.99; it is insoluble in water, and not very readily soluble in alcohol, but is taken up by spirits of turpentine. It is a non-conductor of electricity. It is readily melted and volatilized. It fuses at 232°, and between 232° and 280° it possesses the greatest degree of fluidity, and when cast into cylindrical moulds, forms the common roll-sulphur of commerce. It possesses the peculiar property of solidifying at a higher degree, or when raised to 320°. Between 428° and 482° it is very tenacious. From 482° to its boiling point (600°) it again becomes liquid. At 600° it rises in vapour, and in close vessels condenses in the form of a fine yellow powder, called flowers of sulphur. When sulphur is heated to at least 428°, and then poured into water, it becomes a ductile mass, and may be employed for taking the impressions of seals and medals. Sulphur combines with oxygen, hydrogen, chlorine, &c., forming various important compounds. It unites also with the metals forming sulphurets. It is of great importance in the arts, being employed in the manufacture of gunpowder, and in the formation of sulphuric acid. It is also employed in medicine, and for various other purposes.

SULPHURATE, a. [L. sulphuratus.] Belonging to sulphur; of the colour of sulphur. [Little used.]

SULPHURATE, † v. t. To combine with sulphur.

SULPHURATED, † pp. Combined or impregnated with sulphur; as, sulphurated hydrogen gas.

SULPHURATING, † ppr. Combining or impregnating with sulphur.

SULPHURATION, n. Act of dressing or anointing with sulphur.—2. The process by which woollen, silk, and cotton goods, and likewise straw-bats, are whitened or bleached by being exposed to the vapours of burning sulphur, or to sulphurous acid gas.

SULPHUREOUS, a. Consisting of sulphur: having the qualities of sulphur or brimstone; impregnated with sulphur.—Sulphureous waters, such as the springs of Aix-la-Chapelle, Harrowgate, and Moffat, contain sulphuretted hydrogen, and are easily recognized by their odour, and by causing a brown precipitate with a salt of lead or silver.

Her snakes untied, sulphureous waters drink.
Pope.

SULPHUREOUSLY, adv. In a sulphureous manner.

SULPHUREOUSNESS, n. The state of being sulphureous.

SULPHURET, n. A compound of sulphur with an electro-positive or inflammable body; as the sulphuret of potassium; sulphuret of phosphorus; sulphuret of iron, &c. The principal ores of iron, copper, lead, &c., are sulphurets of those metals.

SULPHURETTED, a. Applied to bodies having sulphur in combination.—Sulphuretted hydrogen, a compound formed when hydrogen and sulphur come in contact in the nascent state. It is a transparent colourless gas, recognized by its peculiar fetid odour, resembling that of putrid eggs. It is very deleterious to animal life, and is often formed where animal matters or excrements putrify. It extinguishes flame, but is itself combustible. It is the active constituent of sulphureous mineral waters. It is also known by the name of hydro-sulphuric acid, and consists of 1 atom of sulphur and 1 of hydrogen.

SULPHURIC, a. Pertaining to sulphur.—Sulphuric acid, oil of vitriol; a most important acid, discovered by Basil Valentine towards the close of the 15th century. It was formerly procured by the distillation of dried sulphate of iron, called green vitriol, whence the corrosive liquid which came over in the distillation, having an oily consistence, was called oil of vitriol. It is now prepared in this and most other countries, by burning sulphur along with nitre in large leaden chambers. Pure sulphuric acid is a dense, oily, colourless fluid, having, when strongly concentrated, a specific gravity of about 1.8. It is exceedingly acid and corrosive, decomposing all animal and vegetable substances by the aid of heat. It unites with alkaline substances, and separates all other acids, more or less completely, from their combinations with the alkalies. It has a very great affinity for water, and unites with it in every proportion, producing great heat; it attracts moisture strongly from the atmosphere, becoming rapidly weaker if exposed. The sulphuric acid of commerce is never pure, but it may be purified by distillation. With bases sulphuric acid forms salts, called sulphates, some of which are neutral, and others acid. Common sulphuric acid is properly hydrated sulphuric acid, which may be regarded as a compound of 1 atom of dry acid, and 1 of water.—Fuming sulphuric acid, or that obtained by distilling partially dried green vitriol, consists of 2 equivalents of anhydrous or dry acid, and 1 equivalent of water. The best test of the presence of sulphuric acid, whether free or combined, is a soluble compound of barium. Thus, when a solution of chloride of barium is added to a liquid containing sulphuric acid, it causes a white precipitate; viz., sulphate of baryta, which is not only insoluble in water, but in the strongest acids. Of all the acids the sulphuric is the most extensively used in the arts, and is in fact the primary agent for obtaining almost all the others by disengaging them from their saline combinations. Its uses to the scientific chemist are innumerable. In medicine it is used in a diluted state, as a refrigerant.

SULPHURIC ETHER, n. A colourless transparent liquid, of a pleasant smell and a pungent taste, extremely exhilarating, and producing a degree of intoxication when its vapour is inhaled by the nostrils. It is produced by distilling a mixture of equal weights of sulphuric acid and alcohol, and by various other means. It consists of 4 atoms of carbon, 5 of hydrogen, and 1 of oxygen, and has a specific gravity of 0.75. It is extremely volatile, and highly inflammable; and its vapour, mixed with oxygen or atmospheric air, forms a very dangerous explosive mixture. It dissolves in 10 parts of water, and is miscible with alcohol and the fatty and volatile oils in all proportions. It is employed in medicine as a stimulant and antispasmodic. The vapour of ether was recently administered, with great success, to patients when about to undergo surgical operations. The patient was made to inhale the vapour by means of an apparatus contrived for the purpose, in consequence of which he was thrown into a state of stupor, and was thus enabled to undergo the operation without any sensation of pain. Sulphuric ether, as an anæsthetic agent in surgical operations, is now, however, superseded by chloroform.

SULPHUROUS, a. Like sulphur; containing sulphur.—Sulphurous acid, an acid formed by the combustion of sulphur in air or dry oxygen, consisting of 1 equivalent of sulphur, and 2 of oxygen. It is a transparent and colourless gas, of a disagreeable taste, a pungent and suffocating odour, is fatal to life, and very injurious to vegetation. At 45°, under the pressure of two atmospheres, it becomes liquid, and also at 0° under the pressure of one atmosphere. It extinguishes flame, but is not itself inflammable. It has considerable bleaching properties, so that the fumes of burning sulphur are often used to whiten straw, and silk and cotton goods. It combines with metallic oxides, forming salts called sulphites.

SULPHUR-SALTS. See SULPHOSESLS.
SULPHUR-WÖRT, n. A plant, hog's fennel, of the genus Peucedanum, the P. officinale. [See PEUCEDANUM.]

SULPHURY, a. Partaking of sulphur; having the qualities of sulphur.

SULTAN, n. [Qu. Ch. Syr. and Heb. שַׁלַּט, shalat, to rule.] An appellation given to the emperor of the Turks, denoting ruler or commander.

SULTANA, } n. The queen of a
SULTANESS, } sultan; the empress of the Turks.

SULTAN-FLOWER, n. A plant, a species of Centaurea.

SULTANRY, n. An eastern empire; the dominions of a sultan.

SULTANSHIP, n. The office or state of a sultan.

SULTRINESS, n. [from sultry.] The state of being sultry; heat with a moist or close air.

SULTRY, a. [G. schwül, sultry; Sax. swolath, swole, heat, G. schwüle. See SWELTER.] 1. Very hot, burning, and oppressive; as, Libya's sultry deserts.—2. Very hot and moist, or hot, close, stagnant, and unelastic; as air or the atmosphere. A sultry air is usually enfeebling and oppressive to the human body.

Such as born beneath the burning sky
And sultry sun, betwixt the tropics lie.

Dryden.

SUM, n. [Fr. somme; G. summe; L. summa, a sum; Sax. somed, L. simul, together; Sax. somnian, to assemble. These words may be from the root of Ch. סָם, som, Heb. שָׁם, shom, to set or place.] 1. The aggregate of two or more numbers, magnitudes, quantities, or particulars; the amount or whole of any number of individuals or particulars added. The sum of 5 and 7 is 12; the sum of a and b is a + b.

O How precious are thy thoughts to me,
O God! how great is the sum of them!
Ps. cxxxix.

Take the sum of all the congregation;
Num. i.

[Sum is now applied more generally to numbers, and number to persons.]—2. A quantity of money or currency; any amount indefinitely. I sent him a sum of money, a small sum, or a large sum. I received a large sum in bank notes.—3. Compendium; abridgment; the amount; the substance. This is the sum of all the evidence in the case. This is the sum and substance of all his objections. The sum of all I have said is this. The phrase, in sum, is obsolete, or nearly so.

In sum, the gospel considered as a law, prescribes every virtue to our conduct, and forbids every sin. Rogers.

4. Height; completion.
Thus have I told thee all my state, and brought

My story to the sum of earthly bliss. Milton.

SUM, v. t. To add particulars into one whole; to collect two or more particular numbers into one number; to cast up; usually followed by up, but it is superfluous. Custom enables a man to sum up a long column of figures with surprising facility and correctness.

The hour doth rather sum up the moments, than divide the day. Bacon.

2. To bring or collect into a small compass; to comprise in a few words; to condense. He summed up his arguments at the close of his speech, with great force and effect.

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard," in few words, sums up the moral of this fable.

L'Estrange.

3. In fulconry, to have feathers full grown.

With prosperous wing full summ'd. [Unusual.] Milton.

SUMACH, } n. (shu'mak.) [Fr. sumach;
SUMAC, } G. id.; Ar. and Pers. sumak.] A genus of plants (Rhus), of many species, some of which are used in tanning; some in dyeing; and some in medicine. [See RHUS.]

SUMATRAN, n. A native of Sumatra.
SUM'LESS, a. Not to be computed; of which the amount cannot be ascertained.

The sumless treasure of exhausted mines. Pope.

SUM'MARILY, adv. [from summary.] In a summary manner; briefly; concisely; in a narrow compass or in few words. The Lord's Prayer teaches us summarily the things we are to ask for.—2. In a short way or method.

When the parties proceed summarily, and they choose the ordinary way of proceeding, the cause is made plenary.

Ayliffe.

SUM'MARY, a. [Fr. sommaire; from sum, or L. summa.] Reduced into a narrow compass; or into few words; short; brief; concise; compendious; as, a summary statement of arguments or objections; a summary proceeding or process.—Summary application, in English law, signifies redress by means of a motion in court, which is applicable to cases respecting annuities, attorneys, warrants of attorney, &c., and to those matters which by law or statute are placed within the immediate and peculiar jurisdiction of the courts of law, and which may be decided without hindrance or delay.—Summary actions, in Scots law, are those which are brought into court, not by summons, advocacy, or suspension, but by petition or summary complaint.

SUM'MARY, n. An abridged account; an abstract, abridgment, or compendium, containing the sum or substance of a fuller account; as, the comprehensive summary of our duty to God in the first table of the law.

SUMMA'TION, n. The act of forming a sum or total amount.—2. An aggregate.—Summation of series, in math., the method of finding the sum of a series, whether the number of its terms be finite or infinite. [See SERIES.]

SUM'MED, pp. [from sum.] Collected into a total amount; fully grown, as feathers.

SUM'MER, n. One who casts up an account.

SUM'MER, a. Relating to summer; as, summer heat.

SUM'MER, n. [Sax. sumer, sumor; G. and Dan. sommer; Ir. samh, the sun, and summer, and samhradh, summer.] One of the four seasons of the year, in the popular acceptance of the term, including May, June, and July. Astronomically considered, summer begins in the northern hemisphere when the sun enters Cancer, about the 21st of June, and continues for three months, till Sept. 23d; during which time, the sun being north of the equator, shines more directly upon this part of the earth, which renders this the hottest period of the year. In latitudes south of the equator, just the opposite takes place, or it is summer there when it is winter here. The entire year is also sometimes divided into summer and winter, the former signifying the warmer and the latter the colder part of the year.—Indian summer, in the U. States, a period of warm weather late in autumn, when, it is said, the Indians go hunting to supply themselves with the flesh of wild animals for provisions in the winter.

SUM'MER, v. i. To pass the summer or warm season.

The fowls shall summer upon them; Is. xviii.

SUM'MER,† v. t. To keep or carry through the summer. [Little used.]

SUM'MER, n. [Fr. sommer, a hair quilt, the sound-board of an organ, the winter and head of a printer's press, a large beam and a sumpter horse; W. sumer, that which supports or keeps together, a summer. From the latter explanation, we may infer that summer is from the root of sum.] 1. A large stone, the first that is laid over columns and pilasters, beginning to make a cross vault; or a stone laid over a column, and hollowed to receive the first haunch of a platband.—2. A large timber supported on two stone piers or posts, serving as a lintel to a door or window, &c.—3. A large timber or beam laid as a bearing beam.—4. A girder.—5. A breast summer.

SUM'MER-FAL'LOW, n. [See FAL'LOW.] Naked fallow; land lying bare of crops in summer, but frequently ploughed, harrowed, and rolled so as to pulverize it and clean it of weeds.

SUM'MER-FAL'LOW, v. t. To plough and work repeatedly in summer, to prepare for wheat or other crop.

SUM'MER-HOUSE, n. A house or apartment in a garden to be used in summer.—2. A house for summer's residence.

SUM'MERINGS, n. In arching, the name given by the workmen to the beds of the stones.

SUM'MERSET, n. A high leap in which the heels are thrown over the head. [See SOMERSAULT, SOMERSET.]

SUM'MER-STIR, v. t. To plough land that it may be fallowed in summer; to summer-fallow.

SUM'MER-TREE, n. A beam full of mortises for the reception of the ends of joists.

SUM'MER-WHEAT, n. Spring wheat.

SUM'MING, ppr. of Sum. Adding together.—Summing up the evidence. In Scots law, in criminal prosecutions, before the jury enter on a consideration of their verdict, the presiding judge recapitulates, in a clear and succinct manner, the different facts and circumstances which have been adduced in evidence in the case before the court, giving at the same time an exposition of the law where it appears necessary, in order to instruct the jury, and correct the exaggerated representations of parties. This is termed summing up the evidence.

SUM'MIST, n. One that forms an abridgment. [Little used.]

SUM'MIT, n. [L. summitus, from summus, highest.] 1. The top; the highest point; as, the summit of a mountain.—2. The highest point or degree; utmost elevation. The general arrived to the summit of human fame.—3. In conchology, the most elevated point of the shell where the hinge is placed.

SUMMITLESS, a. Having no summit. SUM'MIT-LEVEL, n. The highest level; the highest of a series of elevations over which a canal or watercourse is carried.

SUM'MITY, n. [Fr. sommité.] The height or top of any thing.

SUM'MON, v. t. [L. submoneo; sub and moneo; Fr. sommer. See ADMONISH.] 1. To call, cite or notify, by authority to appear at a place specified, or to attend in person to some public duty, or both; as, to summon a jury; to summon witnesses.

The parliament is summoned by the king's writ or letter. Blackstone.
Nor trumpets summon him to war.

Dryden.

2. To give notice to a person to appear in court and defend.—3. To call or command.

Love, duty, safety summon us away. Pope.

4. To call up; to excite into action or exertion; with up. Summon up all your strength or courage.

Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood.

Shak.

SUM'MONED, pp. Admonished or warned by authority to appear or attend to something; called or cited by authority.

SUM'MONER, n. One who summons or cites by authority. In England, the sheriff's messenger, employed to warn persons to appear in court.

SUM'MONING, ppr. Citing by authority to appear or attend to something.

SUM'MONS, n. With a plural termination, but used in the singular number; as, a summons is prepared. [L. submoneas.] 1. A call by authority or the command of a superior to appear at a place named, or to attend to some public duty.

This summons he resolved not to disobey.

Fell.

He sent to summon the seditious and to offer pardon; but neither summons nor pardon was regarded.

Hayward.

2. In law, a warning or citation to appear in court; or a written notification, signed by the proper officer, to be served on a person, warning him to appear in court at a day specified, to answer to the demand of the plaintiff. A writ of summons may issue from either of the four superior courts of common law, and a copy of it must be personally served on the defendant against whom it is intended to proceed.

The duration of a writ of summons, is four calendar months inclusive, from the day of issuing, but it may be continued by renewals. In Scots law, a summons is a writ issuing from the court of session in the sovereign's name, signed by a writer to the signet, and passing the signet, setting forth the grounds and conclusions of an action, and containing the royal warrant or mandate to messengers-at-arms, to cite the defender to appear in court to answer the demand, with certification that if he fail to appear, the court will pronounce decree in the terms concluded for in the summons. Summonses in the inferior courts are framed on the same model, only the citation is given on the warrant of the inferior judge or magistrate, and not of the sovereign.

SUMMUM BONUM. [L.] The chief good.

SUMOOM, n. A pestilential wind of Persia. [See SIMOOM.]

SUMP, n. In metallurgy, a round pit of stone, lined with clay, for receiving the metal on its first fusion.—2. A pond of water reserved for salt-works.—3. In mining, a pit sunk below the bottom of the mine.

SUN, n. [Sax. sunna; G. sonne; Sans. sunih. The Danish has Søndag, Sunday, Slav. Sonze. Qu. W. tan, Ir. teine, fire, and shan, in Bethshan.] 1. The splendid orb or luminary which, being in or near the centre of our system of worlds, gives light and heat to all the planets, and is therefore the primary cause of all the motions and changes effected on the surface of our globe by those mighty agents. The light of the sun constitutes the day, and the darkness which proceeds from its absence, or the shade of the earth, constitutes the night; Ps. cxxxvi. All the planets and comets of our system revolve round the sun as a common centre, at different distances and in different periods of time. His mean apparent diameter is about 32 minutes, and his mean distance from the earth about 95,000,000 miles. His real diameter is 882,000 miles, and hence his magnitude is 1,384,472 times that of the earth, but his mass or quantity of matter is only about 23 times that of the earth. He revolves on his axis from west to east in 25 $\frac{1}{2}$ of our mean solar days, his axis being inclined at an angle of 82° 40' to the plane of the ecliptic. When viewed through powerful telescopes the sun's discs observed to have frequently large and perfectly black spots upon it. These spots are of various irregular shapes, and of various sizes, from the least visible to the twentieth part of the sun in diameter. They alter in size and gradually vanish, lasting from a few days to six or seven weeks.

Herschel conjectures that the shining matter of the sun consists of a mass of phosphoric clouds, floating above his atmosphere, or else mixed with the higher strata of it, and that owing to disturbances in the equilibrium of this luminous atmosphere, openings are made through it; and that therefore a spot on the sun is a portion of the body of the sun itself, seen through one of these openings. Several hypotheses have been advanced respecting the emission of heat and light from the sun, but none of them are satisfactory. The sun, besides his motion round his own axis, revolves round the common centre of gravity of the solar system, which centre is a point within the body of the sun. The apparent diurnal motion of the sun from east to west, is owing to the revolution of the earth on its axis, and his apparent annual path in the ecliptic from west to east, is owing to the motion of the earth round the sun in an elliptical orbit, the sun being in one of the foci. Astronomers seem to have ascertained beyond a doubt that the sun has a proper motion in space, and is advancing along with the planets toward some distant point among the fixed stars.—2. In popular usage, a sunny place; a place where the beams of the sun fall; as, to stand in the sun, that is, to stand where the direct rays of the sun fall.—3. Any thing eminently splendid or luminous; that which is the chief source of light or honour. The native Indians of America complain that the sun of their glory is set.

I will never consent to put out the sun of sovereignty to posterity. K. Charles.

4. In Scripture, Christ is called the sun of righteousness, as the source of light, animation, and comfort to his disciples.—5. The luminary or orb which constitutes the centre of any system of worlds. The fixed stars are supposed to be *sun*s in their respective systems.—Under the sun, in the world; on earth; a proverbial expression.

There is no new thing under the sun; Eccles. 1.

SUN, v. t. To expose to the sun's rays; to warm or dry in the light of the sun; to insolate; as, to sun cloth; to sun grain.

Then to sun thyself in open air. Dryden.

SUN AND PLANET WHEELS. In mech., an ingenious contrivance adopted by Watt in the early history of the steam engine, for converting the reciprocating motion of the beam into a rotatory motion. In the annexed figure the sun-wheel a, is a toothed wheel fixed fast to the axis of the fly wheel, and the planet wheel b, is a similar wheel bolted to the lower end of the connecting rod c; it is retained in its orbit by a link at the back of both wheels. By the reciprocating motion of the connecting rod, the wheel b is compelled to circulate round the wheel a, and in so doing carries the latter along with it, communicating to the fly wheel a velocity double of its own. SUN-BEAM, n. [sun and beam.] A ray of the sun. Truth written with a sunbeam, is truth made obviously plain. Gliding through the even on a sunbeam.

Milton.

SUN-BEAT, a. [sun and beat.] Struck by the sun's rays; shone brightly on. SUN-BEATEN, a. Sunbeaten. SUN-BIRDS, n. Cinyridæ, a family of birds found principally in the tropical parts of Africa and Asia, and in the adjacent islands. They are small birds, with plumage approaching in splendour to that of the humming birds, which in Sun Birds (Cynnis afra), Male and Female.

many respects they resemble. They live on the juices of flowers; their nature is gay, and their song agreeable. They hold the same place in the old world that humming birds do in the new.

SUN-BLINK, n. A flash or glimpse of sunshine. [Scotch.]

SUN-BORN, a. Preceding from the sun. SUN-BRIGHT, a. [sun and bright.] Bright as the sun; like the sun in brightness; as, a sun-bright shield; a sun-bright chariot.

How and which way I may bestow myself To be regarded in her sun-bright eye. Shak. SUN-BURN, v. t. To discolour or scorch by the sun.

SUN-BURNING, n. [sun and burning.] The burning or tan occasioned by the rays of the sun on the skin.

SUN-BURNT, a. [sun and burnt.] Discoloured by the heat or rays of the sun; tanned; darkened in hue; as, a sunburnt skin.

Sunburnt and swarthy though she be.

Dryden.

2. Scorched by the sun's rays; as, a sunburnt soil.

SUN-CLAD, a. [sun and clad.] Clad in radiance or brightness.

SUN-DART, n. A ray of the sun.

SUNDAY, n. [Sax. sunna-dæg; G. sonntag; so called because this day was anciently dedicated to the sun, or to its worship.] The Christian sabbath; the first day of the week, a day consecrated to rest from secular employments, and to religious worship. It is called also the Lord's day. Many pious persons however discard the use of Sunday, and call the day the sabbath. [See SABBATH.]

SUNDAY, a. Belonging to the Lord's day, or Christian sabbath.

SUNDAY-LETTER, n. The dominical letter,—which see.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL, n. A school for the religious instruction of children and youth on the Lord's day.

SUN-DEER, v. t. [Sax. sundrian, syndrian; G. sondern; Dan. sinder, torn in pieces; Sw. söndra, to divide.] 1. To part; to separate; to divide; to disunite in almost any manner, either by rending, cutting, or breaking; as, to sunder a rope or cord; to sunder a limb or joint; to sunder friends, or the ties of friendship. The executioner sunders the head from the body at a stroke. A mountain may be sundered by an earthquake.

Bring me lightning, give me thunder; Jove may kill, but we'er shall sunder.

Glanville.

2. To expose to the sun. [Provincial.]

SUN-DEER, n. In sunder, in two. He cutteth the spear in sunder; Ps. xlv.

SUN-DERED, pp. Separated; divided; parted.

SUN-DERING, ppr. Parting; separating.

SUN-DEW, n. [sun and dew.] A genus of plants, (Drosera), belonging to the nat. order Droseraceæ, of which it is the type. The species inhabit marshes and moist places in various parts of the world; their leaves are all radical and fringed with hairs, each of which supports a globule of pellucid dew-like liquor, even in the hottest weather. Three species are found in Britain, the most common of which (D. rotundifolia) is an acid, caustic plant, said to remove warts and corns, and to curdle milk.

SUN-DIAL, n. [sun and dial.] An instrument to show the time of day, by means of the shadow of a gnomon or style on a plate.

SUN-DOG, n. A luminous spot occasionally seen a few degrees from the sun, supposed to be formed by the intersection of two or more haloes. Sometimes the spot appears when the haloes themselves are invisible.

SUN-DOWN, n. In America, sunset; sunsetting.

SUN-DRIED, a. [sun and dry.] Dried in the rays of the sun.

SUN-DRIES, n. pl. Several small things, or miscellaneous matters, too minute or numerous to be classified.

SUN-DRY, a. [Sax. sunder, separate.] Several; divers; more than one or two. [This word, like several, is indefinite; but it usually signifies a small number, sometimes many.]

I have composed sundry collects.

Sanderson.

Sundry foes the rural realm surround.

Dryden.

SUN-FISH, n. [sun and fish.] Orthogoriscus, a genus of cartilaginous fishes belonging to the family Gymnodontes, and so named on account of the almost circular form and shining surface of the typical species. The Sunfish appears like the head of a large fish separated from the body. While swimming it turns upon itself like a wheel. It grows to a large size, often attaining a diameter of four feet and sometimes even that of twelve feet. It is found in all seas from the arctic to the antarctic circle. Two or three species are known.—2. The basking shark.

Short Sunfish (Orthogoriscus mola).

SUN-FLOWER, n. [sun and flower.] The English name of a genus of plants called Helianthus, so named from the form and colour of the flower, or from its habit of turning to the sun. [See HELIANTHUS.] The bastard sunflower is of the genus Helenium; the dwarf sunflower is of the genus Rudbeckia, and another of the genus Tetragonotheca; the little sunflower is of the genus Cistus.

SUNG, pret. of Sing.

While to his harp divine Amphion sung. Pope.

SUN-GILT, a. Gilded, as it were, by the rays of the sun.

SUNK, pret. and pp. of Sink.

Or toss'd by hope, or sunk by care. Prior.

SUNK'EN, a. Sunk; lying on the bottom of a river or other water.

SUN'LESS, a. [sun and less.] Destitute of the sun or its rays; shaded.

SUN-LIGHT, n. The light of the sun.

SUN-LIKE, a. [sun and like.] Resembling the sun.

SUN-LIT, a. Lit or lighted by the sun.

SUN-NAH, n. The name given by Mohammedans to the traditionary portion of their law; which was not, like the Koran, committed to writing by Mohammed, but preserved from his lips by his immediate disciples, or founded on the authority of his actions. The orthodox Mohammedans who receive the Sunnah call themselves Sunnites, in distinction to the various sects comprehended under the name of Shiites.

SUN'NED, pp. Exposed to the sun's rays.

SUN'NIAH, n. A name of the sect of Sunnites. [See SUNNAH.]

SUN'NINESS, n. State of being sunny.

The female is said to superfetate. Grew.
SUPERFETATION, or SUPERFŒTATION, n. A second conception after a prior one, and before the birth of the first, by which two fetuses are growing at once in the same womb, as in the case of hares and rabbits. The possibility of superfetation in females of the human species, is a matter of controversy among physiologists and medical juriconsults. Examples of superfetation are said to have been found amongst vegetables.

SUPERFETE, v. i. To superfetate. [Little used.]

SUPERFETE, v. t. To conceive after a former conception. [Little used.]

SUPERFICE, n. Superficies; surface. [Little used.] [See SUPERFICIES.]

SUPERFICIAL, a. [It. superficial; Sp. superficial; Fr. superficiel; from superficies.] 1. Being on the surface; not penetrating the substance of a thing; as, a superficial colour; a superficial covering.—2. Composing the surface or exterior part; as, soil constitutes the superficial part of the earth.—3. Shallow; contrived to cover something.

This superficial tale

Is but a preface to her worthy praise. Shak.
4. Shallow; not deep or profound; reaching or comprehending only what is obvious or apparent; as, a superficial scholar; superficial knowledge.—Superficial content of any body, the number of square inches, feet, &c., contained in its surface.—Superficial measure, square measure. [See MEASURE, SQUARE.]

SUPERFICIALIST, n. One of superficial attainments.

SUPERFICIALITY, n. The quality of being superficial. [Not much used.]

SUPERFICIALLY, adv. On the surface only; as, a substance superficially tinged with a colour.—2. On the surface or exterior part only; without penetrating the substance or essence; as, to survey things superficially.—3. Without going deep or searching things to the bottom; slightly. He reasons superficially.

I have laid down superficially my present thoughts. Dryden.

SUPERFICIALNESS, n. Shallowness; position on the surface.—2. Slight knowledge; shallowness of observation or learning; show without substance.

SUPERFICIALRY, n. In law, one who pays the quit-rent of a house built on another man's ground.

SUPERFICIALS, n. [L. from super, upon, and facies, face.] The surface; the exterior part of a thing. A superficies consists of length and breadth without thickness, and therefore forms no part of the substance or solid content of a body; as, the superficies of a plate or of a sphere. Superficies is rectilinear, curvilinear, plane, convex, or concave. [See these terms, and also SURFACE.]

SUPERFINE, a. [super and fine.] Very fine or most fine; surpassing others in fineness; as, superfine cloth. The word is chiefly used of cloth, but sometimes of liquors; as, superfine wine or cider; and of other things, as superfine wire; superfine flour.

SUPERFINE'NESS, n. Quality of being superfine.

SUPERFLUENCE, n. [L. super and fluo, to flow.] Superfluity; more than is necessary. [Little used.]

SUPERFLUTANCE, n. [L. super and fluito, to float.] The act of floating above or on the surface. [Little used.]

SUPERFLUTANT, a. Floating above or on the surface. [Little used.]

SUPERFLUITY, n. [Fr. superfluité; It. superfluità; L. superfluitas; super and fluo, to flow.] 1. Superabundance; a greater quantity than is wanted; as, a superfluity of water or provisions.—2. Something that is beyond what is wanted; something rendered unnecessary by its abundance. Among the superfluities of life we seldom number the abundance of money.

SUPERFLUOUS, a. [L. superfluo, overflowing; super and fluo, to flow.] 1. More than is wanted; rendered unnecessary by superabundance; as, a superfluous supply of corn.—2. More than sufficient; unnecessary; useless; as, a composition abounding with superfluous words. Superfluous epithets rather enfeeble than strengthen description. If what has been said will not convince, it would be superfluous to say more.—Superfluous interval, in music, is one that exceeds a true diatonic interval by a semitone minor.—Superfluous polygamy, (Polygamia superflua), a kind of inflorescence or compound flower, in which the florets of the disk are hermaphrodite and fertile, and those of the ray, though female or pistilliferous only, are also fertile; designating the second order of the class Syngenesia of Linnæus.—Superfluous sound or tone, is one which contains a semitone minor more than a tone.

SUPERFLUOUSLY, adv. With excess; in a degree beyond what is necessary.

SUPERFLUOUSNESS, n. The state of being superfluous or beyond what is wanted.

SUPERFLUX, n. [L. super and fluxus.] That which is more than is wanted. [Little used.]

SUPERFOLIATION, n. [super and foliation.] Excess of foliation.

SUPERHUMAN, a. [super and human.] Above or beyond what is human; divine.

SUPERIMPENDING, ppr. Hanging over; threatening from above.

SUPERIMPOSE, v. t. (superimpo'ze) [super and impose.] To lay or impose on something else; as, a stratum of earth superimposed on a different stratum.

SUPERIMPOSED, pp. Laid or imposed on something.

SUPERIMPOSING, ppr. Laying on something else.

SUPERIMPOSITION, n. The act of laying or the state of being placed on something else.

SUPERIMPREGNATION, n. [super and impregnation.] The act of impregnating upon a prior impregnation; impregnation when previously impregnated.

SUPERINCUMBENCY, } n. State of SUPERINCUMBENCE, } lying upon something.

SUPERINCUMBENT, a. [super and incumbent.] Lying or resting on something else; as, a superincumbent bed or stratum.

SUPERINDUCE, v. t. [super and induce.] To bring in or upon as an addition to something; as, to superinduce a virtue or quality upon a person not before possessing it.

Long custom of sinning superinduces upon the soul new and absurd desires.

South.

SUPERINDUCED, pp. Induced or brought upon something.

SUPERINDUCEMENT, n. Act of superinducing.

SUPERINDUCING, ppr. Inducing on something else.

SUPERINDUCITION, n. The act of superinducing.

The superinduction of ill habits quickly defaces the first rude draught of virtue.

South.

SUPERINFUSE, v. t. To infuse over.

SUPERINJECTION, n. [super and injection.] An injection succeeding another.

SUPERINSPECT, v. t. [super and inspect.] To oversee; to superintend by inspection. [Little used.]

SUPERINSTITUTION, n. [super and institution.] One institution upon another; as when A. is instituted and admitted to a benefice upon a title, and B. is instituted and admitted upon the presentation of another.

SUPERINTELLECTUAL, a. [super and intellectual.] Being above intellect.

SUPERINTEND, v. t. [super and tend.] To have or exercise the charge and oversight of; to oversee with the power of direction; to take care of with authority; as, an officer superintends the building of a ship or the construction of a fort. God exercises a superintending care over all his creatures.

SUPERINTENDED, pp. Overseen; taken care of.

SUPERINTENDENCE, } n. The act
SUPERINTENDENCY, } of superintending; care and oversight for the purpose of direction, and with authority to direct.

SUPERINTENDENT, n. One who has the oversight and charge of something, with the power of direction; as, the superintendent of an alms-house or work-house; the superintendent of public works; the superintendent of customs or finance.—2. An ecclesiastical superior in some reformed churches. In the Church of Scotland, superintendents were persons chosen immediately after the reformation, to watch over the conduct of the parochial clergy, and to attend to the affairs of the church. They were appointed in place of the bishops, but were discontinued after the church had been regularly organized.

SUPERINTENDER, n. A superintendent.

SUPERINTENDING, ppr. Overseeing with the authority to direct what shall be done and how it shall be done.

SUPERINVESTITURE, n. An upper vest or garment.

SUPERIOR, a. [Sp. and L. from super, above; Fr. superieur.] 1. Higher; upper; more elevated in place; as, the superior limb of the sun; the superior part of an image.—2. Higher in rank or office; more exalted in dignity; as, a superior officer; a superior degree of nobility.—3. Higher or greater in excellence; surpassing others in the greatness, goodness, or value of any quality; as, a man of superior merit, of superior bravery, of superior talents or understanding, of superior accomplishments.—4. Being beyond the power or influence of; too great or firm to be subdued or affected by; as, a man superior to revenge.

There is not on earth a spectacle more worthy than a great man superior to his sufferings. Spectator.

5. In bot., a superior ovary is one that is situated above the perianth, as in the hyacinth and tulip.—Superior courts, in England, the courts of law and equity, ecclesiastical, maritime, prize or international courts, and courts of appeal and error. The superior courts of law are the court of king's bench, of common pleas, and of the exchequer. The superior courts of equity are the high court of chancery, the rolls court, and the court of the vice-chancellor of England; all these are located in the metropolis. In Scotland, the superior courts are the court of session and the court of exchequer.—Superior planets, an epithet applied to those planets which are more distant from the sun than the earth, as, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Herschel, and Neptune.

SUPERIOR, n. One who is more advanced in age. Old persons or elders are the superiors of the young.—2. One who is more elevated in rank or office.—3. One who surpasses others in dignity, excellence, or qualities of any kind. As a writer of pure English, Addison has no superior.—4. The chief of a monastery, convent, or abbey.—5. In Scots law, one who has made an original grant of heritable property, on condition that the grantee, termed the vassal, shall annually pay to him a certain sum or perform certain services.

SUPERIORITY, n. Pre-eminence; the quality of being more advanced or higher, greater or more excellent than another in any respect; as, superiority of age, of rank or dignity, of attainments or excellence. The superiority of others in fortune and rank, is more readily acknowledged than superiority of understanding.—2. In Scots law, the right which the superior enjoys in the land held by the vassal. It is not a right of use in the lands, but only a right to the civil rights of feu duty, and other services stipulated in the grant, and to the casualties which are by law given to a superior. The right of the superior is technically called dominium directum, and the interest which the vassal enjoys in the land is called dominium utile, and also fee or property. By the law of Scotland, the sovereign is overlord or superior of all the lands in the kingdom; but a person holding lands under the sovereign as superior may convey them to another, to be held under himself as superior; and in general a proprietor of land may convey the same to be held under himself as superior.

SUPERLATION, n. [L. superlatio.] Exaltation of anything beyond truth or propriety.

SUPERLATIVE, a. [Fr. superlatif; L. superlatus; super and latus, latus, fero.] 1. Highest in degree; most eminent; surpassing all other; as, a man of superlative wisdom or prudence, of superlative worth; a woman of superlative beauty.—2. Supreme; as, the superlative glory of the divine character.—3. In gram., expressing the highest or utmost degree of something; as, the superlative degree of comparison.

SUPERLATIVE, n. In gram., the superlative degree of adjectives, which is formed by the termination est, as meanest, highest, bravest; or by the use of most, as most high, most brave; or by least, as least amiable.

SUPERLATIVELY, adv. In a manner expressing the utmost degree.

I shall not speak superlatively of them.

Bacon.

2. In the highest or utmost degree. Tiberius was superlatively wicked; Clodius was superlatively profligate.

SUPERLATIVENESS, n. The state of being in the highest degree.

SUPERLUNAR, } a. [L. super and SUPERLUNARY, } luna, the moon.] Being above the moon; not sublunary or of this world.

The head that turns at superlunar things.

Pope.

SUPERMEDIAL, a. Lying or being above the middle.

SUPERMOLECULE, n. A compounded molecule or combination of two molecules of different substances.

SUPERMUNDANE, a. [super and mundane.] Being above the world.

SUPERNA'ULUM, n. [L. super and G. nagel, a nail.] Good liquor, of which not enough is left to wet one's nail. [Local.]

SUPERNAL, a. [L. supernus, super.] 1. Being in a higher place or region; locally higher; as, the supernal orbs; supernal regions.—2. Relating to things above; celestial; heavenly; as, supernal grace.

Not by the sufferings of supernal pow'r.

Milton.

SUPERNA'TANT, a. [L. supernatus, supernato; super and nato, to swim.] Swimming above; floating on the surface; as, oil supernatant on water; supernatant leaves.

SUPERNATA'TION, n. The act of floating on the surface of a fluid.

SUPERNATURAL, a. [super and natural.] Being beyond or exceeding the powers or laws of nature; miraculous. A supernatural event is one which is not produced according to the ordinary or established laws of natural things. Thus if iron has more specific gravity than water, it will sink in that fluid; and the floating of iron on water must be a supernatural event. Now no human being can alter a law of nature; the floating of iron on water therefore must be caused by divine power specially exerted to suspend, in this instance, a law of nature. Hence, supernatural events or miracles can be produced only by the immediate agency of divine power.

SUPERNATURALISM, n. The state of being supernatural.—2. A term used chiefly in German theology, in contradistinction to rationalism. In its widest extent, supernaturalism is the doctrine that religion and the knowledge of God require a revelation from God. It considers the Christian religion as an extraordinary phenomenon, out of the circle of natural events, and as communicating truths above the comprehension of human reason. [See RATIONALISM.]

SUPERNATURALIST, n. One who upholds the principles of supernaturalism.

SUPERNATURALISTIC, a. Relating to supernaturalism.

SUPERNATURALISTS, n. In Germany, a name given to those who hold the doctrine of supernaturalism. They may be regarded as a middle party between the evangelicals and rationalists. SUPERNATURALLY, adv. In a manner exceeding the established course or laws of nature. The prophets must have been supernaturally taught or enlightened, for their predictions were beyond human foreknowledge.

SUPERNATURALNESS, n. The state or quality of being beyond the power or ordinary laws of nature.

SUPERNUMERARY, a. [Fr. supernumeraire; L. super and numerus, number.] 1. Exceeding the number stated or prescribed; as, a supernumerary officer in a regiment; a supernumerary canon in the church.—2. Exceeding a necessary, a usual or a round number; as, supernumerary addresses; supernumerary expense.

SUPERNUMERARY, n. A person or thing beyond the number stated, or beyond what is necessary or usual.—2. In milit. affairs, supernumeraries are the officers and non-commissioned officers, attached to a regiment for the purpose of supplying the places of such as fall in action, &c. On the reduction of the regiments, several supernumeraries were to be provided for.

SUPEROXIDE, n. An oxide containing more equivalents of oxide than of the base with which it is combined; a hyperoxide.

SUPERPARTICULAR, † a. [super and particular.] Noting a ratio when the excess of the greater term is a unit; as the ratio of 1 to 2, or of 3 to 4.

SUPERPARTIENT, † a. [L. super and partio.] Noting a ratio when the excess of the greater term is more than a unit; as that of 3 to 5, or of 7 to 10.

SUPERPLANT, † n. [super and plant.] A plant growing on another plant; as the misletoe. [We now use parasite and epiphyte.]

SUPERPLUS. See SURPLUS.

SUPERPLUSAGE, n. [L. super and plus.] That which is more than enough; excess. [We now use surplusage, which see.]

SUPERPONDERATE, † v. t. [L. super and pondero.] To weigh over and above.

SUPERPOSE, v. t. (superpo'ze.) [super and Fr. poser, to lay.] To lay upon, as one kind of rock on another.

SUPERPOSED, pp. Laid or being upon something.

SUPERPOSING, ppr. Placing upon something.

SUPERPOSITION, n. [super and positio.] A placing above; a lying or being situated above or upon something.—2. In geol., the order in which mineral masses are placed upon or above each other; as more recent strata upon those that are older; secondary rocks upon primary, tertiary upon secondary, &c. Stratified rocks in their arrangement observe a certain order of superposition, unless where volcanic agency has disturbed the arrangement, by forcing up rocks from below, and throwing them as it were upon those which in the usual order of superposition would be above them. [See STRATA.]—3. That which is situated above or upon something else.

SUPERPRAISE, v. i. (su'perpraze.) To praise to excess.

SUPERPROPORTION, n. [super and proportio.] Overplus of proportion.

SUPERPURGATION, n. [super and purgatio.] More purgation than is sufficient.

SUPERREFLECTION, n. [super and reflection.] The reflection of an image reflected.

SUPER-REG'AL, a. More than regal.
SUPERREWARD', v. t. To reward to excess.

SUPERROY'AL, a. [super and royal.] Larger than royal, the name of a large species of printing paper.

SUPERSA'LIENCY, n. [L. super and salio, to leap.] The act of leaping on anything. [Little used.] SUPERSA'LIENT, a. Leaping upon.

SUPERSALT, n. In chem., a salt with a greater number of equivalents of acid than base, opposed to subsalt. Chemists, however, now usually prefix a numeral to such a salt to indicate its composition. Thus a salt consisting of two equivalents of oxalic acid, and one of potassa, is termed binoxalate of potassa; and when four equivalents of the same acid are united with one of potassa, the salt is termed quadroxalate of potassa. Also, the two salts of sulphuric acid and potassa are called sulphate and bisulphate, the first containing an equivalent of the acid and alkali, and the second two equivalents of the acid and one of the alkali.

SUPERSAT'URATE, v. t. [L. super and saturō.] To add to beyond saturation.

SUPERSAT'URATED, pp. More than saturated.

SUPERSAT'URATING, ppr. More than saturating; filling to excess.

SUPERSATURA'TION, n. The operation of adding beyond saturation, or the state of being thus supersaturated.

SUPERSCAP'ULAR, a. [L. super and scapula, the shoulder-blade.] Situated above the shoulder-blade, as the superscapular muscles.

SUPERSCRIBE, v. t. [L. super and scribo, to write.] To write or engrave on the top, outside, or surface; or to write the name or address of one on the outside or cover; as, to superscribe a letter.

SUPERSCRIBED, pp. Inscribed on the outside.

SUPERSCRIBING, ppr. Inscribing, writing, or engraving on the outside, or on the top.

SUPERSCRIPT, † n. Superscription.

SUPERSCRIPTION, n. The act of superscribing.—2. That which is written or engraved on the outside, or above something else.

The superscription of his accusation was written over, the king of the Jews; Mark xv.; Luke xxiii.

3. An impression of letters on coins; Matt. xxii.

SUPERSECU'LAR, a. [super and secular.] Being above the world or secular things.

SUPERSEDE, v. t. [L. supersedeo; super and sedeo, to sit.] 1. Literally, to set above; hence, to make void, inefficacious, or useless by superior power, or by coming in the place of; to set aside; to render unnecessary; to suspend. The use of artillery in making breaches in walls, has superseded the use of the battering ram. The effect of passion is to supersede the workings of reason.

Nothing is supposed that can supersede the known laws of natural motion. Bentley.
2. To come or be placed in the room of; hence, to displace or render unnecessary; as, an officer is superseded by the appointment of another person.

SUPERSEDEAS, n. In law, a writ of supersedeas is a writ or command to suspend the powers of an officer in certain cases, or to stay proceedings; as, to stay an execution after a writ of error has been allowed, and bail put in; or to set aside erroneous judicial processes, &c. In bankruptcy, it is the writ used for the purpose of superseding the fiat. In its more general sense, the term is used to express that which stays legal proceedings, although no writ of supersedeas may have been used for that purpose.

SUPERSEDED, pp. Made void; rendered unnecessary or inefficacious; displaced; suspended.

SUPERSEDE'RE. [L. supersedeo.] In Scots law, a term used in two significations. It is either a private agreement amongst creditors under a trustee and accession, that they will supersede or sist diligence for a certain period; or it is a judicial act by which the court, where it sees cause, grants a debtor protection against diligence, without consent of the creditors.

SUPERSEDING, ppr. Coming in the place of; setting aside; rendering useless; displacing; suspending.

SUPERSEN'SIBLE, a. Beyond the reach of the senses; above the natural powers of perception.

SUPERSEN'SUAL, a. Above the senses.

SUPERSERVICEABLE, † a. [super and serviceable.] Over officious; doing more than is required or desired.

SUPERSESS'ION, n. The act of superseding.—2. The act of sitting upon anything.

SUPERSTI'TION, n. [Fr. from L. superstitiō, superstio; super and sto, to stand.] 1. Absurd opinions and actions, arising from mean and defective ideas of the moral attributes of God. It respects God and beings superior to man, and extends to our religious opinions, worship, and practices. It displays itself in excessive exactness or rigour in religious opinions or practice; extreme and unnecessary scruples in the observance of religious rites not commanded, or of points of minor importance; excess or extravagance in religion; the doing of things not required by God, or abstaining from things not forbidden; or the belief of what is absurd, or belief without evidence. We apply the word superstition to the idolatry of the heathens; we apply it also to the Jews, who made the will of God of no effect by their traditions, and substituted ceremonies in place of the religion of their fathers. It is applied to the unscriptural opinions, rites, and ceremonies of the Roman catholics; and to those protestants who esteem baptism and the Lord's Supper, and the punctual observance of other ceremonies, without regard to morality, as sufficient to ensure salvation. Those persons are also reckoned superstitious who believe, without any evidence, that prophecies are still uttered by divine inspiration, and that miracles are still performed. The word is also extended to those who believe in witchcraft, magic, and apparitions, or that the divine will is declared by omens, or augury; that the fortune of individuals can be affected by things indifferent, by things deemed lucky or unlucky, or that diseases can be cured by words, charms, or incantations.—2. False religion; false worship.—3. A rite or practice proceeding from excess of scruples in religion. In this sense, it admits of a plural.

They the truth
With superstitions and traditions taint.
Milton.

4. Excessive nicety; scrupulous exactness.—5. Belief in the direct agency of superior powers in certain extraordinary or singular events, or in omens and prognostics.

SUPERSTI'TIONIST, n. One addicted to superstition.

SUPERSTI'TIOUS, a. [Fr. superstiteux; L. superstitiosus.] 1. Over scrupulous and rigid in religious observances; addicted to superstition; full of idle fancies and scruples in regard to religion; as, superstitious people.—2. Proceeding from superstition; manifesting superstition; as, superstitious rites; superstitious observances.—3. Over exact; scrupulous beyond need.—Superstitious use, in law, the use of land for a religious purpose, or by a religious corporation.

SUPERSTI'TIOUSLY, adv. In a superstitious manner; with excessive regard to uncommanded rites or unessential opinions and forms in religion.—2. With too much care; with excessive exactness or scruple.—3. With extreme credulity in regard to the agency of superior beings in extraordinary events.

SUPERSTI'TIOUSNESS, n. Superstition.

SUPERSTRAIN, v. t. [super and strain.] To overstrain or stretch. [Little used.]

SUPERSTRAINED, pp. Overstrained or stretched.

SUPERSTRATUM, n. [super and stratum.] A stratum or layer above another, or resting on something else.

SUPERSTRUC'T, v. t. [L. superstruo; super and struo, to lay.] To build upon; to erect.

This is the only proper basis on which to superstruct first innocence and then virtue. [Little used.] Decay of Piety.

SUPERSTRUC'TED, pp. Built upon.

SUPERSTRUC'TING, ppr. Building upon.

SUPERSTRUC'TION, n. An edifice erected on something.

My own profession hath taught me not to erect new superstructions on an old ruin. Denham.

SUPERSTRUC'TIVE, a. Built or erected on something else.

SUPERSTRUC'TURE, n. Any structure or edifice built on something else; particularly, the building raised on a foundation. This word is used to distinguish what is erected on a wall or foundation from the foundation itself.

—2. Anything erected on a foundation or basis. In education, we begin with teaching languages as the foundation, and proceed to erect on that foundation the superstructure of science.

SUPERSUBSTANTIAL, a. [super and substantial.] More than substantial; being more than substance.

SUPERSUBTLE, a. Over subtle.

SUPERsul'PHATE, n. Sulphate with a greater number of equivalents of acid than base. [See SUBSALT.]

SUPERsul'PHURETTED, a. Consisting of a greater number of equivalents of sulphur than of the base with which the sulphur is combined.

SUPERTERRENE, a. [super and terrene.] Being above ground, or above the earth.

SUPERTERRES'TRIAL, a. Being above the earth, or above what belongs to the earth.

SUPERTON'IC, n. In music, the note next above the key-note.

SUPERTRAG'ICAL, a. Tragical to excess.

SUPERVACA'NEOUS, a. [L. supervacaneus; super and vaco, to make void.] Superfluous; unnecessary; needless; serving no purpose.

SUPERVACA'NEOUSLY, adv. Needlessly.

SUPERVACA'NEOUSNESS, n. Needlessness.

SUPERVENE, v. i. [L. supervenio; super and venio.] 1. To come upon as something extraneous.

Such a mutual gravitation can never super-vene to matter, unless impressed by divine power. Bentley.

2. To come upon; to happen to.

SUPERVENIENT, a. Coming upon as something additional or extraneous.

That branch of belief was in him super-venient to Christian practice. Hammond.

Divorces can be granted, a mensa et toro, only for supervenient causes. Z. Swift.

SUPERVEN'TION, n. The act of supervening.

SUPERVIS'AL, } (supervi'zal, su-SUPERVIS'ION, } *pervizl'*on.) [from supervise.] The act of overseeing; inspection; superintendence.

SUPERVISE, } n. (supervi'ze.) Inspection.

SUPERVISE, v. t. [L. super and visus, video, to see.] To oversee for direction; to superintend; to inspect; as, to supervise the press for correction.

SUPERVISED, pp. Inspected.

SUPERVISING, ppr. Overseeing; inspecting; superintending.

SUPERVISOR, n. An overseer; an inspector; a superintendent; as, the supervisor of a pamphlet; a supervisor of the customs or of the excise.

SUPERVIS'ORY, a. Pertaining to or having supervision.

SUPERVIVE, v. t. [L. super and vivo, to live.] To live beyond; to outlive.

The soul will supervive all the revolutions of nature. [Little used.] [See SURVIVE.]

SUPINA'TION, n. [L. supino.] 1. The act of lying, or state of being laid with the face upward.—2. The act of turning the palm of the hand upward.

SUPINA'TORS, n. [L. supino, to lay with the face upwards.] In anat., a name given to those muscles which turn the hand upwards, as the supinator longus and the supinator brevis.

SUPINE, a. [L. supinus.] 1. Lying on the back, or with the face upward; opposed to prone.—2. Leaning backward; or inclining with exposure to the sun.

If the vine

On rising ground be plac'd on hills supine. Dryden.

3. Negligent; heedless; indolent; thoughtless; inattentive.

He became pusillanimous and supine, and openly exposed to any temptation.

Woodward.

These men suffer by their supine credulity. K. Charles.

SUP'INE, n. [L. supinum.] In Latin grammar, part of the conjugation of a verb, being a verbal substantive of the singular number and the fourth declension. There are two kinds of supines; one called the first supine, ending in um of the accusative case, which is always of an active signification, and follows a verb of motion; as, abiit deambulatum, he has gone to walk; the other, called the last supine, and ending in u of the ablative case, is of a passive signification, and is governed by substantives or adjectives; as, facile dictu, easy to be told.

SUPINELY, adv. With the face upward.

—2. Carelessly; indolently; drowsily; in a heedless, thoughtless state.

Who on beds of sin supinely lie. Sandys.

SUPINENESS, n. A lying with the face upward.—2. Indolence; drowsiness; heedlessness. Many of the evils of life are owing to our own supineness.

SUPINITY, ppr. For Supineness, is not used.

SUP'PAGE, } n. [from sup.] What may be

SUP'PER, n. [Fr. souper. See SUP.] The evening meal. People who dine late, eat no supper.

The dinner of fashionable people would be the supper of rustics.—Lord's supper, the eucharist, the sacrament ordained by Christ in his church, of which the outward part is bread and wine, and the inward part or thing signified is the body and blood of Christ.

SUPPERLESS, a. Wanting supper; being without supper; as, to go super-less to bed.

SUPPER-TIME, n. The time when supper is taken; evening.

SUPPLANT, v. t. [Fr. supplanter; L. supplantio; sub and planta, the bottom of the foot.] 1. To trip up the heels.

Supplanted down he fell. Milton.

2. To remove or displace by stratagem; or to displace and take the place of; as, a rival supplants another in the affections of his mistress, or in the favour of his prince.

Suspecting that the courtier had supplanted the friend. Fell.

3. To overthrow; to undermine.

SUPPLANTA'TION, n. The act of supplanting.

SUPPLANT'ED, pp. Tripped up; displaced.

SUPPLANT'ER, n. One that supplants.

SUPPLANT'ING, ppr. Tripping up the heels; displacing by artifice.

SUP'PLE, a. [Fr. souple; Arm. soublat, soublein, to bend.] 1. Pliant; flexible; easily bent; as, supple joints; supple fingers.—2. Yielding; compliant; not obstinate.

If punishment makes not the will supple, it hardens the offender. Locke.

3. Bending to the humour of others; flattering; fawning.—4. That makes pliant; as, supple government.

SUP'PLED, pp. Made soft and pliant; made compliant.

SUP'PLELY, adv. Softly; pliantly; mildly.

SUPPLEMENT, n. [Fr. from L. sup-plementum, suppleo; sub and pleo, to fill.] 1. Literally, a supply; hence, an addition to any thing, by which its defects are supplied, and it is made more full and complete. The word is particularly used of an addition to a book or paper.—2.† Store; supply.—3. In trigonometry and geometry, the quantity by which an arc or an angle falls short of 180 degrees or a semicircle; or it is what must be added to an arc or angle in order to make a semicircle or two right angles. Hence, two angles which are together equal to two right angles, or two arcs which are together equal to a semicircle, are the supplements of each other. Thus, in the figure, the angle

BCE is the supplement of the angle BCA, and BCA is the supplement of BCE; also, the arc EB is the supplement of the arc BA, and BA is the supplement of EB. Hence, when an angle is expressed in degrees, minutes, and seconds, its supplement is found by subtracting the degrees, minutes, and seconds from 180°. —Letters of supplement, in Scots law, letters obtained on a warrant from the court of session, where a party is to be sued before an inferior court, and does not reside within its jurisdiction. In virtue of these letters the party may be cited to appear before the inferior judge. They run in the sovereign's name; they recite the ground of action, the reason why it should proceed before the inferior judge, and contain a warrant addressed to messengers-at-arms, as sheriffs in that part, ordering them to cite the defender.—Oath in supplement, in Scots law, an oath allowed to be given by a party in his own favour, after establishing a semiplena probatio, that is, something less than a proof, and more than a suspicion; as when a merchant, who proves by the oath of one witness that furnishings have been made, is allowed to prove the particulars and prices by his own oath in supplement.

SUPPLEMENT, v. t. To add something to a writing, &c.

SUPPLEMENT'AL, } a. Additional;
SUPPLEMENT'ARY, } added to supply what is wanted; as, a supplemental law or bill.—Supplementary summons. In Scots law, a summons raised in an action where all the parties interested have not been called, or where the original summons requires amendment, and the defender has not appeared.—Supplemental arcs in trigonometry, arcs of a circle or other curve which have a common extremity, and together subtend an angle of 180° or two right angles at the centre. Thus, in the figure under Supplement, A B and B E are supplemental arcs. Also the chords of such arcs are termed supplemental chords.

SUPPLEMENTING, ppr. Adding a supplement.

SUP'PLENESS, n. [from supple.] Pliancy; pliability; flexibility; the quality of being easily bent; as, the suppleness of the joints.—2. Readiness of compliance; the quality of easily yielding; facility; as, the suppleness of the will.

919

SUPPLICATINGLY, adv. By way of supplication.

SUPPLICATION, n. [Fr. from L. supplicatio.] 1. Entreaty; humble and earnest prayer in worship. In all our supplications to the Father of mercies, let us remember a world lying in ignorance and wickedness.—2. Petition; earnest request.—3. In Roman antiquity, a religious solemnity observed in consequence of some military success. It consisted in sacrifices, feasting, offering thanks, and praying for a continuance of success.

SUPPLICATOR, † n. One who supplicates.

SUPPLICATORY, a. Containing supplication; dryden; submissive.

SUPPLICAVIT, [L.] In law, a writ issuing out of the king's (queen's) bench or chancery, for taking the surety of the peace against a man, when one is in danger of being hurt in the body by another.

SUPPLIED, pp. [from supply.] Fully furnished; having a sufficiency.

SUPPLIER, n. He that supplies.

SUPPLIES, n. plur. Things supplied in sufficiency. In politics, the sums granted by parliament for defraying the public expenditure for the current year. The known or probable amount of the different branches of the year's expenses is stated to the house of commons, in a committee of supply, by the chancellor of the exchequer. And after they have been voted by the committee, they are formally granted by an act of parliament. The granting of the annual supplies is one of the peculiar privileges of the house of commons, and the bills passed for this purpose cannot be altered or amended by the house of lords. In com., quantities of goods, provisions, &c., imported or brought into market; as supplies of cotton; supplies of grain. In this sense used also in the singular.

SUPPLY, v. t. [L. suppleo; sub and pleo, disused, to fill; Fr. suppleer.] 1. To fill up; as any deficiency happens; to furnish what is wanted; to afford or furnish a sufficiency; as, to supply the poor with bread and clothing; to supply the daily wants of nature; to supply the navy with masts and spars; to supply the treasury with money. The city is well supplied with water.

I wanted nothing fortune could supply. Dryden.

2. To serve instead of.

3. To give; to bring or furnish.
Nearer care supplies
Sighs to my breast, and sorrow to my eyes. Prior.

4. To fill vacant room.
The sun was set, and Vesper, to supply
His absent beams, had lighted up the sky. Dryden.

5. To fill; as, to supply a vacancy.

6. In general, to furnish; to give or afford what is wanted.

Modern infidelity supplies no such motives. Rob. Hall.

SUPPLY, n. Sufficiency of things for use or want. The poor have a daily supply of food; the army has ample supplies of provisions and munitions of war. Customs, taxes, and excise constitute the supplies of revenue.—2. In parliamentary lan., and com. [See SUPPLIES.]—Commissioners of supply. [See COMMISSIONER.]

SUPPLY'ANT, † a. Auxiliary; supplementary.

SUPPLY'ING, ppr. Yielding or furnishing what is wanted; affording a sufficiency.

SUPPLY'MENT, † n. A furnishing.

SUPPORT, v. t. [Fr. supporter; It. supportare; L. supporto; sub and porto, to carry.] 1. To bear; to sustain; to uphold; as, a prop or pillar supports a structure; an abutment supports an arch; the stem of a tree supports the branches. Every edifice must have a foundation to support it; a rope or cord supports a weight.—2. To endure without being overcome; as, to support pain, distress, or misfortunes.

This fierce demeanour and his insolence, The patience of a God could not support. Dryden.

4. A maintainer; a defender. Worthy supporters of such a reigning impiety. South.

5. One who maintains or helps to carry on; as, the supporters of a war.—6. An advocate; a defender; a vindicator; as, the supporters of religion, morality, justice, &c.—7. An adherent; one who takes part; as, the supporter of a party or faction.—8. One who sits by or walks with another, on some public occasion, as an aid or attendant.—9. In ship-building, a knee placed under the cat-head.—10. Supporters, in her., those figures which are placed on each side of the shield of arms, of sovereigns, noblemen, knights of the garter, bath, bannerets, &c., and appear to support the shield. The origin of supporters is not well ascertained, but the most probable opinion seems to be that they are a comparatively modern invention, or ornamental addition by painters and limners. No person under the rank of a banneret is now allowed the honour of supporters. In the arms of the city of Glasgow, salmon are the supporters.—11. In arch., supporters are images which serve to bear up any part of a building in the place of columns.

Arms of the City of Glasgow.

SUPPOSAL, n. [from suppose.] Position.

tion without proof; the imagining of something to exist; supposition.

Interest, with a Jew, never proceeds but upon supposal at least, of a firm and sufficient bottom. † South.

SUPPOSE, v. t. [suppo'ze.] [Fr. supposer; L. suppositus, suppono; sub and pono, to put.] 1. To lay down without proof, or state as a proposition or fact that may exist or be true, though not known or believed to be true or to exist; or to imagine or admit to exist, for the sake of argument or illustration. Let us suppose the earth to be the centre of the system, what would be the consequence?

When we have as great assurance that a thing is, as we could possibly, supposing it were, we ought not to doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

2. To imagine; to admit without proof; to believe without examination; to receive as true.

Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the young men, the king's sons; for Amnon only is dead; 2 Sam. xiii.

3. To imagine; to think.

If our proposals once again were heard... Milton.

4. To require to exist or be true. The existence of things supposes the existence of a cause of the things.

One falsehood supposes another, and renders all you say suspected. Female Quixote.

5. † To put one thing by fraud in the place of another.

SUPPOSE, n. Supposition; position without proof.

Fit to be trusted on a bare suppose that she is honest. † Dryden.

SUPPOSED, pp. Laid down or imagined as true; imagined; believed; received as true.—Supposed bass, in music, the bass of a chord when it is not the root of the common chord, as the bass note E or G taken with the chord of C.

SUPPOSER, n. One who supposes.

SUPPOSING, ppr. Laying down or imagining to exist or be true; stating as a case that which may be; imagining; receiving as true.

SUPPOSITION, n. The act of laying down, imagining or admitting as true or existing, what is known not to be true or what is not proved.—2. The position of something known not to be true or not proved; hypothesis.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

3. Imagination; belief without full evidence.—4. In music, a term borrowed from the French, and used to signify the use of discords followed by concords.

SUPPOSIT'IONAL, a. Hypothetical.

SUPPOSIT'IOUS, a. [L. suppositivus, from suppositus, suppono.] Put by trick in the place or character belonging to another; not genuine; as a supposititious child; a supposititious writing.

SUPPOSIT'IOUSLY, adv. Hypothetically; by supposition.

SUPPOSIT'IOUSNESS, n. The state of being supposititious.

SUPPOSITIVE, a. Supposed; including or implying supposition.

SUPPOSITIVE, n. [supra.] A word denoting or implying supposition.

SUPPOSITIVELY, adv. With, by, or upon supposition.

SUPPOSITORY, n. [Fr. suppositoire.]

In med., a body introduced into the rectum, there to remain and dissolve gradually, in order to procure stools when clusters cannot be administered.

SUPPOS'URE, † n. Supposition; hypothesis.

SUPPRESS, v. t. [L. suppressus, supprimo; sub and premo, to press.] 1. To overpower and crush; to subdue; to destroy; as, to suppress a rebellion; to suppress a mutiny or riot; to suppress opposition.

Every rebellion, when it is suppressed, makes the subject weaker and the government stronger. Davies.

2. To keep in; to restrain from utterance or vent; as, to suppress the voice; to suppress sighs.—3. To retain without disclosure; to conceal; not to tell or reveal; as, to suppress evidence.

SUPPUTE, † v. t. [L. supputo, supra.] To reckon; to compute.

SUPRA, a Latin preposition, signifying above, over, or beyond, and used as a prefix.

SUPRA-AX'ILLARY, a. [supra and axil.] In bot., growing above the axil; inserted above the axil; as a peduncle. [See SUPRAFOLIACEOUS.]

SUPRACIL'IARY, a. [L. supra and cilium, eyebrow.] Situated above the eyebrow.

SUPRA-CRETA'CEOUS, a. [L. supra and cretaceus, chalky.] In geol., a term applied to certain deposits lying above the chalk, or of more recent origin than the chalk formation. Supracretaceous rocks and strata, are synonymous with tertiary rocks and strata.

SUPRA-DECOM'POUND, a. [supra and decompound.] More than decompound; thrice compound. A supra-decompound leaf, is when a petiole, divided several times, connects many leaflets; each part forming a decompound leaf.

SUPRAFOLIA'CEOUS, a. [L. supra and folium, a leaf.] In bot., inserted into the stem above the leaf or petiole, or axil, as a peduncle or flower.

SUPRALAPSA'RIAN, a. [L. supra and lapsus, fall.] Antecedent to the apostasy of Adam.

SUPRALAPSA'RIAN, n. One who maintains that God, antecedent to the fall of man or any knowledge of it, decreed the apostasy and all its consequences, determining to save some and condemn others, and that in all he does he considers his own glory only.

SUPRALAP'SARY, n. or a. Supralapsarian.

SUPRAMUND'ANE, a. [L. supra and mundus, the world.] Being or situated above the world or above our system.

SUPRASCAP'ULARY, a. [L. supra and scapula.] Being above the scapula.

SUPRA-SPINA'TUS, n. The suprascapularis of Cowper, a muscle of the arm, so named from its situation. It arises fleshy from the whole of the base of the scapula that is above its spine, and likewise from the spine itself, and from the superior costa. Its principal use seems to be to assist in raising the arm upwards; at the same time, by drawing the capsular ligament upwards, it prevents it from being pinched between the head of the os humeri and that of the scapula.

SUPRAVUL'GAR, a. [supra and vulgar.] Being above the vulgar or common people.

SUPREMACY, n. [See SUPREME.] State of being supreme or in the highest station of power; or highest authority or power; as, the supremacy of the king of Great Britain; or the supremacy of parliament. The term, however, is used particularly to signify supreme and undivided authority in ecclesiastical affairs. This is either papal or regal. Papal supremacy is the authority, legislative, judicial, and executive, which the pope exercised over the churches of England, Scotland, and Ireland, until the middle of the 16th century, when it was abolished, and which he still exercises, de facto, over that portion of the inhabitants of those countries who are in communion with the church of Rome. Regal supremacy is the authority and jurisdiction which the king of England exercises over the church of England, as being the supreme head of that church. This authority is not legislative, but judicial and executive only. Henry VIII. was first acknowledged supreme head of the church in 1528; and this supremacy was confirmed by parliament to him, his heirs, and successors, kings of this realm in 1534. Regal supremacy over the church is not recognized by the established church of Scotland, as it acknowledges no head upon earth.—Oath of supremacy. In Great Britain, an oath which renounces or abjures the supremacy of the pope in ecclesiastical or temporal affairs in this realm. It is, properly speaking, an oath of non-supremacy, since it negatives the pope's supremacy, and is silent as to any supremacy of the king. It was by many statutes required to be taken, along with the oath of allegiance, by persons in order to qualify themselves for office, &c.; but it is now become almost an unmeaning form.

SUPREME, a. [L. supremus, from supra; Fr. suprême.] 1. Highest in authority; holding the highest place in government or power. The parliament of Great Britain is supreme in legislation; but the king is supreme in the administration of the government. In the United States, the congress is supreme in regulating commerce and in making war and peace. In the universe, God only is the supreme ruler and judge. His commands are supreme, and binding on all his creatures.—2. Highest, greatest, or most excellent; as supreme love; supreme glory; supreme degree.—3. It is sometimes used in a bad sense; as, supreme folly or baseness, folly or baseness carried to the utmost extent. [A bad use of the word.]—The Supreme, the highest of beings, the sovereign of the universe.

SUPREME'LY, adv. With the highest authority. He rules supremely.—2. In the highest degree; to the utmost extent; as, supremely blest.

SUR, a prefix, from the French, contracted from L. super, supra, signifies over, above, beyond, upon. It is sometimes merely intensive.

SUR'A, n. [L.] The calf of the leg; the fibula.

SURADDI'TION, n. [Fr. sur, on or upon, and addition.] Something added to the name.

SUR'AL, n. [L. sura.] Being in or pertaining to the calf of the leg; as, the sural artery.

SUR'ANCE, for Assurance, not used.

SUR-ANCRE'E. [Fr.] In her., a cross sur-ancrée, or double anchored, is a cross with double anchor flukes at each termination.

SUR'BASE, n. [sur and base.] The crowning moulding or cornice of a pedestal; a border or moulding above the base; as, the mouldings immediately above the base of a room.

SURBEAT, for Surbate, not in use.

SURBED', v. t. [sur and bed.] To set edgewise, as a stone; that is, in a position different from that which it had in the quarry.

SURBED'DED, pp. Set edgewise.

SURBED'DING, ppr. Setting edgewise.

SUR'BET, † pp. or a. Surbated; bruised.

SURCEASE, v. i. [Fr. sur and cesser, to cease.] 1. To cease; to stop; to be at an end.—2. To leave off; to practise no longer; to refrain finally.

So prayed he, whilst an angel's voice from high,

Bade him surcease to importune the sky. Harte.

[This word is entirely useless, being precisely synonymous with cease, and it is nearly obsolete.]

SURCEASE', † v. t. To stop; to cause to cease.

SURCEASE', † n. Cessation; stop.

SURCHARGE, v. t. [Fr. surcharger; sur and charge.] 1. To overload; to overburden; as, to surcharge a boat or a ship; to surcharge a cannon.

Your head reclined, as hiding grief from view,
Droops like a rose surcharged with morning dew. Dryden.

2. In law, to overstock; to put more cattle into a common than the person has a right to do, or more than the herbage will sustain.—3. To overcharge; to make an extra charge upon.

SURCHARGE, n. An excessive load or burden; a load greater than can be well borne.—2. In law, an extra charge made by assessors upon such as neglect to make a due return of the taxes to which they are liable.—3. An overcharge beyond what is just and right.

Surcharge of forest, the putting of more cattle into a forest, by a commoner, than he has a right to do.

SURCHARGED, pp. Overloaded; overstocked; overcharged.

SURCHARGER, n. One that overloads or overstocks.—2. Surcharge of forest, —which see.

SURCHARGING, ppr. Overloading; burdening to excess; overstocking with cattle or beasts; overcharging.

SUR' CINGLE, n. [Fr. sur, upon, and L. cingulum, a belt.] 1. A belt, band, or girth which passes over a saddle, or over any thing laid on a horse's back, to bind it fast.—2. The girdle with which clergymen of the church of England bind their cassocks.

SUR' CINGLED, a. Girt; bound with a surcingle.

SUR'CLE, n. [L. surculus.] A little shoot; a twig; a sucker.

SUR'COAT, n. [Fr. sur and Eng. coat.] A short coat worn over the other clothes.—2. During the middle ages, a covering of body armour; being a loose sleeveless wrapper, worn over a coat of mail. It was open in front, but not at the sides, usually reached to the mid-leg, and was girt to the waist by the sword-belt. In late examples, surcoats were often emblazoned with the wearer's arms, but were originally of one colour, or simply variegated.

Surcoats seem to have originated with the crusaders, partly for the purpose of distinguishing the many different nations serving under the banner of the cross. Meyrick.

SUR'CREW, † n. [Fr. surcroit.] Additional collection; augmentation.

SUR'ULATE, † v. t. [L. surculo.] To prune.

SURCULATION, † n. Act of pruning.

SUR'CULOSE, } a. In bot., being full of shoots or twigs.

SUR'EULUS, n. [L.] In bot., any little branch, or twig. Applied by Linnæus particularly to the stem of mosses, or the shoot which bears the leaves.

SURD, a. [L. surdus, deaf.] 1. † Deaf; not having the sense of hearing.—2. † Unheard.—3. Designating a quantity whose root cannot be exactly expressed in numbers.

SURD, n. In algea., an irrational quantity; a quantity which is incommensurable to unity. Or, a surd denotes the root of any quantity, when that quantity is not a complete power of the dimension required by the index of the root. Hence, the roots of such quantities cannot be expressed by rational numbers. Thus the square root of 2, the cube root of 4, the fourth root of 7, &c., are surds, for they cannot be expressed by rational numbers. Surds are usually represented by prefixing the radical signs indicating the operation; thus, $\sqrt{2}$, $\sqrt[3]{4}$, $\sqrt[4]{7}$, or they may be expressed by fractional indexes;

thus, $2^{\frac{1}{2}}$, $4^{\frac{1}{3}}$, $7^{\frac{1}{4}}$, &c. If 2, 4, and 7 be represented by a, b, and c, then \sqrt{a} , $\sqrt[3]{b}$, and $\sqrt[4]{c} = a^{\frac{1}{2}}$, $b^{\frac{1}{3}}$, $c^{\frac{1}{4}}$ are surds. Any rational quantity may be expressed in the form of a surd by reducing its integral index to an equivalent fraction; thus, $a^2 = a^{\frac{4}{2}}$, or $a^{\frac{6}{3}}$.

SURD'ITY, † n. Deafness.

SURD-NUMBER, n. A number that is incommensurate with unity.

SURE, a. (shure.) [Fr. sûr, seur; Arm. sâr; Norm. seor, seur.] 1. Certain; unfailling; infallible.

The testimony of the Lord is sure; Ps. xix.

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; 2 Pet. i.

2. Certainly knowing; or having full confidence.

We are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth; Rom. ii.

Now we are sure that thou knowest all things; John xvi.

3. Certain; safe; firm; permanent.

Thy kingdom shall be sure to thee; Dan. iv.

4. Firm; stable; steady; not liable to failure, loss or change; as, a sure covenant; 2 Sam. xxiii; Nch. ix; Is. xxviii.

The Lord will make my lord a sure house; 1 Sam. xxv.

So we say, to stand sure, to be sure of foot.—5. Certain of obtaining or of retaining; as, to be sure of game; to be sure of success; to be sure of life or health.—6. Strong; secure; not liable to be broken or disturbed.

Go your way, make it as sure as ye can; Matth. xxvii.

7. Certain; not liable to failure. The income is sure.—To be sure, or be sure, certainly. Shall you go? be sure I shall.—To make sure, to make certain; to secure so that there can be no failure of the purpose or object.

Make sure of Cato. Addition.

A peace cannot fail, provided we make sure of Spain. Temple.

Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure; 2 Pet. i.

SURE, adv. Certainly; without doubt; doubtless.

Sure the queen would wish him still unknown. Smith.

[But in this sense, surely is more generally used.]

SUREFOOT'ED, a. [sure and foot] Not liable to stumble or fall; as, a sure-footed horse.

SURELY, adv. Certainly; infallibly; undoubtedly.

In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die; Gen. ii.

He that created something out of nothing surely can raise great things out of small. South.

2. Firmly; without danger of falling.

He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely; Prov. x.

SURENESS, n. Certainty.

For more sureness he repeats it. [Little used.] Woodward.

SURETISHIP, n. [from surety.] The state of being surety; the obligation of a person to answer for another, and make good any debt or loss which may occur from another's delinquency.

He that hateth suretiship is sure; Prov. xi.

SURETY, n. [Fr. sureté.] 1. Certainty; indubitableness.

Know of a surety, that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs; Gen. xv.

2. Security; safety.

Yet for the more surety they looked round about. Sidney.

3. Foundation of stability; support.

We our state hold, as you yours, while our obedience holds;

On other surety none. Milton.

4. Evidence; ratification; confirmation.

She call'd the saints to surety, That she would never put it from her finger, Unless she gave it to yourself. Shak.

5. Security against loss or damage; security for payment.

There remains unpaid A hundred thousand more, in surety of the which

One part of Aquitain is bound to us. Shak.

6. In law, one that is bound with and for another; one who enters into a bond or recognizance to answer for another's appearance in court, or for his payment of a debt or for the performance of some act, and who, in case of the principal debtor's failure, is compellable to pay the debt or damages; a bondsman; a bail.—Surety of the peace, the acknowledging of a recognizance or bond to the king, taken by a competent judge of record for keeping the peace. Magistrates, and justices of the peace, have the power to take such recognizances. A magistrate or a justice of the peace may, according to his discretion, bind all those to keep the peace, who, in his presence, shall make any affray, or shall threaten to kill or beat any person, or shall contend together in hot words; and all those who shall go about with unlawful weapons, or attendance to the terror of the people; and all such persons as shall be known by him to be common barrators, and who shall be brought before him by a constable, for a breach of the peace, in the presence of such constable; and all such persons who, having been before bound to keep the peace, shall be convicted of having forfeited their recognizance. Such recognizance may be obtained by any party from another, on application to a magistrate, and stating on oath that he has just cause to fear that such other "will burn his house or do him a corporal hurt, or, that he will procure others to do him mischief." This kind of surety is termed, in Scots law, law burrows. Sureties may be similarly required for the good behaviour of parties who have been guilty of conduct tending to a breach of the peace.

He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it; Prov. xi.

Thy servant became surety for the lad to my father; Gen. xlii.

7. In Scrip., Christ is called, "the surety of a better testament;" Heb. vii. 22. He undertook to make atonement for the sins of men, and thus prepare the way to deliver them from the punishment to which they had rendered themselves liable.—8. A hostage.

SURETYSHIP. See SURETISHIP.

SURF, n. The swell of the sea which breaks upon the shore, or upon sand banks or rocks.—2. In agriculture, the bottom or conduit of a drain. [Local.]

SURFACE, n. [Fr. sur, upon, and face.] The exterior part of any thing that has length and breadth; one of the limits that terminates a solid; the superficies; outside; as, the surface of the earth; the surface of the sea; the surface of a diamond; the surface of the body; the surface of a cylinder; an even or an uneven surface; a smooth or rough surface; a spherical surface.

In geom., a surface or superficies is defined to be "that which has length and breadth only," and is thus distinguished from a line which has length only, and from a solid, which has length, breadth, and thickness. The extremities of a surface are lines, and the intersections of one surface with another are also lines. A plane surface, is that in which any two points being taken, the straight line between them lies wholly in that surface. A surface which may be cut by a plane through any given point, so that the line of common section of the plane and surface may be a curve, is called a curved surface; as, the surface of a sphere, cylinder, or cone. Surfaces are distinguished algebraically by the nature and order of their equations. Thus, we have surfaces of the first order, or plane surfaces, and surfaces of the second order, or curved surfaces. Surfaces are also distinguished by their mode of generation; thus the surface of a sphere is generated by the revolution of a semicircular arc about the diameter, which remains fixed. In physics, a surface is supposed to be composed of a number of material particles, placed together side by side, without any opening or interstice between them. Such a surface, therefore, cannot be said to be absolutely destitute of thickness, but may be regarded as a film of matter whose thickness is indefinitely small. In common language, the word surface is often used to signify not merely the outside or exterior boundary of any substance, but also a certain thickness of the exterior material part. In this way we speak of the surface of the earth, the surface of the soil, of taking off the surface of any thing, &c.—Surface damage, in Scots law, damage done to the surface of the ground in consequence of mining operations, &c.

SURFEIT, v. t. (sur'fit.) [Fr. sur, over, and faire, fait, to do, L. facio.] 1. To feed with meat or drink, so as to oppress the stomach and derange the functions of the system; to overfeed and produce sickness or uneasiness.— 2. To cloy; to fill to satiety and disgust. He surfeits us with his eulogies.

SURFEIT, v. i. To be fed till the system is oppressed, and sickness or uneasiness ensues.

They are as sick that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing.

SURFEIT, n. Fulness and oppression of the system, occasioned by excessive eating and drinking; or of something unwholesome or improper in the food. He has not recovered from a surfeit.— 2. Excess in eating and drinking. Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made.

SURFEITED, pp. Surcharged and oppressed with eating and drinking to excess; cloyed.

SURFEITER, n. One who riots; a glutton.

SURFEITING, pp. Oppressing the system by excessive eating and drinking; cloying; loading or filling to disgust.

SURFEITING, n. The act of feeding to excess; gluttony; Luke xxi.

SURFEIT-WATER, n. [surfeit and water.] Water for the cure of surfeits.

SURGE, n. [L. surgo, to rise; Sans. surgo, height.] 1. A large wave or billow; a great rolling swell of water. [It is not applied to small waves, and is chiefly used in poetry and eloquence.] He flies aloft, and with impetuous roar, Pursues the foaming surges to the shore.

2. In ship-building, the tapered part in front of the whelps, between the chocks of a capstan, on which the messenger may surge.

SURGE, v. t. To let go a portion of a rope suddenly. Surge the messenger.

SURGE, v. i. To swell; to rise high and roll; as waves.

The surging waters like a mountain rise. Spenser.

2. To slip back; as, the cable surges.

SURGELESS, a. (surj'less.) Free from surges; smooth; calm.

SUR'GEON, n. (sur'jen.) [contracted from chirurgion.] In a limited sense, one whose profession or occupation is to cure diseases or injuries of the body by manual operation. In a more general sense, one whose occupation is to cure external diseases, whether by manual operation, or by medicines externally or internally. But this latter definition is still too limited, as there are many diseases which cannot be considered external, and which, according to modern practice, fall within the province of the surgeon. The truth is, no accurate definition of the term has yet been given, for the reasons stated under surgerj,— which see.

SUR'GEONCY, n. The office of surgeon in the army or navy.

SUR'GEONRY, n. The practice of a surgeon; surgery; a surgery.

SUR'GERY, n. Originally, the manual procedure by means of instruments or not, directed towards the repair of injury, and the cure of disease, in contradistinction to the practice of medicine, denoting the treatment of disease by the administration of drugs or other substances, supposed to be of a sanative tendency. The matured progress, however, of the healing art, has rendered such a definition of surgery, in these days, utterly untenable. Many attempts have been made to define surgery according to its present state, so as to prevent interference with the department of physic. By some it has been represented as that branch of medicine which principally effects the cure of diseases by the application of the hand alone, by the employment of instruments, or the use of topical remedies; but this definition is more applicable to the state of surgery some centuries ago, than to the present state of practice. By some writers surgery is said to have for its object the treatment of external diseases, while physic treats of internal diseases. This definition can only be received with numerous exceptions in regard to modern practice, for there are many internal disorders, which are universally allowed to constitute strictly surgical cases; as, for instance, the psoas abscess; stone in the bladder, polyp, and scirrhus of the uterus, stricture of the œsophagus, an extravasation of blood within the skull in consequence of accidental violence. Others have defined surgery to be the mechanical part of physic; but this definition is equally objectionable, as it confines this branch of medicine within too narrow limits. The fact is, that the line of demarcation between surgery and physic cannot be easily traced, nor is it desirable that the attempt should be made. Their principles are the same throughout, and the exercise of their different branches requires the same fundamental knowledge. The physician, before he can be accomplished or successful in his profession, must be intimate with the principles, if not with the practice, of surgery. On the other hand, no one can lay claim to the title of surgeon, far less hope for eminence or success, unless he be equally qualified to assume both the appellation and the employment of the physician. Surgery, however, in its common acceptation, has been understood to include: 1. The treatment of injuries of all kinds; 2. Of the greater part of external and local complaints; 3. Of such internal affections as produce changes recognizable externally; for example, alterations of figure, colour, or consistency; 4. Of all cases requiring external topical treatment, operations, or manual proceedings of any kind. Still there are various exceptions to some of the above principles of classification.

SUR'GLANT, in her., the same as Rou-sant, or Rising,—which see.

SUR'GICAL, a. Pertaining to surgeons or surgery; done by means of surgery; as, surgical instruments; surgical operations.

SUR'GING, pp. Swelling and rolling, as billows.

Surging waves against a solid rock. Milton.

SUR'GY, a. Rising in surges or billows; full of surges; as, the surgy main.

SUR'ICATE, n. An animal like the ichneumon; the four-toed weasel.

SUR'LILY, adv. [from surly.] In a surly, morose manner.

SUR'LINESS, n. Gloomy moroseness; crabbed ill nature; as, the surliness of a dog.

SUR'LING, n. A sour morose fellow.

SUR'LOIN. See SIRLOIN.

SUR'LY, a. [W. swr, surly, snarling; swri, surliness; sullenness. Qu. its alliance with sour.] 1. Gloomily morose; crabbed; snarling; sternly sour; rough; cross and rude; as, a surly groom; a surly dog.

2. Rough; dark; tempestuous. That surly spirit, Melancholy. Shak.

Now soften'd into joy the surly storm.

SUR'MARKS, n. [sur and mark.] In shipbuilding, the stations of the ribbands and harpings which are marked on the timbers.

SURMISAL, n. Surmise.

SURMISE, v. t. (surmi'ze.) [Norm. surmys, alleged; surmitter, to surmise, to accuse, to suggest; Fr. sur and mettre, to put.] To suspect; to imagine without certain knowledge; to entertain thoughts that something does or will exist, but upon slight evidence. It waited nearer yet, and then she knew That what before she but surmis'd, was true.

Dryden.

This change was not wrought by altering the form or position of the earth, as was surmised by a very learned man, but by dissolving it.

Woodward.

SURMISE, n. Suspicion; the thought or imagination that something may be, of which however there is no certain or strong evidence; as, the surmises of jealousy or of envy.

We double honour gain From his surmise prov'd false. Milton.

No man ought to be charged with principles he disowns, unless his practices contradict his professions; not upon small surmises.

Swift.

SURMISED, pp. Suspected; imagined upon slight evidence.

SURMISEL, n. One who surmises.

SURMISING, pp. Suspecting; imagining upon slight evidence.

SURMISING, n. The act of suspecting; surmise; as, evil surmisings; 1 Tim. vi.

SURMOUNT, v. t. [Fr. surmonter; sur and monter, to ascend.] 1. To rise above.

The mountains of Olympus, Athos and Atlas, surmount all winds and clouds.

Rulegh.

2. To conquer; to overcome; as, to surmount difficulties or obstacles.—3. To surpass; to exceed.

What surmounts the reach
Of human sense. Milton.

SURMOUNT'ABLE, a. That may be overcome; superable.

SURMOUNT'ABLENESS, n. The state of being surmountable.

SURMOUNT'ED, pp. Overcome; conquered; surpassed. In her., a term applied to a chief having another smaller chief over it, of a different colour or metal. It is also applied to a charge, with another placed over it; as, a bend, fesse, pale, &c. If on a lion, more properly expressed by the term debrusé.—Surmounted arch or dome, an arch or dome that rises higher than a semicircle.

Surmounted.

SURMOUNT'ER, n. One that surmounts.

SURMOUNT'ING, ppr. Rising above; overcoming; surpassing.

SURMULLET, n. A name given to the mullet, a fish of the genus Mugil. The red surmullet, (M. barbatus or ruber), inhabits the Mediterranean, and attains a length of from 12 to 15 inches. Its flesh is esteemed very delicious, and was extravagantly prized by the Romans. It is remarkable for the brilliancy of its colours, and for the changes which they undergo as the fish expires. The striped surmullet (M. surmuletus, Linn.), is somewhat smaller, but equal to the red surmullet in delicacy. [See MULLET.]

SUR'MULOT, n. A name given by Buffon to the brown or Norway rat.

SUR'NAME, n. [Fr. surnom; It. soprannome; Sp. sobrenombre; L. super and nomen.] 1. An additional name; a name or appellation added to the baptismal or Christian name, and which becomes a family name. Surnames, with us, originally designated occupation, estate, place of residence, or some particular thing or event that related to the person. Thus William Rufus or red; Edmund Ironsides; Robert Smith, or the smith; William Turner. Surnames seem to have been formed at first by adding the name of the father to that of the son, and in this manner several of our surnames were produced. Thus from Thomas William's son we have Thomas Williamson; from John's son we have Johnson, &c. Surnames are said to have been first assumed in England a little before the Conquest, but they were never fully established among the common people till the time of Edward II. They seem to have been introduced into Scotland in the time of William the Conqueror.—2. An appellation added to the original name.

My surname Coriolanus. Shak.

SURNAME, v. t. [Fr. surnommer.] To name or call by an appellation added to the original name.

Another shall subscribe with his hand to the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel; Is. xlii.

And Simon he surnamed Peter; Mark iii.

SURNAMED, pp. Called by a name added to the Christian or original name.

SURNAMING, ppr. Naming by an appellation added to the original name.

SURNOMINAL, a. Relating to surnames.

SUROX'IDE, n. [sur and oxide.] An oxide containing a greater number of equivalents of oxygen, than of the base, with which it is combined. [French.]

SUROX'IDATE, v. t. To form a sur-oxide.

SURP'ASS, v. t. [Fr. surpasser; sur and passer, to pass beyond.] To exceed; to excel; to go beyond in any thing good or bad. Homer surpasses modern poets in sublimity. Pope surpasses most other poets in smoothness of versification. Achilles surpassed the other Greeks in strength and courage. Clodius surpassed all men in the profligacy of his life. Perhaps no man ever surpassed Washington in genuine patriotism and integrity of life.

SURP'ASSABLE, a. That may be exceeded.

SURP'ASSED, pp. Exceeded; excelled.

SURP'ASSING, ppr. Exceeding; going beyond.—2. a. Excellent in an eminent degree; exceeding others.

O thou, that with surpassing glory crown'd.
Milton.

SURP'ASSINGLY, adv. In a very excellent manner; or in a degree surpassing others.

SURP'ASSINGNESS, n. The state of surpassing.

SURPLICE, n. (sur'plis.) [Fr. surplis; Sp. sobrepelliciz; L. super pellicium, above the robe of fur.] A white garment worn by clergymen of some denominations over their other dress, in their ministrations. It is particularly the habit of the clergy of the church of England.

Surplice, Brass of Prior Nelond, Cowfold, Sussex.

SUR'PLICED, a. Wearing a surplice.

SUR'PLICE-FEES, n. [surplice and fees.] Fees paid to the clergy for occasional duties.

SUR'PLUS, n. [Fr. sur and plus, L. id., more.] 1. Overplus; that which remains when use is satisfied; excess beyond what is prescribed or wanted.—2. In law, the residuum of an estate, after the debts and legacies are paid.

SURPLUS'AGE, n. Surplus; as, surplusage of grain or goods beyond what is wanted.—2. In law, something in the pleadings or proceedings not necessary or relevant to the case, and which may be rejected.—3. In accounts, a greater disbursement than the charge of the accountant amounteth to.

SURPRISAL, n. (surpri'zal.) [See SURPRISE.] The act of surprising or coming upon suddenly and unexpectedly; or the state of being taken unawares.

SURPRISE, v. t. (surpri'ze.) [Fr. from surprendre; sur and prendre, to take; L. super, supra, and prendo, to take.] 1. To come or fall upon suddenly and unexpectedly; to take unawares.

The castle of Macduff I will surprise. Shak.

Who can speak
The mingled passions that surpris'd his heart?
Thomson.

2. To strike with wonder or astonishment by something sudden, unexpected, or remarkable, either in conduct, words, or story, or by the appearance of something unusual. Thus we are surprised at desperate acts of heroism, or at the narration of wonderful events, or at the sight of things of uncommon magnitude or curious structure.—3. To confuse; to throw the mind into disorder by something suddenly presented to the view or to the mind.

Up he starts, discover'd and surpris'd.
Milton.

SURPRISE, n. The act of coming upon unawares, or of taking suddenly and without preparation. The fort was taken by surprise.—2. The state of being taken unexpectedly.—3. An emotion excited by something happening suddenly and unexpectedly, as something novel told or presented to view. Nothing could exceed his surprise at the narration of these adventures. It expresses less than wonder and astonishment.—4. † A dish with nothing in it.

SURPRISED, pp. Come upon or taken unawares; struck with something novel or unexpected.

SURPRIS'ER, n. One who surprises.

SURPRISING, ppr. Falling on or taking suddenly or unawares; striking with something novel; taking by a sudden or unexpected attack.—2. a. Exciting surprise; extraordinary; of a nature to excite wonder and astonishment; as, surprising bravery; surprising patience; a surprising escape from danger.

SURPRISINGLY, adv. In a manner or degree that excites surprise. He exerted himself surprisingly to save the life of his companion.

SURPRISINGNESS, n. State of being surprising.

SUR'QUEDRY, v. t. [sur and Norm. Fr. cuidr, to think. Qu. Sp. cuidar, to heed. See HEED.] Overweening pride; arrogance.

SURREBUT, v. i. [sur and rebut.] In legal pleadings, to reply, as a plaintiff, to a defendant's rebutter.

SURREBUT'TER, n. The plaintiff's reply in pleading to a defendant's rebutter.

SURREIN'ED, v. t. Overridden or injured.

SURREJOIN, v. i. [sur and rejoin.] In legal pleadings, to reply, as a plaintiff to a defendant's rejoinder.

SURREJOIN'DER, n. The answer of a plaintiff to a defendant's rejoinder.

SURREN'DER, v. t. [Fr. se rendre, to yield. Surrender is probably a corruption of se rendre.] 1. To yield to the power of another; to give or deliver up possession upon compulsion or demand; as, to surrender one's person to an enemy, or to commissioners of bankrupt; to surrender a fort or a ship. [To surrender up is not elegant.]

—2. To yield; to give up; to resign in favour of another; as, to surrender a right or privilege; to surrender a place or an office.—3. To give up; to resign; as, to surrender the breath.—4. In law, to yield an estate, as a tenant, into the hands of the lord for such purposes as are expressed in the act.—5. To yield to any influence, passion, or power; as, to surrender one's self to grief, to despair, to indolence, or to sleep.

SURRENDER, v. i. To yield; to give up one's self into the power of another. The enemy seeing no way of escape, surrendered at the first summons.

SURRENDER, n. The act of yielding or resigning one's person or the possession of something, into the power of another; as, the surrender of a castle to an enemy; the surrender of a right or of claims.—2. A yielding or giving up.—3. In law, the yielding up of an estate for life, or for years, to him that has the immediate estate in reversion or remainder, and is either in fact or in law.—Surrenders in fact, must be made by deed, which is the allowable evidence.—A surrender in law, is one which may be implied, and generally has reference to estates or tenancies from year to year, &c.—Surrender of tithes, in Scots law, the submission of tithes made to the crown. [See TEINDS.]

SURRENDERED, pp. Yielded or delivered to the power of another; given up; resigned.

SURRENDEREE, n. In law, a person to whom the lord grants surrendered land; the cestuy que use.

SURRENDERING, ppr. Yielding or giving up to the power of another; resigning.

SURRENDEROR, n. The tenant who surrenders an estate into the hands of his lord.

 Till the admittance of cestuy que use, the lord takes notice of the surrenderor as his tenant. Blackstone.

SURREND'RY, n. A surrender. [Surrender is the most elegant and best authorized.]

SURREPTION, n. [L. surreptus, sur-repo; sub and repo, to creep.] A coming unperceived; a stealing upon insensibly. [Little used.]

SURREPTI'IOUS, a. [L. surreptitius, snpra.] Done by stealth or without proper authority; made or introduced fraudulently; as, a surreptitious passage in a manuscript.

 A correct copy of the Dunciad, the many surreptitious ones have rendered necessary. Letter to Publisher of Dunciad.

SURREPTI'IOUSLY, adv. By stealth; without authority; fraudulently.

SURROGATE, n. [L. surrogatus, sur-rogo, subrogo; sub and rogo, to propose. Rogo, to ask or propose, signifies primarily to reach, put, or thrust forward; and subrogo is to put or set in the place of another.] In a general sense, a deputy; a delegate; a substitute; a person appointed to act for another, particularly the deputy of an ecclesiastical judge, most commonly of a bishop or his chancellor.

SURROGATE, v. i. To put in the place of another. [Little used.]

SURROGATESHIP, n. The office of surrogate.

SURROGA'TION, n. The act of substituting one person in the place of another. [Little used.]

SURROGATUM, n. [L.] In Scots law, that which comes in place of something else.

SURROUND, v. t. [sur and round, Fr.

round.] 1. To encompass; to environ; to inclose on all sides; as, to surround a city. They surrounded a body of the enemy.—2. To lie or be on all sides of; as, a wall or ditch surrounds the city. SURROUND'ED, pp. Encompassed; inclosed; beset.

SURROUND'ING, ppr. Encompassing; inclosing; lying on all sides of.

SURROUND'ING, n. An encompassing.

SUR'ROY, or SOUTH'ROY, n. In her., the ancient title of the king-at-arms, for the south ports of England, now called Clarencieux.

SUR'SHARP, n. In music, the fifth tetra chord above.

SURSOLID, n. [sur and solid, or sur-desolid.] A name given by the early algebraists to the fifth power of a number; or the product of the fourth multiplication of a number considered as the root. Thus $3 \times 3 = 9$, the square of 3, and $9 \times 3 = 27$, the third power or cube, and $27 \times 3 = 81$, the fourth power, and $81 \times 3 = 243$, which is the sursolid of 3.

SURSOLID, a. Denoting the fifth power.—Sursolid problem, is that which cannot be resolved but by curves of a higher kind than the conic sections. [Little used.]

SURTOUT, n. [Fr. sur-tout, over all.] Originally a man's coat to be worn over his other garments, but in modern usage, an upper coat with wide skirts reaching down to near the knees, and enveloping the thighs.—2. In her., an escutcheon of pretence, placed upon the centre of a shield of arms, is often said to be in surtout.

SUR'TURBRAND, n. Fibrous brown coal or bituminous wood; so called in Iceland.

SURVEILLANCE, n. [Fr.] Watch; inspection; oversight.

SURVENE, v. t. [Fr. survenir; sur and venir, to come.] To supervene; to come as an addition; as, a suppiration that survenes lethargies. [Little used.]

SURVEY, v. t. [Norm. surveoir, sur-veoir; sur and Fr. voir, to see or look, contracted from L. video, videre.] 1. To inspect or take a view of; to overlook; to view with attention, as from a high place; as, to stand on a hill, and survey the surrounding country. It denotes more particular and deliberate attention than look or see.—2. To view with a scrutinizing eye; to examine.

 With such alter'd looks,

All pale and speechless, he survey'd me round. Dryden.

3. To examine with reference to condition, situation, and value; as, to survey a building, to determine its value and exposure to loss by fire.—4. To determine the boundaries and superficial extent of fields, estates, tracts of ground, &c.; to determine the form and dimensions of the plans of towns, the courses of roads, rivers, &c.—5. In milit. affairs, to ascertain and represent upon paper the roads, rivers, hills and marshes of a country, in order to obtain a knowledge of the positions which may be occupied as fields of battle, or as quarters, &c.—6. To examine or ascertain the position and distances of objects on the shore of the sea, the depth of water, nature of the bottom, and whatever may be necessary to facilitate the navigation of the waters and render the entrance into harbours, sounds, and rivers easy and safe. Thus officers are employed to survey the coast and make charts of the same.—7. To examine and ascertain, as the boundaries and royalties of a manor, the tenure of the tenants, and the rent and value of the same.—8. To examine and ascertain, as the state of agriculture.

SURVEY, n. [formerly accented on the last syllable.] 1. An attentive view; a look or looking with care. He took a survey of the whole landscape.

 Under his proud survey the city lies. Denham.

2. A particular view; an examination of all the parts or particulars of a thing, with a design to ascertain the condition, quantity, or quality; as, a survey of the stores, provisions, or munitions of a ship. So also a survey of roads and bridges is made by proper officers; a survey of buildings is intended to ascertain their condition, value, and exposure to fire. A survey of land, as of fields, estates, tracts of country, &c., consists in determining by measurement, laying down angles and taking levels, the dimensions, forms, and boundaries, of such portions of ground, and representing the same upon paper. [See SURVEYING.] A survey of a harbour, sound, or coast comprehends an examination of the distance and bearing of points of land, isles, shoals, depth of water, course of channels, &c. A survey of agriculture includes a view of the state of property, buildings, fences, modes of cultivation, crops, gardens, orchards, woods, live-stock, &c. And in general, survey denotes a particular view and examination of anything.—3. In the U. States, a district for the collection of the customs, under the inspection and authority of a particular officer.—Trigonometrical survey, a survey on a large scale, for determining the length of an arc of the meridian, from which the true figure and magnitude of the earth may be ascertained; for determining the geographical position of the principal places of a country, with a view to give greater accuracy to maps and charts; and for determining the difference of longitude between two observations, as those of Greenwich and Paris. [See TRIGONOMETRICAL.]

SURVEYAL, n. Survey; a viewing.

SURVEYED, pp. Viewed with attention; examined; measured.

SURVEYING, ppr. Viewing with attention; examining particularly; measuring.

SURVEYING, n. In practical math., measuring and delineating portions of the surface of the earth with their divisions and features, and computing of their extent. [See TRIGONOMETRICAL.] The principal instruments employed by the surveyor are, the chain for measuring linear distances, commonly called Gunter's chain; the theodolite for the measurement of angles, accompanied by a compass and needle, for determining the bearings; the plane table, the cross-staff or optical square; rods for measuring offsets; levelling staves; a spirit level; and prismatic compasses. In the higher departments of surveying, instruments of the most refined description must be employed, and processes of calculation deduced from mathematics of the highest order.—Marine surveying, consists in determining the forms of coasts and harbours, the positions and distances of objects on the shore, of islands, rocks and shoals, the entrances of rivers, the depth of water, nature of the bottom. [See SOUNDINGS.]—Military surveying, consists chiefly in ascertaining and representing on paper the principal features of a country, as roads, rivers, hills, marshes, with the view of ascertaining the best positions for fields of battle, or for quarters; and also the facilities which may be afforded for the march of an army.

SURVEYOR, n. An overseer; one placed to superintend others.—2. One that views and examines for the purpose of ascertaining the condition, quantity, or quality of anything; as, a surveyor of land; a surveyor of highways; surveyors of ordnance.—Surveyors of the navy, officers, belonging to the navy board, who are invested with the charge of building and repairing ships of the navy, at the different dockyards.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL, n. A principal surveyor; as, the surveyor-general of the king's manors, or of woods and parks in England.—2. In the U. States, the chief surveyor of lands; as, the surveyor-general of the United States, or of a particular state.

SURVEYORSHIP, n. The office of a surveyor.

SURVIEW, † v. t. To survey.

SURVIEW, † n. Survey.

SURVISE, † v. t. [Fr. sur and viser.] To look over.

SURVIVAL, n. [See SURVIVE.] A living beyond the life of another person, thing, or event; an outliving.

SURVIVANCE, n. Survivorship. [Little used.]

SURVIVE, v. t. [Fr. survivre; sur and vivre, to live; It. sopravvivere; Sp. sobrevivir; L. supervivo.] 1. To outlive; to live beyond the life of another; as, the wife survives her husband; or a husband survives his wife.—2. To outlive anything else; to live beyond any event. Who would wish to survive the ruin of his country? Many men survive their usefulness or the regular exercise of their reason.

SURVIVE, v. i. To remain alive.

Try pleasure,
Which when no other enemy survives,
Still conquers all the conquerors.

Denham.

SURVIVENCY, n. A surviving; survivorship.

SURVIVER, n. One that outlives another. [See SURVIVOR.]

SURVIVING, ppr. Outliving; living beyond the life of another, or beyond the time of some event.—2. a. Remaining alive; yet living; as, surviving friends or relatives.

SURVIVOR, n. One who outlives another.—2. In law, the longer liver of two joint tenants, or of any two persons who have a joint interest in anything.

SURVIVORSHIP, n. The state of outliving another.—2. In law, the right of a joint tenant or other person who has a joint interest in an estate, to take the whole estate upon the death of the other. When there are more than two joint tenants, the whole estate remains to the last survivor by right of survivorship.—2. In the doctrine of annuities, a question of life contingencies is said to be one of survivorship, when a re-versionary benefit is contingent upon the circumstance of some life or lives surviving some other life or lives, in such a manner that it shall be necessary to calculate the chance of one individual dying before another in every year of life. Thus, the question of finding the premium of an assurance on the death of A, provided B die first, is one of survivorship. Questions of this sort are readily solved by means of tables constructed for the purpose.

SUS, n. [L.] The generic name for the animal which is well known by the name of the hog. [See SUIDÆ.]

SUSCEPTIBILITY, n. [from susceptible.] The quality of admitting or receiving either something additional, or some change, affection, or passion; or the tendency to admit or receive; as, the susceptibility of colour in a body; susceptibility of culture or refinement; susceptibility of love or desire, or of impressions.

SUSCEPTIBLE, a. [Fr. from L. suscipio, to take; sub and capio.] 1. Capable of admitting anything additional, or any change, affection, or influence; as, a body susceptible of colour or of alteration; a body susceptible of pain; a heart susceptible of love or of impression.—2. Tender; capable of impression; impressible. The minds of children are more susceptible than those of persons more advanced in life.—3. Having nice sensibility; as, a man of a susceptible heart.

SUSCEPTOR, n. [L.] One who undertakes; a godfather.

SUSCIPENCY, n. Reception; admission.

SUSCIPIENT, a. Receiving; admitting.

SUSCIPIENT, n. One who takes or admits; one that receives.

SUSCITATE, v. t. [Fr. susciter; L. suscito; sub and cito.] To rouse; to excite; to call into life and action.

SUSCITATED, pp. Roused; excited.

SUSCITATING, ppr. Exciting; calling into life and action.

SUSCITATION, n. The act of raising or exciting.

SUSLIK, or SOUSLIK, n. A pretty little animal of the marmot kind, Mus citillus, Linn., of a grayish-brown, Suslik (Mus citillus).

waved or spotted with white. It is found in Bohemia, and as far north as Siberia, and has a particular taste for flesh, not sparing even its own species. There are some species in America. It is named also the earless marmot.

SUSPECT, v. t. [L. suspectus, suspicio; sub and specio, to see or view.] 1. To mistrust; to imagine or have a slight opinion that something exists, but without proof, and often upon weak evidence or no evidence at all. We suspect not only from fear, jealousy, or apprehension of evil, but in modern usage, we suspect things which give us no apprehension.

Nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little. Bacon.

From her hand I could suspect no ill.

Milton.

2. To imagine to be guilty, but upon slight evidence or without proof. When a theft is committed, we are apt to suspect a person who is known to have been guilty of stealing; but we often suspect a person who is innocent of the crime.—3. To hold to be uncertain; to doubt; to mistrust; as, to suspect the truth of a story.—4. To hold to be doubtful. The veracity of a historian, and the impartiality of a judge, should not be suspected.—5. To conjecture.

SUSPECT v. i. To imagine guilt.

If I suspect without cause, why then let me be your jest. Shak.

SUSPECT, a. Doubtful. [Not much used.]

SUSPECT, † n. Suspicion.

SUSPECTABLE, a. That may be suspected. [Little used.]

SUSPECTANT, or SPEC'TANT, ppr. In her, looking upwards, the nose bendways.

SUSPECTED, pp. Imagined without proof; mistrusted.

SUSPECTEDLY, adv. So as to excite suspicion; so as to be suspected.

SUSPECTEDNESS, n. State of being suspected or doubted.

SUSPECTER, n. One who suspects.

SUSPECTFUL, a. Apt to suspect or mistrust.

SUSPECTING, ppr. Imagining without evidence; mistrusting upon slight grounds.

SUSPECTLESS, a. Not suspecting; having no suspicion.—2. Not suspected; not mistrusted.

SUSPEND, v. t. [Fr. suspendre; L. suspendo; sub and pendo, to hang.]

1. To hang; to attach to something above; as, to suspend a ball by a thread; to suspend the body by a cord or by hooks; a needle suspended by a lodestone.—2. To make to depend on.

God hath suspended the promise of eternal life on the condition of faith and obedience.—3. To interrupt; to intermit; to cause to cease for a time. The guard nor fights nor flees; their fate so near

At once suspends their courage and their fear. Denham.

4. To stay; to delay; to hinder from proceeding for a time.

Suspend your indignation against my brother. Shak.

I suspend their doom. Milton.

5. To hold in a state undetermined; as, to suspend one's choice or opinion.

—6. To debar from any privilege, from the execution of an office, or from the enjoyment of income.

Good men should not be suspended from the exercise of their ministry and deprived of their livelihood, for ceremonies which are acknowledged indifferent. Sanderson.

7. To cause to cease for a time from operation or effect; as, to suspend the habeas corpus act.—To suspend an officer in the army, is to deprive him, on account of some misconduct, of his pay and render him incapable of exercising the duties of his office, during the pleasure of the commander-in-chief.—To suspend an officer in the navy, is to put him under arrest for some misconduct. [See SUSPENSION.]

SUSPEND'ED, pp. Hung up; made to depend on; caused to cease for a time; delayed; held undetermined; prevented from executing an office or enjoying a right.

SUSPEND'ER, n. One that suspends.—2. Suspenders, plur. straps worn for holding up pantaloons, &c.; braces. [American, or local.]

SUSPEND'ING, ppr. Hanging up; making to depend on; intermitting; causing to cease for a time; holding undetermined; debarring from action or right.

SUSPENS'ION, n. A temporary cessation.

SUSPENSE, n. (suspens'.) [L. suspensus.] A state of uncertainty; indetermination; indecision. A man's mind is in suspense, when it is balancing the weight of different arguments or considerations, or when it is uncertain respecting facts unknown, or events not in his own power.

Ten days the prophet in suspense remain'd.
Denham.

2. Stop; cessation for a time.
A cool suspense from pleasure or from pain.
Pope.

3. In law, suspension; a temporary cessation of a man's right; as when the rent or other profits of land cease by unity of possession of land and rent.

SUSPENSE, a. (suspens'.) Held from proceeding; held in doubt or expectation. [Little used.]

SUSPENSIBIL'ITY, n. The capacity of being suspended or sustained from sinking; as, the susceptibility of indurated clay in water.

SUSPENS'IBLE, a. Capable of being suspended or held from sinking.

SUSPENS'ION, n. [Fr. from L. suspensio. See SUSPEND.] 1. The act of hanging up, or of causing to hang by being attached to something above.—

2. The act of making to depend on any thing for existence or taking place; as, the suspension of payment on the performance of a condition.—3. The act of delaying; delay; as, the suspension of a criminal's execution; called a respite or reprieve.—4. Act of withholding or balancing the judgment; forbearance of determination; as, the suspension of opinion, of judgment, of decision, or determination. Suspension of judgment often proceeds from doubt or ignorance of facts.—5. Temporary cessation; interruption; intermission; as, the suspension of labour or of study; the suspension of pain.—6. Temporary privation of powers, authority, or rights; usually intended as a censure or punishment; as, the suspension of an ecclesiastic or minister for some fault. This may be merely a suspension of his office, or it may be both of his office and his income.

A military or naval officer's suspension takes place when he is arrested.—7. Prevention or interruption of operation; as, the suspension of the habeas corpus act.—8. In rhet., a keeping of the hearer in doubt and in attentive expectation of what is to follow, or what is to be the inference or conclusion from the arguments or observations.—9. In law, the temporary stop of a man's right, as when a seignory, rent, or other profit out of land, by reason of the unity of possession of the seignory, rent, &c., and of the land out of which they issue, lies dormant for a time.—10. In Scots law, the name of a process in the supreme civil or criminal court, by which execution or diligence on a sentence or decree is stayed until the judgment of the supreme court is obtained on the point. In civil causes, the party complaining presents a bill of suspension to the lord ordinary on the bills, setting forth that diligence has been used or threatened in virtue of the decree or warrant to which he objects, and after stating the circumstances of the case, and his cause of complaint, his bill concludes that the diligence or execution in question ought to be suspended, and therefore he prays for letters of suspension in the premises, and offers caution to implement the decree of which he complains, and to pay the expenses of the process, if the court shall so decide. If the lord ordinary thinks that the complainant has made out a sufficient prima facie case, he pronounces an interlocutor, sisting execution in the meanwhile, and appointing the bill of suspension to be answered. Afterwards, the lord ordinary resumes consideration of the bill along with the answers (if lodged), and if he still thinks that there is ground for the objection to the diligence or execution, he passes the bill of suspension, or grants warrant for expediting letters of suspension at the signet, whereby the cause is brought formally into the court of session. If, on the other hand, the lord ordinary be of opinion, either on considering the bill itself, or on resuming consideration of it with answers, that there is no just ground of complaint, he refuses the bill, and the diligence or execution is in consequence allowed to proceed. His decision, however, is subject to the review of the court. [See BILL.]—11. In mech., points of suspension, in a balance, are the points in the axis or beam where the weights are applied, or from which they are suspended.—12. In music, every sound of a chord to a given base, which is continued to another base, is a suspension.—Suspension of arms, in war, a short truce or cessation of operations agreed on by the commanders of the contending parties, as for burying the dead, making proposals for surrender, or for peace, &c.—Suspension and interdict, in Scots law, a judicial remedy competent in the bill chamber of the court of session, where there has been no decree, nor any proceeding which can issue in a decree, but where the object is to stop or interdict some act or to prevent some encroachment on property or possession, or in general to stay any unlawful proceeding. The remedy is applied for by a bill of suspension and interdict. [See INTERDICT.]—Suspension and liberation. In Scots law, where a debtor has been incarcerated in consequence of diligence on a decree, or on any other warrant of incarceration, he may apply in the bill chamber for redress by a bill of suspension and liberation, and if he can satisfy the lord ordinary on the bills that his imprisonment has been wrongful or illegal, the bill of suspension and liberation, after it has been answered, will be passed. The procedure in this case is analogous to that in ordinary suspensions.

SUSPENSION-BRIDGE, n. A structure which is hung and stretched across some chasm, water-course, or other space, over which it is designed to form a passage. In modern structures of this sort, the leading features for the most part consist in fixing securely, in the two opposite banks, the extremities of strong chains, which, being carried over piers or pillars, reach across the space to be passed in such a manner that each portion of chain intercepted between two piers is allowed naturally to assume, by its weight, the figure of the curve named the catenarian. From these chains, a platform for the roadway is suspended by means of a series of equidistant vertical rods. The largest suspension bridge is that over the Menai Strait, the distance between the points of suspension being 560 feet.

SUSPENS'IVE, a. Doubtful.—Suspensive conditions, in Scots law, conditions precedent, or conditions without the purification of which the contract cannot be completed.

SUSPENS'OR, } n. In sur., a bag-
SUSPENS'ORY, } truss. It is applied in cases of hernia.—2. In bot., a name given to the ends by which the embryo of some plants is suspended from the foramen or opening of the seed.

SUSPENS'ORY, a. That suspends; suspending; as, a suspensory muscle.

SUSPENS'ORY, n. That which suspends or holds up; a truss.

SUSPICABLE, } a. [L. suspicio.] That SUSPICABLE, } may be suspected; liable to suspicion.

SUSPI'CIION, n. [Fr. from L. suspicio. See SUSPECT.] The act of suspecting; the sentiment or passion which is excited by signs of evil without sufficient proof; the imagination of the existence of something without proof, or upon very slight evidence, or upon no evidence at all. Suspicion often proceeds from the apprehension of evil; it is the offspring or companion of jealousy.

Suspicion among thoughts, are like bats among birds; they ever fly by twilight.

Bacon.

SUSPI'CIIOUS, a. [L. suspiciosus.] 1. Inclined to suspect; apt to imagine without proof.

Nature itself, after it has done an injury will ever be suspicious, and no man can love the person he suspects. South.

2. Indicating suspicion or fear.

We have a suspicious, fearful, constrained countenance. Swift.

3. Liable to suspicion; adapted to raise suspicion; giving reason to imagine ill; as, an author of suspicious innovations. I spy a black suspicious threatening cloud. Shak.

4. Entertaining suspicion; given to suspicion.

Many mischievous insects are daily at work to make men of merit suspicious of each other. Pope.

SUSPI'CIOUSLY, adv. With suspicion.—2. So as to excite suspicion.

SUSPI'CIOUSNESS, n. The quality of being liable to suspicion, or liable to be suspected; as, the suspiciousness of a man's appearance, of his weapons, or of his actions.—2. The quality or state of being apt to suspect; as, the suspiciousness of a man's temper or mind.

SUSPI'RAL, n. [L. suspiro, to breathe; sub and spiro.] 1. A breathing-hole; a vent or ventiduct.—2. A spring of water passing under ground toward a cistern or conduit. [Local.]

SUSPIRA'TION, n. [L. suspiratio, suspiro, to sigh; sub and spiro, to breathe.] The act of sighing or fetching a long and deep breath; a sigh.

SUSPIRE, v. i. [supra.] To sigh; to fetch a long deep breath; to breathe. [Little used.]

SUSPIRED, pp. or a. Wished for; desired.

SUSSEX MARBLE, n. In geol., a fresh water deposit which constitutes a member of the Wealden group. It occurs in layers varying from a few inches to upwards of a foot in thickness, the layers being separated by seams of clay or loose friable limestone. It occurs in great abundance in the Weald of Sussex; hence the name. It is of various shades of grey and bluish grey, mottled with green and yellow; it bears a high polish, and is extensively used for architectural and ornamental purposes.

SUSTAIN, v. t. [L. sustineo; sub and teneo, to hold under; Fr. soutenir.] 1. To bear; to uphold; to support; as, a foundation sustains the superstructure; pillars sustain an edifice; a beast sustains a load.—2. To hold; to keep from falling; as, a rope sustains a weight.—3. To support; to keep from sinking in dependence. The hope of a better life sustains the afflicted amidst all their sorrows.—4. To maintain; to keep alive; to support; to subsist; as, provisions to sustain a family or an army.—5. To support in any condition by aid; to assist or relieve.

His sons who seek the tyrant to sustain.

Dryden.

6. To bear; to endure without failing or yielding. The mind stands collected and sustains the shock.

Shall Turnus then such endless toil sustain?

Dryden.

7. To suffer; to bear; to undergo.

You shall sustain more new disgraces.

Shak.

8. To maintain; to support; not to dismiss or abate. Notwithstanding the plea in bar or in abatement, the court sustained the action or suit.—9. To maintain as a sufficient ground. The testimony or the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the action, the accusation, the charges, or the impeachment.—10. In music, to continue, as the sound of notes through their whole length.

SUSTAIN, † n. That which upholds.

SUSTAINABLE, a. That may be sustained or maintained. The action is not sustainable.

SUSTAINED, pp. Borne; upheld; maintained; supported; subsisted; suffered.

SUSTAINER, n. He or that which sustains, upholds, or suffers.

SUSTAINING, ppr. Bearing; upholding; maintaining; suffering; subsisting.

SUSTAINMENT, n. The act of sustaining; support.

SUSTAL'TIC, a. [Gr. συσταλτικός.] Mournful; affecting; an epithet given to a species of music by the Greeks.

SUSTENANCE, n. [Norm. Fr.; from sustain.] 1. Support; maintenance; subsistence; as, the sustenance of the body; the sustenance of life.—2. That which supports life; food; victuals; provisions. This city has ample sustenance.

SUSTENTACLE, † n. [L. sustentaculum.] Support.

11.

SUSTENTA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. sustentatio, sustento.] 1. Support; preservation from falling.—2. Use of food.—3. Maintenance; support of life.

SUSTENTA'TION, a. Having a sustaining power; calculated to sustain or support; as, the sustentation fund of the Free Chnrch of Scotland.

SUSURRA'TION, † n. [L. susurratio; susurro, to whisper.] A whispering; a soft murmur.

SU'TILE, a. [L. sutilis, from suo, to sew.] Done by stitching.

SUT'LER, n. [D. zoetelaar, as if from zoet, sweet. But in German, sudelkoch is a paltry victualler, as if from sudeln, to soil; sudler, a dirty fellow. In Danish, sudelkoch is a pastry-cook, from the same root; sudler, to soil. The Danish may be the original signification.] A person who follows an army and sells to the troops provisions and liquors.

SUT'LING, a. Belonging to sutlers; engaged in the occupation of a sutler.

SUTTEE', n. [sati, from the Sanscrit sat, good; pure; properly a chaste and virtuous wife.] 1. A widow who immolates herself on the funeral pile of her husband.—2. The voluntary self-immolation of Hindoo widows on the funeral pile of their husbands. The origin of this horrid custom is uncertain. It is not absolutely commanded in the sacred books of the Hindoos, but they speak of it as highly meritorious, and the means of obtaining eternal beatitude. It is believed also to render the husband and his ancestors happy, and to purify him from all offences. Since the year 1756, upwards of 70,000 Hindoo widows have been thus sacrificed. The suttee was abolished throughout the British dominions in India, in 1829, by Lord W. Bentinck, governor-general of India.

SUTTEE'ISM, n. Sutte,—which see.

SUT'TLE, a. Suttle weight, in com., is when tret is allowed; neat weight.

SUTU'RAL, a. [L. sutura, a seam.] Relating to a suture or seam. In bot., the dehiscence of a pericarp is sutural, when it takes place at a suture.

SUTURATED, a. Stitched; sewed or knit together.

SU'TURE, n. [L. sutura, from suo, to sew.] 1. Wild Swan or Hooper (Cygnus ferus).

and small pools of fresh water, rather than the sea or the larger lakes. They are among the most ornamental of all the water birds, on account of their great size, the gracefulness of their forms and motions, and the snowy whiteness of the plumage of those species with which we are most familiar. The species which inhabit or visit Britain are the tame swan, Cygnus olor, the wild swan or hooper, C. ferus, and the Bewick swan, C. bewickii. The black swan, C. atratus, is an

Black Swan (Cygnus atratus).

Australian species, about the size of the tame swan. Like the white swan, it is frequently kept as an ornament in parks in this country. In England, the swan is said to be a bird-royal, in which no subject can have property, when at large in a public river or creek, except by grant from the crown. In creating this privilege, the crown grants a swanmark for a game of swans. The swanmarks are made upon the upper mandible, with a knife or other sharp instrument. Several species of swans are found in other parts of the world.

SWANG, n. A piece of low land or green sward, liable to be covered with water. [Local.]

SWARE, v. i. [Etymol. uncertain.] To faint, to swoon. As a noun, stupor, a fainting fit, a swoon. [Scotch.]

SWARM, n. [Sax. swearm; G. schwarm. This seems to be formed on the root of warm. The Sp. hervir, to boil, to swarm, is the L. ferveo, and boiling is very expressive of the motions of a swarm of bees. See the Verb.] 1. In a general sense, a large number or body of small animals or insects, particularly when in motion; but appropriately, a great number of honey bees which emigrate from a hive at once, and seek new lodgings under the direction of a queen; or a like body of bees united and settled permanently in a hive. The bees that leave a hive in spring, are the young bees produced in the year preceding; Exod. viii; Judges xiv.—2. A swarm or multitude; particularly, a multitude of people in motion. Swarms of northern nations overran the South of Europe in the fifth century.

Note.—The application of this word to inanimate things, as swarms of advantages, by Shakspeare, and swarms of themes, by Young, is not legitimate, for the essence of the word is motion.

SWARM, v. i. [Sax. swearmian; G. schwärmen; Sw. svärma, to swarm, to rove, to wander, to swerve.] 1. To collect and depart from a hive by flight in a body, as bees. SWEDENBOR'GIANS, n. The followers of Emanuel Swedenborg, a Swedish nobleman, born at Stockholm in 1689. He professed himself to be the founder of the New Jerusalem church, alluding to the New Jerusalem spoken of in the book of the Revelation, and conceived that the members of this church were gifted with peculiar insight into spiritual things. The Swedenborgians believe that the regenerate man is in direct communication with angels, and with heaven. They maintain that the sacred Scriptures contain three distinct senses, called celestial, spiritual, and natural, which are united by correspondences, and are accommodated respectively to particular classes, both of men and angels. They date the second advent of Christ from the year 1757, and the commencement of the New Jerusalem church. In the United States the Swedenborgians are numerous, and they have several chapels in London, and other large towns.

SWEDENBOR'GIANISM, n. The doctrines and practice of the Swedenborgians.

SWERVING, n. The act of wandering; deviation from any rule, law, duty, or standard.

SWEVEN, † n. A dream.

SWIETE'NIA, n. A small genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Cedrelaceæ. The species are found in the hot parts of the world, forming large trees, and yielding valuable timber. The most important species is the S. mahogani, a native of Campeachy and the West Indies. [See MAHOGANY.]

SWIFT, a. [Sax. swift, from swifan, to turn, to rove, to wander, to whirl round; D. zweeven, to rove, to hover, to fluctuate; G. schweben, to wave, soar, or hover. The latter appear to be formed on the root of wave. See SWIVEL and WAFT.] 1. Moving a great distance, or over a large space in a short time; moving with celerity or velocity; fleet; rapid; quick; speedy. We say, swift winds, a swift stream, swift lightnings, swift motion, swift as thought, a fowl swift of wing, a man swift of foot. Swift is applicable to any kind of motion.—2. Ready; prompt. Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath; James i.

3. Speedy; that comes without delay. There shall be false teachers among you, who shall privily bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction; 2 Pet. ii.

SWIFT, n. The current of a stream. [Little used.]—2. In domestic affairs, a reel or turning instrument for winding yarn. [This is a sense directly from the Saxon verb.]—3. The Cypselus murarius, Temminck, the largest and most bably the most imperfect feet of any known bird. Owing to their extreme shortness, it is unable to walk, except with a most constrained and hobbling gait, and with the assistance of the wings. It lives habitually, and pursues its prey at a greater height from the ground than the swallows, and it constructs its nest at a more lofty elevation, choosing the crevices of steeples and towers, and the crannies of rocks. During the long summer days it often passes sixteen hours in vigorous continued flight. The swift is among the last of our swallows in its arrival, and the first to depart. Another species, the white-bellied or Alpine swift (Cypselus Alpinus, Temminck) is known in this country, but it is only a rare straggler. The weight of the swift is most disproportionately small to its extent of wing, the former being scarcely an ounce, the latter eighteen inches; the length of the body being near eight inches.—4. The common newt or eft, a species of lizard.

SWIFTER, n. In a ship, a rope used to confine the bars of the capstan in their sockets, while men are turning it; also, a rope used to encircle a boat longitudinally, to strengthen and defend her sides from the impulse of other boats. Swifthers also are two shrouds fixed on the starboard and larboard sides of the lower masts, above all the other shrouds, to give the masts additional security.

SWIFTER, v. t. To stretch, as shrouds by tackles.

SWIFTER, a. [comp. of Swift.] More swift.

SWIFTEST, a. [sup. of Swift.] Most swift.

SWIFT'FOOT, a. Nimble.

SWILL'ING, ppr. Swallowing excessive quantities of liquors.

SWILL'INGS, n. Swill.

SWIM, v. i. pret. Swam; pp. Swim. [Sax. swimman; D. zweimmen, to swim; zweymen, to swoon; G. schwemmen, schwimmen; Sw. swima, to swoon.] 1. To float; to be supported on water or other fluid; not to sink. Most species of wood will swim in water. Any substance will swim, whose specific gravity is less than that of the fluid in which it is immersed.—2. To move progressively in water by means of the motion of the hands and feet, or of fins. In Paris, boys are taught to swim by instructors appointed for that purpose.

Leap in with me into this angry flood, And swim to yonder point. Shak.

3. To float; to be borne along by a current. In all states there are men who will swim with the tide of popular opinion.—4. To glide along with a smooth motion, or with a waving motion.

She with pretty and with swimming gait... Shak.

A hov'ring mist came swimming o'er his sight. Dryden.

5. To be dizzy or vertiginous; to have a waving motion of the head or a sensation of that kind, or a reeling of the body. The head swims when we walk on high.—6. To be floated; to be overflowed or drenched; as, the earth swims in rain.

Sudden the ditches swell, the meadows swim. Thomson.

All the night I make my bed to swim; I water my couch with my tears; Ps. vi.

7. To overflow; to abound; to have abundance.

They now swim in joy. Milton.

SWIM, v. t. To pass or move on; as, to swim a stream. Deer are known to swim rivers and sounds.

Sometimes he thought to swim the stormy main. Dryden.

2. To immerse in water that the lighter parts may swim; as, to swim wheat for seed.

SWIM, n. The bladder of fishes, by which they are said to be supported in water; motion on the water; as, in swimming.

SWIM'MER, n. One that swims.—2. A protuberance on the leg of a horse.—3. A bird that swims, as the duck and goose.

SWIM'MERS, or SWIM'MING - BIRDS, n. The Palmipedes of Cuvier, and the Natatores of Illiger, an order of web-footed aquatic birds formed for swimming. Their feet are placed far back on the body, attached to short and compressed tarsi, and with palmed toes. Their dense and polished plumage, saturated with oil, and the thickly set down which is next to their skin, protect these birds from the water in which they live. The bill is long, enabling them to search for their food below water while they swim on the surface. Their sternum is very powerful flier of the swallow tribe which visits this country. It has prolong, affording a complete guard to the greater part of their viscera, having on each side but one emargination or oval foramen filled up with membrane. Cuvier divided this order into four families. 1. The Brachypterae, comprehending the grebes, divers, guillemots, auks, and penguins. 2. The Longipennes, including the petrels, puffins, albatrosses, gulls, terns, noddies, and skimmers. 3. Totipalmantae, comprehending the pelicans, cormorants, frigate birds, boobies, and darters. 4. The Lamellirosres, comprehending the swans, geese, ducks, and mergansers.

Swift (Cypselus murarius).

SWIMMERS, n. A tribe of spiders (Araneida natantes), which live in water, and there spin their webs to entrap their prey.

SWIMMING, ppr. Floating on a fluid; moving on a fluid; having a wavy or reeling motion; overflowing; abounding.

SWIMMING, n. The act of sustaining the body in water, and of moving in it; as fishes, which are assisted in this action by their air-bladder and fins. Amphibious animals also possess this faculty to a greater or less extent. Swimming, as applied to human beings, is the act or art of balancing the body on or near the surface of the water, and of making a progress through it. A great proportion of the animal tribes are furnished with a greater or less capacity for swimming either in water or on its surface, but man is unqualified for swimming without learning to do so as an art, owing to the structure of his body. The head by its gravity naturally sinks in water, and thus causes drowning, unless it, or at least the mouth, can be kept above the surface by art. The art of swimming, which can be acquired by exercise only, chiefly consists in keeping the head above water, and using the hands and feet as oars and helm. The best school for swimming is deep water, and the best teacher the frog. Swimming is a highly useful exercise; it strengthens the abdominal muscles, the muscles of the chest, the organs of respiration, the spine, neck, and arms. It increases courage, and furnishes an agreeable excitement. It also affords us the means of preserving our lives or those of others in perilous situations.—2. Dizziness.

SWIMMINGLY, adv. Smoothly; without obstruction; with great success. [Not elegant.]

SWINDLE, v. t. [D. zwoedelen.] To cheat and defraud grossly, or with deliberate artifice; as, to swindle a man out of his property.

SWINDLED, pp. Grossly cheated and defrauded.

SWINDLER, n. [G. schwindler.] A cheat; a rogue; one who defrauds grossly, or one who makes a practice of defrauding others by imposition or deliberate artifice.

SWINDLING, n. The practices of a swindler. When a person by the assumption of a false character, or by a false representation of some sort, obtains the possession of money or other property from another or others, and appropriates it to himself, he is said to be guilty of swindling, and is liable to punishment by law.

SWINE, n. sing. and plur. [Sax. swin; G. Schwein; L. suinus. It is found in the Fr. marsouin, a porpoise; L. mare, the sea, and swine; the sea-hog; Port. suino, pertaining to swine.] A hog; a pachydermatous mammal of the genus Sus, which furnishes man with a large portion of his most nourishing food. The fat or lard of this animal enters into various dishes in cookery. The numerous varieties of the hog or swine cultivated in Britain, are partly the result of climate and partly the European variety, and partly the effects of crossing with the Chinese hog. Berkshire, in England, has long been famous for its breed of swine. [See SUIDÆ.]

SWINE-BREAD, n. A kind of plant, truffle.

SWINE-CASE, } n. A hog-sty; a pen

SYLLAB'IC, } a. [from syllable.]
SYLLAB'ICAL, } Pertaining to a syllable or syllables; as, syllabic accent.—

2. Consisting of a syllable or syllables; as, a syllabic augment.

SYLLAB'ICALLY, adv. In a syllabic manner.

SYLLABICA'TION, n. The act of forming syllables; the act or method of dividing words into syllables.

SYLL'ABLE, n. [L. syllaba; Gr. συλλαβη, from συλλαμβανω, to comprehend; συ, and λαμβάνω, to take.] 1. A letter, or a combination of letters, uttered together, or at a single effort or impulse of the voice. A vowel may form a syllable by itself, as a, the definite, or in amen; e in even; o in over, and the like. A syllable may also be formed of a vowel and one consonant, as in go, do, in, at; or a syllable may be formed by a vowel with two articulations, one preceding, the other following it, as in can, but, tun; or a syllable may consist of a combination of consonants, with one vowel or diphthong, as strong, short, camp, voice.

A syllable sometimes forms a word, and is then significant, as, in go, run, write, sun, moon. In other cases, a syllable is merely a part of a word, and by itself is not significant. Thus ac, in active, has no signification. At least one vowel or open sound is essential to the formation of a syllable; hence in every word there must be as many syllables as there are single vowels, or single vowels and diphthongs. A word is called according to the number of syllables it contains; viz., monosyllable, a word of one syllable; dissyllable, a word of two syllables; trisyllable, a word of three syllables; polysyllable, a word of many syllables.—2. A small part of a sentence or discourse; something very concise. This account contains not a syllable of truth.

Before a syllable of the law of God was written. Hooker.

SYLLABLE, † v. t. To utter; to articulate.

SYLLABUB, n. A compound drink made of wine and milk; a different orthography of Sillabub.

SYLLABUS, n. [L. from the same source as syllable.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse; a course of lectures, a book, &c.

SYLLEP'SIS, n. [Gr. συλληψις. See SYLLABLE.] 1. In gram., a figure by which we conceive the sense of words otherwise than the words import, and construe them according to the intention of the author; otherwise called substitution.—2. The agreement of a verb or adjective, not with the word next to it, but with the most worthy in the sentence; as, rex et regina beati.

SYLLEPTICAL, a. Relating to or implying syllepsis.

SYLLEPTICALLY, adv. By way of syllepsis.

SYLLOGISM, n. [L. sylogismus; Gr. συλλογισμος; συ, with, and λογος, to speak; λογισμα, to think.] A form of reasoning or argument, consisting of three propositions, of which the two first are called the premises, and the last the conclusion. In this argument, the conclusion necessarily follows from the premises; so that if the two first propositions are true, the conclusion must be true, and the argument amounts to demonstration. Thus, a plant has not the power of locomotion; an oak is a plant; therefore an oak has not the power of locomotion. These propositions are denominated the major, the minor, and the conclusion. The three propositions of a syllogism are made up of three ideas or terms, and these terms are called the major, the minor, and the middle. The subject of the conclusion is called the minor term; its predicate is the major term, and the middle term is that which shews the connection between the major and minor term in the conclusion; or it is that with which the major and minor terms are respectively compared. Syllogisms are divided by some into single, complex, conjunctive, &c., and by others into categorical, hypothetical, conditional, &c. The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with reference to the major and minor terms. The figures are generally reckoned three. The mood of a syllogism is the designation of its three propositions, according to their quantity and quality. The quantity and quality of propositions, in logic, are marked by arbitrary symbols, as A, E, I, O. Every assertion may be reduced to one of four forms—the universal affirmative, marked by A; the universal negative, marked by E; the particular affirmative, marked by I; and the particular negative, marked by O. From these, by combination, all syllogisms are derived. In order to remember the figures, certain words have been long used by writers on logic, which make a grotesque appearance; but which nevertheless are of considerable use. Thus, under the first figure, we have Barbara, Celarent, Darii, Ferio; under the second, Cesare, Camestres, Festino, Baroko; and under the third, Darapti, Disamis, Datisi, Felapton, Bokardo, Feriso. Each of these words designates a particular mood. The rules of syllogism may be thus briefly expressed: 1. One at least of the premises must be affirmative, and one at least universal; 2. The middle term must enter universally in one of the premises; and, 3. The conclusion must not speak of any term in a wider sense than was spoken of in the premise in which it entered. A term universally spoken of is either the subject of a universal affirmative, or the predicate of any negative. Syllogisms are nothing else than reasoning reduced to form and method, and all that passes under the name of reasoning, unless it can be made syllogistic, is no reasoning at all, but a mass of words without meaning. The syllogism is the instrument of self-examination, and the last weapon of resort in dispute; and a bad syllogism, with one of the premises implied only, and not expressed, is the first resource of fallacy. To bring forward the suppressed premise, is the visible destruction of every argument which is logically bad.

SYLLOGIS'TIC, } a. Pertaining to a SYLLOGIS'TICAL, } syllogism; consisting of a syllogism; or of the form of reasoning by syllogisms; as, syllogistic arguments or reasoning.

SYLLOGIS'TICALLY, adv. In the form of a syllogism; by means of syllogisms; as, to reason or prove syllogistically.

SYLLOGIZA'TION, n. A reasoning by syllogisms.

SYLLOGIZE, v. i. To reason by syllogisms.

Men have endeavoured to teach boys to syllogize, or to frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.

SYLLOGIZER, n. One who reasons by syllogisms.

SYLLOGIZING, ppr. Reasoning by syllogisms.

SYLPH, n. [Fr. syphide; Gr. συφης, a moth, a beetle.] An imaginary being inhabiting the air, so named by the Rosicrucians and Cabalists.

SYLPH'ID, n. A diminutive of sylph.

SYLPH-LIKE, a. Resembling a sylph.

SYLVA, n. [L., a wood or forest.] In poetry, a poetical piece composed in a start or kind of transport.—2. A collection of poetical pieces of various kinds.—3. A work containing a botanical description of the forest trees of any region or country.—4. The forest trees themselves of any region or country.

SYLVAN. See SILVAN.

SYLVAN, n. A fabled deity of the wood; a satyr; a faun; sometimes perhaps, a rustic.

Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side,
To lawless syrvans all access deny'd. Pope.

SYLVANITE, n. Native tellurium, a metallic substance discovered in Transylvania.

SYLVATE, n. A compound of sylvic acid with a base.

SYLVATIC, a. Sylvan; relating to woods.

SYLVES'TRIAN, a. Sylvan; inhabiting the woods.

SYLVIA, n. A genus of slender-billed song-birds, including the Black-cap, S. atricapilla, and Garden Warbler, S. hortensis. They are, next to the Nightingales, the most distinguished for the variety and modulation of their notes.

SYLVIADÆ. The name given by Vigors to a family of dentostrual birds, comprehending the warblers of British ornithologists.

SYLVIC ACID, n. An acid extracted from common resin or rosin by weak alcohol, and purified by stronger alcohol. It crystallizes in minute prisms, and consists of 20 atoms of carbon, 16 of hydrogen, and 2 of oxygen.

SYMBAL. See CYMBAL.

SYMBOL, n. [L. symbolum; Gr. συμβολον; συν, with, and βαλλω, to throw; συμβαλλω, to compare.] 1. The sign or representation of any moral thing by the images or properties of natural things.

Thus the lion is the symbol of courage; the lamb is the symbol of meekness or patience. Symbols are of various kinds, as types, enigmas, parables, fables, allegories, emblems, hieroglyphics, &c.—2. An emblem or representation of something else. Thus in the eucharist, the bread and wine are called symbols of the body and blood of Christ.—3. A letter or character which is significant.

The Chinese letters are most of them symbols. The symbols in algebra are arbitrary.—4. In medals, a certain mark or figure representing a being or thing, as a trident is the symbol of Neptune, the peacock of Juno, &c.—5. Among Christians, an abstract or compendium, the creed or a summary of the articles of religion.—6. † Lot; sentence of adjudication.—Mathematical symbols, letters and characters which represent quantities or magnitudes, and point out their relations.

The symbols generally recognized by mathematicians, consist of the capitals of the Roman alphabet, and the small letters of the Italic; the small letters of the Greek alphabet, and such capitals as are distinguishable from the corresponding Roman ones; the Arabic numerals and occasionally the Roman ones; accents, figures and letters, superfixed and suffixed; as, a' , a_{11} , a^2 , a_2 ; a^m , a_v ; the signs, +, −, ×, ÷, √; the integral sign ∫ with its limits expressed; as, in \int_a^b ; the symbols of nothing and infinity, 0 and ∞; brackets and parentheses, &c., [], (), { }, &c.; the sign of equality =; the signs of greater and less, > <.—Chemical symbols. [See under CHEMICAL.] In Scots law, heritable property is transferred by the delivery of symbols. Thus, lands are resigned by a vassal to his superior by the symbol of staff and baton. In giving saine of lands, the symbols are earth and stone of the lands; of an annual rent out of lands, earth and stone, with a penny money; of fishings, net and cobble; of mills, clap and hopper; of houses within a burgh, hasp and staple; of patronage teinds, a sheaf of corn; of patronage, a psalm-book, and the keys of the church; of jurisdictions, the book of court. The law, however, regarding the transference of heritable property, has recently been much simplified, and many of these symbolical acts are no longer requisite. [See SASINE.]

SYMBOLIC, } a. Representative;
SYMBOLICAL, } exhibiting or expressing by resemblance or signs; as, the figure of an eye is symbolical of sight and knowledge. The ancients had their symbolical mysteries.

The sacrament of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as he appointed. Taylor.

Symbolical philosophy, is the philosophy expressed by hieroglyphics.—Symbolical books, the name given by the Lutherans to their standard books of faith and discipline, and now by extension applied to the standards of other bodies of Christians.—Symbolical attributes, certain symbols, by which artists distinguish the various evangelists, apostles, saints, &c., in their representations.

SYMBOLICALLY, adv. By representation or resemblance of properties; by signs; typically. Courage is symbolically represented by a lion.

SYMBOLICS, n. The name given by the Germans to the study of the symbols and mysterious rites of antiquity; and also the study of the history and contents of christian creeds and confessions of faith.

SYMBOLISM, n. Among chemists, consent of parts.

SYMBOLIZATION, n. [See SYMBOLIZE.] The act of symbolizing; resemblance in properties.

SYMBOLIZE, v. t. [Fr. symboliser.] To have a resemblance of qualities or properties.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of a single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony. Bacon.

They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses. Howell.

SYMBOLIZE, v. t. To make to agree in properties.—2. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours. Brown.

SYMBOLIZED, pp. Made to agree in properties.

SYMBOLIZING, ppr. Representing by some properties in common; making to agree or resemble in properties.

SYMBOLOLOGY, n. The art of expressing by symbols.

SYMMETRICAL, a. [from symmetry.] Commensurable.

SYMMETRIAN, } n. [from symmetry.]
SYMMETRIST, } One eminently studious of proportion or symmetry of parts.

SYMMETRICAL, a. [from symmetry.] Proportional in its parts; having its parts in due proportion, as to dimensions; as, a symmetrical body or building; having that obvious relation of equal and similar figures, which refers to their position merely, and consists in their corresponding portions being placed on different sides of the same straight line.—2. In bot., flowers are symmetrical when the segments of the calyx, the petals and the stamens are regular, equal, and alike.—3. In ancient geometry, commensurable; thus, two magnitudes, which admitted of a common measure, were said to be symmetrical.—Symmetrical solids, a name given by Legendre to those solids which, though equal and similar, cannot be made to coincide, or to fill the same space, as is the case with equal and similar plane figures. If a regular pyramid, having for its base an isosceles triangle, be cut by a plane passing through its vertex, and bisecting the base of the isosceles triangle, and also passing through the opposite angle of the same triangle, the figures on each side of the cutting plane will be symmetrical solids. The two hands furnish an example of symmetrical solids; they give the idea of equality of size, similarity of form, and symmetry of disposition, but yet they cannot be made to coincide or occupy the same space; so as, for instance, to fit exactly the same glove. In alge., a function is said to be symmetrical with respect to any two letters, when it would undergo no change if these letters were interchanged, or if each were made to take the place of the other. Also, an expression is said to be symmetrical with respect to any number of letters, when any two of them whatsoever may be interchanged without alteration of the function.

SYMMETRICALLY, adv. With due proportion of parts.

SYMMETRICALNESS, n. State or quality of being symmetrical.

SYMMETRIZE, v. t. To make proportional in its parts; to reduce to symmetry.

SYMMETRIZED, pp. Made proportional.

SYMMETRIZING, ppr. Reducing to symmetry.

SYMMETRY, n. [Gr. συμμετρία: συν, with, together, and μετρον, measure; μετρον, to measure; Fr. symetrie.] A due proportion of the several parts of a body to each other; adaptation of the dimensions of the several parts of a thing to each other; or the union and conformity of the members of a work to the whole.—2. That relation of equal and similar figures which refers to their position merely, and consists in their uniformity as regards the answering of one portion to another, or in their corresponding portions being similarly placed on different sides of the same straight line, so that coincidences cannot be obtained without turning one figure round that straight line. If the front of a building be symmetrical, and a vertical line be drawn through the middle of the elevation, then the two lateral portions are not only equal and similar, but also symmetrical; the right hand side stands in the right hand portion of space with respect to the dividing line, and in exactly the same manner as the left-hand side stands in the left-hand portion of space. In the letter W there is a want of symmetry, but not in O: to make W symmetrical, both the inner lines should be made thin, and both the outer ones thick.—3. In the fine arts generally, proportion; harmony; the most proper relation of the measure of parts to each other, and to the whole. In the same sense we speak of the symmetry of animal bodies.—Uniform symmetry, in architecture, is where the same ordonnance reigns throughout the whole.—Respective symmetry, is where only the opposite sides are equal to each other.

SYMPATHETIC, } a. [Fr. sym- SYMPATHETICAL, } pathique. See

SYMPATHY.] 1. Pertaining to sympathy.—2. Having common feeling with another; susceptible of being affected by feelings like those of another, or of feelings in consequence of what another feels; as, a sympathetic heart.—3. In med., the term sympathetic is applied to symptoms and affections, which occur in parts more or less remote from the primary seat of disease, and are occasioned by some nervous connection of the parts. A disease which is immediately preceded and occasioned by another disease, is sometimes said to be sympathetic, in contradistinction from idiopathic, which is applied to a disease not preceded or occasioned by any other; but, in this case, the term sympathetic is not only more appropriate, but more commonly employed.—4. Among alchemists, an epithet applied to a kind of powder, possessed of the wonderful property that if spread on a cloth dipped in the blood of a wound, the wound will be healed, though the patient is at a distance. This opinion is discarded as charlatany.—5. In anat., the term sympathetic is applied to that system of nerves, which takes its origin from the semilunar ganglion in the centre of the epigastrium, and is sent to the whole nutritive system, and also to the organs of reproduction.—Sympathetic ink, a species of ink or liquor with which, when a person writes upon paper, the writing is invisible until heat or some re-agent is applied. Most of the acids or saline solutions, being diluted and used to write with, become visible by heating before the fire. A diluted solution of cobalt affords an ink which becomes green when held before the fire. If a weak solution of galls be used, the writing will be invisible till the paper is moistened with a weak solution of sulphate of iron. The diluted solutions of gold and silver remain colourless upon the paper till exposed to the sun's light.—Sympathetic sounds, sounds produced in one musical instrument by sounding another near it. The harmonies of the Æolian harp are sympathetic sounds, being produced by the communication of motion from one string to another, through the medium of intervening air.—Sympathetic disease, one which is produced by a remote cause, as when a fever follows a local injury.—Sympathetic cures, cures pretended or real, the operation of which is attributed to a certain sympathy of the sufferer with other individuals, or with spirits, animals, stars, plants, &c. A full belief in the efficacy of such means of cure, has a great effect in such diseases as are seated in the nervous system.—Sympathetic powder, a powder chemically prepared from green or blue vitriol.

SYMPATHETICALLY, adv. With sympathy or common feeling; in consequence of sympathy; by communication from something else.

SYMPATHIST, n. One who feels sympathy.

SYMPATHIZE, v. i. [Fr. sympathiser. See SYMPATHY.] 1. To have a common feeling, as of bodily pleasure or pain.

The mind will sympathize so much with the anguish and debility of the body, that it will be too distracted to fix itself in meditation. Buckminster.

2. To feel in consequence of what another feels; to be affected by feelings similar to those of another, in consequence of knowing the person to be thus affected. We sympathize with our friends in distress; we feel some pain when we see them pained, or when we are informed of their distresses, even at a distance. It is generally and properly used of suffering or pain, and not of pleasure or joy. It may be sometimes used with greater latitude.—3. † To agree; to fit.

SYMPATHEZING, ppr. Feeling mutually, or in consequence of what another feels.

SYMPATHY, n. [Gr. συμπαθεια, συμπαθω: συ, with, and παθος, passion.] 1. Fellow feeling; the quality of being affected by the affection of another, with feelings correspondent in kind, if not in degree. We feel sympathy for another when we see him in distress, or when we are informed of his distresses. This sympathy is a correspondent feeling of pain or regret. Sympathy is often an imitative faculty, sometimes exercised involuntarily, frequently without consciousness. Thus we yawn when we see others yawn, and are made to laugh by the laughing of another.

Sympathy is produced through the medium of organic impression. Chipman.

I value myself upon sympathy; I hate and despise myself for envy. Kames.

2. An agreement of affections or inclinations, or a conformity of natural temperament, which makes two persons pleased with each other.

To such associations may be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies of our nature. Anon.

3. In med., a correspondence of various parts of the body in similar sensations or affections; or an affection of the whole body or some part of it, in consequence of an injury or disease of another part, or of a local affection. Thus, a contusion on the head will produce nausea and vomiting. This is said to be by sympathy, or consent of parts.—4. In nat. hist., a propension of inanimate things to unite, or to act on each other. Thus we say, there is a sympathy between the lodestone and iron.—5. In the fine arts, conformity of the parts to each other; but in painting, it usually signifies the effective union of colours.

SYMPEP'SIS, n. In med., a ripening of inflammatory humours.

SYMPHO'NIA, n. [L.] A symphony.

SYMPHO'NIUS, a. [from symphony.] Agreeing in sound; accordant; harmonious.

Sounds

Symphonious of ten thousand harps. Milton.

SYMPHONIST, n. A composer of symphonies or instrumental music.

SYMPHONIZE, v. i. To agree with; to harmonize.

SYMPHONY, n. [L. symphonia; Fr. symphonie; Gr. συμφωνία: συ, with, and φωνη, voice.] 1. A consonance or harmony of sounds, agreeable to the ear, whether the sounds are vocal or instrumental, or both.

The trumpets sound,

And warlike symphony is heard around.

Dryden.

2. An ancient musical instrument, supposed by some to be of the lyre kind, and by others a sort of drum, used as an accompaniment.—3. In modern usage, a musical composition for a full band of instruments, and formerly called an overture. It generally consists of four movements; a brilliant allegro, which is commonly preceded by a short, serious, slow introductory movement; an andante varied, or an expressive adagio; a minuet with its trio; and a finale of rapid motion. The term symphony is also applied to an instrumental passage which usually introduces a piece of vocal music, or is brought in at the close, or occurs during some pause of the voice. Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, are the greatest modern composers of symphonies.

SYMPHORICAR'POS, } n. A genus of SYMPHO'RIA, } plants, nat. order Caprifoliaceæ, the species of which are natives of North and South America. They are elegant bushy shrubs, with small white or rose-coloured flowers. S. vulgaris is known by the name of common St. Peter's wort, and S. racemosus by that of snow-berry. This latter has become very common in our gardens.

SYMPHYSIS, n. [Gr. συμφυσις: συ, together, and φωσ, to grow.] 1. In anat., the union of bones by cartilage; a connection of bones without a movable joint.—2. In sur., a coalescence of a natural passage; also, the first intention of cure in a wound.

SYMPHY'TUM, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Boraginaceæ. The species are rough herbaceous plants, with broad leaves and terminal twin racemes of flowers. They inhabit chiefly Europe and Asia. S. officinalis, or common comfrey, is found in Britain on the banks of rivers and ditches. Its root abounds in a mucilage, which is useful in irritations of the throat, intestines, and bladder. There are several other species.

SYMPEP'SOMETER, n. [Gr. συμπεπιζω, to compress, and μετρον, measure.] A kind of barometer, contrived by Mr. Adie of Edinburgh, for measuring the weight of the atmosphere by the compression of a column of gas. It consists of a glass tube about 18 inches long, having the lower end bent up like the tube of the wheel barometer, each end being terminated by an elongated bulb. The upper end is hermetically sealed, but the lower end is left open. The upper part of the tube is filled with hydrogen gas, and the lower part with some fixed oil. The pressure of the atmosphere is exerted upon the surface of the oil, which is exposed to it in the turned up open end of the tube. This pressure causes the oil to stand at a certain height in the tube, and to produce a certain compression in the column of hydrogen gas. As the atmospheric pressure becomes greater, the oil will rise, and the gas will be compressed into less space. The change in the bulk of the gas caused by a change in the atmospheric pressure is measured by a scale. The sympiesometer is a useful instrument, but inferior in accuracy to the common barometer.

SYMPLESITE, n. In min., a mineral of an indigo colour.

SYMPOCAR'POS, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Araceæ. The S. fetida, skunk cabbage, is a powerful antispasmodic, and also an expectorant. It has a considerable reputation in North America as a palliative in paroxysms of asthma.

SYMPOCE, n. [Gr. συμπελοκη: from συ, together, and ποκη, a twisting or folding.] In rhet., a figure where several sentences or clauses have the same beginning and the same end.

SYMPOCLOS, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Styracææ. The species are trees inhabiting North and South America, and tropical Asia. They all possess an astringent principle in their leaves, and some, as S. tinctoria, dyer's symplecos, sweet leaf or yellow leaf, are used in dyeing.

SYMPO'SIA, n. plur. [συμπόσιον, a feast.] The feasts of the ancient Greeks.

SYMPOSIAC, a. (sympo'ziac.) [Gr. συμπόσια, a drinking together; συ, together, and πινω, to drink.] Pertaining to computations and merry-making; happening where company is drinking together; as, symposiac meetings.

Symposiac disputations. [Not much used.] Arbutnot.

SYMPO'SIAC, n. A conference or conversation of philosophers at a banquet.

SYMPO'SIARCH, n. [Gr. συμπόσιον, a feast, and αρχης, a ruler.] In antiquity, the director or manager of a feast, who was sometimes appointed by the person at whose charge the entertainment was made, or selected by the suffrages of the party.

SYMPOS'IAST, n. One who drinks or makes merry with others.

SYMPOSIUM, n. (sympo'ziium.) [supra.] A drinking together; a merry feast.—2. A banquet among philosophers.

SYMPTOM, n. [Fr. symptome; Gr. συμπτωμα, a falling or accident, from συ, with, and πιτω, to fall.] 1. Properly, something that happens in concurrence with another thing, as an attendant. Hence in med., any affection which accompanies disease; a perceptible change in the body or its functions, which indicates disease. The causes of disease often lie beyond our sight, but we learn the nature of them by the symptoms. Particular symptoms, which more uniformly accompany a morbid state of the body, and are characteristic of it, are called pathognomonic, or diagnostic symptoms. Symptoms are best divided into essential, which are peculiar to certain diseases; accidental, produced by some circumstance of unusual occurrence; and common, which are met with alike in various complaints.—2. A sign or token; that which indicates the existence of something else; as, open murmurs of the people are a symptom of disaffection to law or government.

SYMPTOMATIC, } a. Pertaining to symptoms; } SYMPTOMATICAL, } a. Pertaining to symptoms; } happening in concurrence with something; indicating the existence of something else.—2. In med., a symptomatic disease is one which proceeds from some prior disorder in some part of the body. Thus a symptomatic fever may proceed from local injury or local inflammation. It is opposed to idiopathic.—3. According to symptoms; as, a symptomatical classification of diseases.

SYMPTOMATICALLY, adv. By means of symptoms; in the nature of symptoms.

SYMPTOMATOLOG'Y, n. [Gr. συμπτωματα, and λογος, discourse.] The doctrine of symptoms; that part of the science of medicine which treats of the symptoms of diseases.

SYN, A Greek preposition or prefix (συν), corresponding to the Latin prefix con, and signifying with, together, a uniting, a joining or agreeing. Before certain consonants it is changed into syll, sym, &c., and sometimes the final consonant is dropped.

SYNÆRESIS, n. [Gr. συναίρεσις.] In gram., the contraction of two syllables or two vowels into one, by suppressing one of the syllables, or by the formation of a diphthong; as, néer for never, Atréides for Atréides.

SYNAGOG'ICAL, a. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SYNAGOGUE, n. (syn'agog.) [Fr. from Gr. συναγωγή: συν, together, and αγωγή, to drive; properly an assembly.] 1. A congregation or assembly of Jews, met for the purpose of worship or the performance of religious rites.—2. The house appropriated to the religious worship of the Jews. Authors are not agreed about the time when the Jews first began to have synagogues. Some suppose them as old as the ceremonial law, and others fix their beginning after the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity. Synagogues were erected not only in towns and cities, but also in the country, especially near rivers, that they might have water for their purifications and ceremonies. Jerusalem is said to have contained 480 synagogues. The synagogue was governed by a council or assembly, over whom was a president called the ruler of the synagogue. The service consisted of prayers, reading the Scriptures, and preaching and expounding of them. The chief ruler, or one of the council, gave permission to read and expound the law, and appointed who should do it. The synagogue service was at first confined to the Sabbath days and festivals, but was latterly extended to Mondays and Thursdays.—3. The court of the seventy elders among the Jews, called the great synagogue or sanhedrim.

SYNAGRIS, n. A fish caught in the Archipelago, resembling the dentex. It has a sharp back, and is reckoned a species of Sparus.

SYNALE'PHA, } n. [Gr. συναλοιφή.]
SYNALE'PHA, } In gram., a contraction of syllables by suppressing some vowel or diphthong at the end of a word, before another vowel or diphthong: as, he'll run, for he will run.

SYNALLAGMATIC, a. In civil law, an epithet applied to a contract imposing reciprocal obligations.

SYNANTHEROUS, a. In bot., a name applied to syngenesian or composite plants, with the anthers united so as to form a tube round the style.

SYNAPTASE, n. In chem., a peculiar compound discovered in certain oily seeds, as in almonds, and named emulsine by Wohler and Liebig.

SYNARCHY, n. [Gr. συναρχία.] Joint rule or sovereignty.

SYNARTHROSIS, n. [Gr. συν, with, and αρθρωσις, to articulate.] Union of bones without motion; close union; as in sutures, symphysis, and the like.

SYNAX'IS, n. [Gr., from συναγωγή, to congregate; συν, with, and αγωγή.] A congregation; also, a term formerly used for the Lord's supper.

SYNÆARP'OUS, a. [Gr. συν, and καρπεός, fruit.] In bot., having the carpels of a compound fruit completely united; as in the apple and pear.

SYNATEGOREMAT'IC, n. In logic, a word which cannot be used as a term by itself; as an adverb or preposition.

SYNCHONDROSIS, n. [Gr. συν, and χονδρος, cartilage.] The connection of bones by means of cartilage or gristle, as in the vertebrae.

SYNCHORE'SIS, n. [Gr. συνχωρησις, concession.] In rhet., a figure wherein an argument is scoffingly conceded, for the purpose of retorting more pointedly.

SYN'CHRONAL, a. [Gr. συν, with, and χρονος, time.] Happening at the same time; simultaneous.

SYN'CHRONAL, n. [supra.] That which happens at the same time with something else, or pertains to the same time.

SYNCHRON'ICAL, a. [See SYNCHRONISM.] Happening at the same time; simultaneous.

SYNCHRON'ICALLY, adv. In a synchronical manner.

SYN'CHRONISM, n. [Gr. συν, with, and χρονος, time.] Concurrence of two or more events in time; simultaneousness.—2. A tabular arrangement of history by which contemporary persons and things in different countries are brought together.

SYNCHRONIS'TIC, a. Synchronous; pertaining to synchronism; as, synchronistic tables.

SYNCHRONIZA'TION, n. The concurrence of events in respect of time.

SYN'CHRONIZE, v. i. To concur at the same time; to agree in time.

SYNCHRONO'LOGY, n. Knowledge of, or reference to, contemporaneous events or things.

SYN'CHRONOUS, a. Happening at the same time; simultaneous.

SYN'CHRONOUSLY, adv. [supra.] At the same time.

SYN'CHYSIS, n. [Gr. συν and χυσω.] Confusion; derangement; confusion of words in a sentence; derangement of humours in the eye.

SYN'CIPUT, n. Sinciput,—which see.

SYNCLINAL LINE OR AXIS. [Gr. συνκλίσις, to bend down.] In geol., where the strata dip downward in opposite directions, as in a valley, the imaginary line of their junction towards which the strata on each side descend, is called the synclinal line or axis, in opposition to anticlinal line or axis. [See ANTICLINAL.]

SYN'COPE, v. t. [See SYNCOPE.] To contract, as a word, by taking one or more letters or syllables from the middle.—2. In music, to prolong a note begun on the unaccented part of a bar, to the accented part of the next bar; or to connect the last note of a bar with the first of the following; or to end a note in one part, in the middle of a note of another part.

SYN'COPIATED, pp. Contracted by the loss of a letter from the middle of the word.—2. Inverted, as the measure in music.

SYN'COPIATING, ppr. Contracting by the loss of a letter in the middle of a word.

SYNCOPIA'TION, n. The contraction of a word by taking a letter, letters, or a syllable from the middle.—2. In music, an interruption of the regular measure; an inversion of the order of notes; a prolonging of a note begun on the unaccented part of a bar, to the accented part of the next bar; also, a driving note, when a shorter note at the beginning of a measure is followed by two or more longer notes before another short note occurs, equal to that which occasioned the driving, to make the number even.

SYN'COPE, n. [Gr. συνκοπή, from συνκοπαι: συν, and κοπαι, to cut off.] 1. In music, the same as syncope; the division of a note introduced when two or more notes of one part answer to a single note of another.—2. In gram., an elision or retrenchment of one or more letters or a syllable from the middle of a word.—3. In med., a fainting or swooning; a diminution or interruption of the motion of the heart, and of respiration, accompanied with a suspension of the action of the brain and a temporary loss of sensation, volition, and other faculties.

SYN'COPIST, n. One who contracts words.

SYN'COPIZE, v. t. To contract by the omission of a letter or syllable.

SYN'CRATISM, n. Syncretism,—which see.

SYN'CRETISM, n. [Gr. συνκρησις.] In philosophy, the blending of the tenets of different schools into one system, so as to produce a union among different sects.—2. In religion, a comprehensive scheme of Christian doctrines designed to unite different religious parties or sects.

SYNCRETIS'TIC, a. Pertaining to the Syncretists.

SYN'CRETISTS, n. In eccles. history, the followers of Callixtus, a Lutheran divine, and professor of theology at Helmstädt, who, about the beginning of the 17th century, endeavoured to frame a religious system which should unite together the different professors of Christianity.

SYN'CRISIS, n. In rhet., a figure by which opposite things or persons are compared.

SYNDACTYLES, n. [Gr. συν, and δακτυλος, a finger or toe.] A group of perching birds, including those which have the external toe nearly as long as the middle one, and united to it as far as the second joint. This group contains the bee-eaters, motmots, kingfishers, todies, and hornbills.

SYNDACTY'LIC, } a. Having the SYNDACTYLOUS, } characteristics of the syndactyles.

SYNDESMO'SIS, n. [Gr. συνδεσμος, a ligament.] A species of symphysis, or mediate connection of bones, in which they are united by ligament; as the radius with the ulna.

SYN'DIC, n. [L. syndicus; Gr. συνδικος: συν, with, and δικος, justice.] An officer of government, invested with different powers in different countries; a kind of magistrate intrusted with the affairs of a city or community. In Geneva, the syndic was the chief magistrate. Almost all the companies in Paris, the university, &c., had their syndics. The university of Cambridge has its syndics.

SYN'DICATE, n. In some countries on the European Continent, a council; a branch of government.

SYN'DICATE, v. t. To judge, or to censure.

SYN'DROME, n. [Gr. συνδρομη, a running together.] 1. Concurrence.—2. In med., the concurrence or combination of symptoms in a disease.

SYNEC'DOCHE, n. [Gr. συνεκδοχή: συν and εκδοχη, to take.] In rhet., a figure or trope by which the whole of a thing is put for a part, or a part for the whole; as the genus for the species, or the species for the genus, &c.

SYNECDOCH'ICAL, a. Expressed by synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

SYNECDOCH'ICALLY, adv. According to the synecdochical mode of speaking.

SYNE'CHIA, n. [Gr. συνεχία, continuity; adherence.] A concretion of the iris with the cornea, or with the capsule of the crystalline lens.
 SYNECPHONE'SIS, n. [Gr.] A contraction of two syllables into one.
 SYN'EPY, n. [Gr. συνεπία, union of sounds.] The interjunction of words in uttering the clauses of sentences.
 SYNERGET'IC, } a. Coöperating.
 SYNERGIST'IC, }
 SYNER'GISTS, n. [Gr. συνεργισται, coöperation.] A party in the Lutheran church, who, about the end of the 16th century, denied that God was the sole agent in the conversion of sinners, and affirmed that man coöperated with divine grace in the accomplishment of this work.
 SYNGENE'SIA, n. [Gr. συν, with, and γενεσις, generation.] The name of the nineteenth class of plants in the sexual system of Linnæus, consisting of those plants of which the anthers are united Syngenesia (Senecio Jacobæo).

1. Floret magnified. 2. Section of floret magnified.

into a tube, the filaments on which they are supported being mostly separate and distinct. The flowers are compound. There are five orders, namely, Polygamia equalis, Polygamia superflua, Polygamia frustranea, Polygamia necessaria, and Polygamia segregata. The thistle, tansy, daisy, southernwood, sunflower, and marigold, are examples.

SYNGENE'SIAN, } a. Pertaining to SYNGENE'SIOUS, } the class Syngenesia.

SYNGNA'THA, n. [Gr. συν, with, and γνάθος, a jaw.] The name given by Dr. Leach to an order of insects, belonging to the class Myriapoda, comprehending the species of that class which were included by Linnæus under the head Scolopendra.

SYNGNA'THIANS, n. A family of fishes belonging to the order Lophobranchii, characterized by having the mouth drawn out into a sort of tube or pipe. The type of the family is the genus Syngnathus, or pipe-fish.

SYNGRAPH, } n. [Gr. συν and γραφω.]
 SYNGRAPHIA, } A writing signed by both parties to a contract or bond.

SYNIZE'SIS, n. [Gr. συνίζω, to meet.] A closed pupil; an obliteration of the pupil of the eye, causing a total loss of vision.

SYNNEURO'SIS, n. [Gr. συν and νευρον, a nerve.] In anat., the connection of parts by means of ligaments, as in the movable joints.

SYNOCHA, n. [Gr.] A simple continuous phlogistic fever, not becoming atonic or asthenic, in its course and progress.

SYNOCHUS, n. [Gr.] A simple continuous fever, commonly said to be phlogistic in its early stage, and atonic or asthenic in its progress; a mixed fever.

SYN'OD, n. [Gr. συνδος, a convention, συν and ὁδος, way.] 1. In church history, a council or meeting of ecclesiastics to consult on matters of religion. Synods are of four kinds, 1. General or ecumenical, which are composed of bishops from different nations. 2. National, in which the bishops of one nation only meet, to determine points of doctrine or discipline. 3. Provincial, in which the bishops of one province only meet. This is called a convocation. 4. Diocesan. In the established church of Scotland, a provincial synod is one of the church courts, composed of the several presbyteries within the bounds prescribed by the general assembly, or of the ministers and elders who stand on the roll as constituent members of such presbyteries. The synod is a court of review immediately above the presbytery. Its meetings are generally held twice a year, though in some remote districts only once. Every ecclesiastical question which has been under the consideration of a presbytery within the provincial district, may be competently brought under the review of the synod. It has, besides, an original jurisdiction, as well on subjects of general interest, as with regard to the conduct of its own members, and can both give authoritative directions to the presbyteries, and originate propositions to the general assembly on any subject which seems to require its influence or authority. On the other hand, every judgment of a synod as an inferior court, may be brought under the review of the general assembly by reference, complaint, or appeal. But in every question, not carried to the general assembly, the judgment of the synod (if it has not gone beyond its jurisdiction) is final. Synods whose boundaries are contiguous correspond with one another, by sending one minister and one elder, who are entitled to sit and vote with the other members of the synod to which they are sent. The number of synods is sixteen. The synod is opened by the moderator of the preceding synod, and after the roll is made up, a new moderator, who must be a minister, is elected. Other presbyterian bodies have synods, which are similarly constituted. The convocations of the English clergy are provincial synods, but they have virtually expired.—2. A meeting, convention, or council; as, a synod of gods.

Let us call to synod all the best. Milton.

3. In astron., a conjunction of two or more planets or stars in the same optical place of the heavens.

SYN'ODAL, n. Anciently, a pecuniary rent, paid to the bishop or archdeacon at the time of his Easter visitation, by every parish priest; a procuracy.

Synodals are due of common right to the bishop only. Gibson.

2. Constitutions made in provincial or diocesan synods, are sometimes called synodals.

SYN'ODAL, } a. Pertaining to a SYNOD'IC, } synod; transacted in SYNOD'ICAL, } a synod; as, synodical proceedings or forms; a synodical epistle.—Synodical month, in astron., is the period from one conjunction of the moon with the sun to another. This is called also a lunation, because in the course of it the moon exhibits all its phases. This month consists of 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes, 2'37 seconds.—Synodic revolution of a planet, with respect to the sun, is the period which elapses between two consecutive conjunctions or oppositions. The duration of this period is easily determined when the difference between the mean motion of the planet and sun, in a given interval of time, is known; for this difference is to 360° as the given interval to the synodic revolution.

SYNOD'ICALLY, adv. By the authority of a synod.

SYNOM'OSY, n. [Gr. συννομοςια: συν, with, and νομιζειν, to swear.] Sworn brotherhood; a society in ancient Greece, nearly resembling a modern political club.

SYNONYMA, n. plur. Words having the same signification. But synonyms is a regular English word.

SYNONYMAL, } a. Synonymous.

SYNONYMALLY, } adv. Synonymously.

SYN'ONYME, } n. [Gr. συνωνυμος: συν,
 SYN'ONYM, } with, and ὄνομα, name.]
 A name, noun, or other word having the same signification as another, is its synonym. Thus valour and courage, are regarded as synonyms; so also, virtue and goodness; vice and wickedness. Strictly speaking, words having exactly the same signification do not exist in any language. Different dialects of the same language may indeed have different words of the same meaning, but as soon as these pass from the dialect into the literary or generally adopted language, they either take the place of some other word of the same signification, or receive themselves a new shade of meaning, and are then added to the others. Still, it is true, that the similarity in the meaning of words is often so great, that much discrimination is required to ascertain the different shade of each word. Such words may be frequently used for one another, and this interchange produces a pleasing variety in composition, and is necessary in poetry. Synonyms form an important object of philological study, and demand, on the part of the inquirer, great knowledge of the principles of language. Blair, Booth, and Crabb have written on English synonyms.

He has extricated the synonyms of former authors. Coze's Russ.

SYNONYMI'ST, n. One who synonymizes. Specially, among botanists, a person who collects the different names or synonyms of plants, and reduces them to one another.

SYNONYMI'ZE, v. t. To express the same meaning in different words.

SYNONYMI'ZED, pp. Expressed in different words.

SYNONYMI'ZING, ppr. Expressing the same thing in different words.

SYNONYMOUS, a. Expressing the same thing; conveying the same idea. We rarely find two words precisely synonymous. Wave and billow are sometimes synonymous, but not always. When we speak of the large rolling swell of the sea, we may call it a wave or a billow; but when we speak of the small swell of a pond, we may call it a wave, but we may not call it a billow.

SYNONYMOUSLY, adv. In a synonymous manner; in the same sense; with the same meaning. Two words may be used synonymously in some cases and not in others.

SYNONYMY, n. The quality of expressing the same meaning by different words.—2. In rhet., a figure by which synonymous words are used to amplify a discourse.

SYNOPSIS, n. [Gr. σύνολος: σύν, with, and ολος, view.] A general view, or a collection of things or parts so arranged as to exhibit the whole or the principal parts in a general view.

SYNOPTIC, } a. Affording a general view of the whole, or of the principal parts of a thing; as, a synoptic table.

SYNOPTICALLY, adv. In such a manner as to present a general view in a short compass.

SYNORHIZOUS, a. [Gr. σύν, with, and ρίζα, a root.] Synorhizous plants are those of which the seeds have the point of the radicle incorporated with the albumen; as the pines, firs, conifers, and other polycotyledonous plants.

SYNOVIA, n. [Gr. σύν, with, and λίον, an egg.] In anat., the fluid secreted into the cavities of joints, for the purpose of lubricating them, and to facilitate their motions. It is glairy, and resembles the white of an egg; hence the name.

SYNOVIAL, a. [supra.] Pertaining to synovia; secreting a lubricating fluid; as, the synovial membrane; synovial gland.

SYNTACTIC, } a. [See SYNTAX.]

SYNTACTICAL, } Pertaining to syntax, or the construction of sentences.

—2. According to the rules of syntax or construction.

SYNTACTICALLY, adv. In conformity to syntax.

SYNTAX, } n. [L. syntaxis; Gr. σύνταξις: σύν, together, and τάσσειν, to put.] 1. In gram., the construction of sentences, the due arrangement of words and sentences, according to established usage. Syntax includes concord and regimen, or the agreement and government of words. Words, in every language, have certain connections and relations, as verbs and adjectives with nouns, which relations must be observed in the formation of sentences. A gross violation of the rules of syntax is a solecism.—2. † Connected system or order; union of things.

SYNTERE'SIS, n. [Gr. σύν and τέρεσις.] Remorse of conscience.

SYNTERETIC, a. Preserving health.

SYNTETIC, a. Wasting with consumption.

SYNTEX'IS, n. [Gr.] A deep consumption.

SYNTHESIS, n. [Gr. σύνθεσις: σύν, and τίθειν, to put or set.] 1. Composition, or the putting of two or more things together, as in compound medicines.—2. In logic, composition, or that process of reasoning in which we advance by a regular chain from principles before established or assumed, and propositions already proved, till we arrive at the conclusion. Synthesis is also called the direct method or composition, and is the reverse of analysis or resolution. It is the method followed in Euclid's Elements of Geometry, and most demonstrations of the ancient mathematicians, which proceed from definitions and axioms, to prove propositions, &c., and from those propositions proved, to prove others. Synthesis and analysis are much blended together in the exact sciences, and it may be doubted whether pure synthesis or pure analysis exists in large quantities, in an unmixed state in any science whatever. [See ANALYSIS.]—3. In sur., the operation by which divided parts are united.—4. In chem., the uniting of elements into a compound; the opposite of analysis, which is the separation of a compound into its constituent parts. That water is composed of oxygen and hydrogen, is proved both by analysis and synthesis. The terms synthesis and analysis in chemistry are synonymous with composition or combination, and decomposition.

SYNTHETIC, } a. Pertaining to SYNTHETICAL, } synthesis; consisting in synthesis or composition; as, the synthetic method of reasoning, as opposed to the analytical.

SYNTHETICALLY, adv. By synthesis; by composition.

SYNTHETIZE, v. t. To unite in regular structure. [Not much used.]

SYNTOMY, n. [Gr. σύντομία.] Brevity; conciseness.

SYNTONIC, a. [Gr. σύν, with, and τόνος, tone.] In music, sharp; intense.

SYTPHERING, n. In ship-building, the lapping of the edge of one plank over the edge of another in constructing the bulk-heads.

SYPHILIS, n. [A term coined by Fracastorius, and introduced into nosology by Sauvages. Its etymology is unknown.] Lues venerea, or the venereal disease, a disease characterized by ulcers of a peculiar character on the genitals, succeeded by inguinal buboes. So far, the disease is local. The indications of a constitutional affection are ulcers in the throat, copper-coloured eruptions on the skin, pains in the bones, nodes, &c. This malady is exclusively contagious.

SYPHILITIC, a. Pertaining to syphilis.

SYPHILOID, a. [syphilis, and Gr. ειδος, resemblance.] Resembling syphilis; as, siphiloid affections.

SYPHON, n. [Gr. σῆψον.] A tube or pipe.

More correctly Siphon,—which see.

SYREN. See SIREN.

SYRIA, n. The language of Syria, especially the ancient language of that country. It differs very little from the Chaldee or Eastern Aramaic.

SYRIAC, a. [from Syria.] Pertaining to Syria, or its language; as, the Syriac version of the Pentateuch; Syriac Bible.

SYRIACISM, n. A Syrian idiom.

SYRIAN, a. Pertaining to Syria.

SYRIAN, n. A native or inhabitant of Syria.

SYRIANISM, n. A Syrian idiom, or a peculiarity in the Syrian language.

SYRIASM, n. The same as Syrianism.

SYRINGA, n. [Gr. σφινγίς, σφινγγίς, a pipe.] The lilac, a genus of plants, nat. order Oleaceæ. The species are deciduous shrubs, natives of Europe, and the colder parts of Asia. The leaves are simple, the flowers are purple or white, very fragrant, and arranged in thyrsoid terminal panicles.—S. vulgaris, the common lilac, is one of the commonest ornaments of our shrubberies, blossoming together with the laburnum in May. [See LILAC.] Other species are, S. josikea, the Josikas lilac, a native of Transylvania; S. persica, the Persian lilac; S. chinensis, the Chinese lilac; S. emodi, a native of Kumaon, near the Himalaya; and S. villosa, found on mountains about Peking in China. The name syringa is improperly applied to the species of Philadelphus or Mock-orange.

SYRINGE, n. (syr'inj.) [supra.] A portable hydraulic instrument of the pump kind, commonly employed to draw in a quantity of water or other fluid, and to squirt or eject the same with violence. In its simplest form it consists of a small cylindrical tube with an air-tight piston or sucker, to the rod of which a ring or other convenient handle is attached. The lower end of the cylinder terminates in a small tube, which being immersed in any fluid, the fluid is forced into the body of the cylinder by the atmospheric pressure. By pushing back the piston to the bottom of the cylinder, the contained fluid is expelled in a small jet, and with a force proportioned to the power applied to the piston. The syringe acts on the principle of the sucking pump, and is used by surgeons, &c., for washing wounds, for injecting fluids into animal bodies, and other purposes. It is also employed as a pneumatic machine for condensing or exhausting the air in a close vessel, but for this purpose two valves are necessary. In the condensing syringe the valves open downwards and close upwards; but in the exhausting syringe they open upwards, and close downwards, as in the common air-pump.

SYRINGE, v. t. To inject by means of a pipe or syringe; to wash and cleanse by injections from a syringe.

SYRINGED, pp. Injected by means of a pipe or syringe.

SYRINGODEA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Ericaceæ. The species are natives of the Cape of Good Hope; they are erect shrubs, with loose leaves and large showy flowers, which are crowded at the tops of the branches on every side, and form a spike-like inflorescence. In their cultivation they are treated the same way as heaths.

SYRINGODENDRON, n. [Gr. σφινγίς, a pipe, and δένδρον, a tree.] The name given by Count Sternberg to many species of Sigillaria, (a genus of extinct fossil trees), on account of the parallel pipe-shaped flutings, which extend from the top to the bottom of their trunks. These trunks are without joints, and many of them attain the size of forest trees.

SYRINGOTOMY, n. [Gr. σφινγίς, a pipe, and τομή, to cut.] The operation of cutting for the fistula.

SYRINGX, n. [Gr. σφινγίς, a pipe.] In sur., a fistula.—2. In music, a wind instrument composed of reeds of different lengths, tied together. It is also known by the name of Pandean pipes, its invention having been ascribed to Pan.

SYRMA, n. [Gr.] A long dress, reaching to the ground, worn by tragic actors.

SYRPHIDÆ, n. A family of dipterous insects of the section Brachystoma of Macqart. The species frequent flowers and woods. Some of them inhabit the nests of the humble bees, to which they bear a striking resemblance. The genus syrphus is the type of the family.

SYRPH, n. [L. syrphis.] A quicksand; a bog.

SYRPHIC, a. Relating to a syrt; sandy; boggy.

SYRTIS, n. plur. Syrtēs. [L.] A quicksand. [Not English.] The Greeks and Romans gave the name syrtēs to the two gulfs on the northern coast of Africa, one of which they called Syrtis major, and the other Syrtis minor. Both were the terror of the ancient mariners from their drawing in ships, and swallowing them up in their sandy shoals. The greater syrtis is now called the gulf of Sidra, and the lesser the gulf of Khabs.

SYRUP, or SIRUP, n. [Fr. syrop; Low L. sirupus, or syrpus; from Gr. συριος σαρς, succus syriacus, because the use of syrups originated with the Syrians. But perhaps the word is derived from Arab. sirab, a drink, a potion, a medicated drink; Ar. sherāb, a beverage; sharābah, a draught.] Syrups are medicinal solutions of sugar, either in water alone, as in simple syrup, or in liquids charged with some peculiar principle of an active kind, such as senna or buckthorn, or merely grateful from their colour or fragrance, or both; such as syrup of violets. There is almost an endless variety of syrups, but few of them possess medicinal properties to any important extent.

SYRUPED, or SIRUPED, a. Moistened or tinged with syrup.

SYRUPY, or SIRUPY, a. Like syrup, or partaking of its qualities.

SYSSARCO'SIS, n. [Gr. σαρ, with, and σαξ, flesh.] A species of union of bones, in which one bone is united to another by means of an intervening muscle.

SYSTAL'TIC, a. In med., having alternate contraction and dilatation.

SYSTASIS, n. [Gr. συστασις.] The consistence of a thing; constitution. [Little used.]

SYSTEM, n. [Fr. système; L. systema; Gr. συστημα: συν and ιστημι, to set.] 1. Any combination of things acting together; an assemblage of things adjusted into a regular whole; or a whole plan or scheme consisting of many parts connected in such a manner as to create a chain of mutual dependences; or a regular union of principles or parts forming one entire thing; or an assemblage of facts, or of principles and conclusions scientifically arranged, or disposed according to certain mutual relations, so as to form a complete whole. Thus we say, a system of logic, a system of philosophy, a system of government, a system of principles, the solar system, the Copernican system, a system of divinity, a system of law, a system of morality, a system of husbandry, a system of botany or of chemistry. System is sometimes nearly synonymous with classification, and sometimes with hypothesis or theory. Thus we speak of a mythological system, or a chronological system, in the historical sciences; of a botanical system, or a mineralogical system, in natural science; and of the Copernican, Ptolemaic, or Tychoic system, in astronomy. The purpose of a system is to classify the individual subjects of our knowledge in such a way as to enable us readily to retain and employ them, and at the same time to illustrate each by showing its connection with all. The constituent parts of a system are a fundamental principle which serves as a basis for the whole, and a large collection of facts, from which the various laws are to be deduced, which themselves all flow together into the common principle.—2. Regular method or order.—3. In astron., any hypothesis or theory of the disposition and arrangements of the heavenly bodies, by which their phenomena, their motions, changes, &c., are explained. When such a theory embraces only the sun and the planetary bodies connected with him, it is termed the solar or planetary system; but when it embraces the fixed stars also, or the whole material creation generally, it is termed a system of the universe, or of the world. The most celebrated systems of the world are the following:—1. The Ptolemaic system, framed by the Greek astronomer Ptolemy. According to this system, the earth is an absolutely fixed centre, and the heavens are considered as revolving about it from east to west, and carrying along with them all the heavenly bodies, the stars and planets, in the space of twenty-four hours. 2. The Copernican system, taught by Copernicus in the beginning of the 16th century. According to this system, the sun is supposed to be at rest in the centre of the universe, and the earth and the several planets to revolve about him as a centre, while the moon and the other satellites revolve about their primaries in the same manner. The heavens and fixed stars are here supposed to be at rest, and their apparent diurnal motions are imputed to the earth's motion from west to east. 3. The Tychoic system, proposed by Tycho de Brahe, towards the latter end of the 16th century. According to this system, the sun is a centre of motion to all the planets which revolve round it, while the sun and planetary orbits are carried together round the earth as a fixed centre. 4. The Newtonian system, so named as being adopted by Sir Isaac Newton. In this system there is no fixed centre, the sun only approximating to that character from its greater magnitude. The orbits of the planets, which all revolve round the sun, are approximately represented by ellipses, exactly by ellipses of which the elements vary. The Newtonian system, which is the only one admitted in modern astronomy, is frequently called the Copernican, from its rejecting what Copernicus rejected, but it is far from receiving all that Copernicus received. The term system is frequently applied to the subdivisions of the solar system; thus we have the terrestrial, Jovial, Saturnian, Uranian systems.—4. In anat. and phys., an assemblage of parts or organs which are essentially necessary to the performance of some animal function, as the absorbent system, the nervous system, the vascular system. The whole human body, as an assemblage of parts, is also often termed the system.—5. In the fine arts, a collection of the rules and principles upon which an artist works.—6. In music, an interval compounded or supposed to be compounded of several lesser intervals, as the fifth, octave, &c., the elements of which are called diastems.

SYSTEMATIC, } a. Pertaining to SYSTEMATICAL, } system; consisting in system; methodical; formed with regular connection and adaptation or subordination of parts to each other, and to the design of the whole; as a systematic arrangement of plants or animals; a systematic course of study.—2. Proceeding according to system or regular method; as, a systematic writer.

SYSTEMATICALLY, adv. In the form of a system; methodically.

SYSTEMATISM, n. Reduction of facts to a system.

SYSTEMATIST, n. One who forms a system, or reduces to system.

SYSTEMATIZE, or SYSTEMIZE, v. t. To reduce to system or regular method; as, to systematize the principles of moral philosophy; to systematize plants or fossils.

SYSTEMATIZED, } pp. Reduced to SYSTEMIZED, } system or method.

SYSTEMATIZER, } n. One who re-
SYSTEMIZER, } duces things to system.

SYSTEMATIZING, } ppr. Reducing
SYSTEMIZING, } to system or method.

SYSTEMATOLOGY, n. A treatise or discourse on the various systems.

SYSTEMIC, a. Pertaining to a system.—Systemic circulation, the circulation of the blood through the body generally, as distinguished from that other circulation which is confined to the respiratory organs and the heart, or the respiratory circulation.

SYSTEM-MAKER, n. One who forms a system.

SYSTEM-MÖNGER, n. One given to the forming of systems.

SYSTOLE, n. [Gr. συστολη, from συστέλλω, to contract; συν and στέλλω, to send.] 1. In gram., the shortening of a long syllable.—2. In anat., the contraction of the heart and arteries, for expelling the blood, and carrying on the circulation. [See DIASTOLE.]

SYSTOLIC, a. Relating to systole; contracting.

SYSTYLE, n. [Gr. συν, with or together, and στυλος, a column.] In arch., an intercolumniation of two diameters.

SYTHE. See SCYTHE.

SYHEN'DEMAN, } n. A man, in Anglo-Saxon times, worth six hundred shillings.

SYZYGIUM, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Myrtaceæ. The species inhabit tropical countries; they are trees or shrubs of a highly ornamental appearance from their smooth shining leaves, which are opposite and entire.—S. guineense, which grows on the coast of Guinea and Senegal, has been employed as a remedy in rheumatism.—S. jambolanum is extensively cultivated in the East Indies on account of its edible fruit, sometimes called Java plum by Europeans, but Jamoon by the natives. It is of a rich purplish colour, but of a subastringent sweetish taste, which is more agreeable to the native than to the European palate. The bark is astringent, and dyes of a brown colour; the wood is hard and durable, and much employed.

SYZYGY, n. [Gr. συζυγία: συν and ζυγίω, to join.] The conjunction or opposition of a planet with the sun, or of any two of the heavenly bodies. On the phenomena and circumstances of the syzygies, depends a great part of the lunar theory.—2. [L. syzygia.] In gram., the coupling of different feet together in Greek or Latin verse.

T IS the twentieth letter of the English Alphabet, and a close consonant. It represents a close joining of the end of the tongue to the root of the upper teeth, as may be perceived by the syllable at, et, ot, ut, in attempting to pronounce which, the voice is completely intercepted. It is therefore numbered among the mutes, or close articulations, and it differs from d chiefly in its closeness; for in pronouncing ad, ed, we perceive the voice is not so suddenly and entirely intercepted, as in pronouncing at and et. T by itself has one sound only, as in take, turn, bat, bolt, smite, bitter. So we are accustomed to speak; but in reality, t can be hardly said to have any sound at all. Its use, like that of all mute articulations, is to modify the manner of uttering the vocal sound which precedes or follows it. When t is followed by h, as in think and that, the combination really forms a distinct sound for which we have no single character. This combination has two sounds in English; aspirated, as in think, and vocal, as in that. The letters t, before a vowel, and unaccented, usually pass into the sound of sh, as in nation, motion, partial, substantiate; which are pronounced nashon, moshon, parshat, substanshate. In this case, t loses entirely its proper sound or use, and being blended with the subsequent letter, a new sound results from the combination, which is in fact a simple sound. In a few words, the combination of ti has the sound of the English ch, as in Christian, mixtion, question. T is convertible with d. Thus the Germans write tag, where we write day, and gut, for good. It is also convertible with s and z, for the Germans write wasser, for water, and zahn, for tame. T as an abbreviation, stands for theologia; as, S. T. D. sanctæ theologia doctor, doctor of divinity. In ancient monuments and writings, T is an abbreviation which stands for Titus, Titulus, or Tullius. As a numeral, T, among the Latins, stood for 160, and with a dash over the top, T̄, for 160,000. In music, T is the initial of tenor, vocal and instrumental; of tacet, for silence, as adagio tacet, when a person is to rest during the whole movement. In concertos and symphonies, it is the initial of tutti, the whole band, after a solo. It sometimes stands for tr. or trillo, a shake. — T-bandage, a bandage so named from its figure. It is principally used for supporting the dressings after the operation for fistula in the anus, in diseases of the perinæum, and those of the groin, anus, &c. — T-square, an instrument much used in drawing plans of architectural and mechanical objects. It consists simply of two slips of hard wood or mahogany, a and b, whose edges are dressed truly straight and parallel; the former, called the blade, is much thinner than the stock, b, into which one of its ex-trimities is fixed firmly at right angles; consequently, when the stock is applied to the edges of a rectangular board on which the paper is stretched, a pen or pencil pressed tightly against the blade will trace straight lines parallel or at right angles to each other, as may be required. Sometimes a shifting stock, c, is also applied in the manner represented in the figure for the convenience of drawing oblique lines parallel to each other.

TAB, n. The latchet of a shoe fastened with a string, or otherwise. [Local.]

—2. The end of a lace; a tag. [Local.]

—3. A cap border, worn in the inside of a lady's bonnet.—4. A cup. [Local.]

TABA'NIDÆ, n. A family of dipterous insects. The genus Tabanus, which is the type of the family, comprehends the gad-flies.

TABA'NUS, n. The horse-fly or gad-fly. TAB'ARD, n. [Fr. tabarre, from TAB'ERD, tabardum, low Latin.] TAB'ERT, n. An ancient close-fitting garment, open at the sides, with wide sleeves, or flaps, reaching to the elbows. It was worn over the body armour, and generally emblazoned. At first the tabard was very long, reaching to the mid-leg, but it was afterwards made shorter. It was at first chiefly worn by the military, but afterwards became an ordinary article of dress among other classes in France and England in the middle ages. In this country the tabard is now only worn by heralds.

Tabard, Sir John Corn wall, Amphilh church, Beds.

TAB'ARDER, n. One who wears a tabard.

TABARDEERS, n. A name formerly given to the scholars at Oxford, who wore the tabard.

TAB'ARET, n. A stout satin-striped silk, used for furniture.

TABASHEER, n. A Persian word signifying a concretion found in the joints of the bamboo, said by Dr. Russel to be the juice of the plant thickened and hardened; by others, to be pure silex. It is highly valued in the East Indies as a medicine, for the cure of bilious vomitings, bloody flux, piles, &c.; but its medicinal virtues seem to be more imaginary than real.

TAB'BIED, pp. Watered; made wavy.

TAB'BINET, n. A more delicate kind of tabby; a taffety.

TAB'BY, a. [See the noun.] Brindled;

TABERNACLE

brindled; diversified in colour; as, a tabby cat.

TAB'BY, n. [Fr. tabis; It. Sp. and Port. tabi; G. tabin; Arm. taftas, taffeta. Qu. Fr. taveler, to spot.] 1. The name formerly given to a kind of rich silk and other stuffs watered or figured, by being passed through a calender, the rollers of which are variously engraved. The engraved parts, pressing unequally upon the stuff, renders the surface unequal, so as to reflect the rays of light differently, and produce the appearance of waves. The same effect may be produced by folding the stuffs in a particular manner, and subjecting them to pressure.—2. A mixture of lime with shells, gravel, or stones in equal proportions, with an equal proportion of water, forming a mass, which when dry, becomes as hard as rock. This is used in Morocco instead of bricks for the walls of buildings.—3. A cat. [Collog.].—4. An old maiden lady; an ancient spinster. [Trivial, and used in contempt.]

TAB'BY, v. i. To water or cause to look wavy; as, to tabby silk, mohair, ribbon, &c. This is done by a calender without water.

TAB'BYING, n. The passing of stuffs under a calender to give them a wavy appearance, called also watering.

TABFAC'TION, n. [L. tabeo, to waste, and facio, to make. See TABERV.] A wasting away; a gradual losing of flesh by disease.

TAB'EFY, v. i. [Heb. and Ch. דאב, daab, to pine; or Ar. tabba, to be weakened, to perish.] To consume; to waste gradually; to lose flesh. [Little used.] TABEL'LION, n. [Fr.; L. tabellio, from tabula, a tablet.] A kind of secretary or notary. Such a functionary existed under the Roman empire; and, during the old system, in France.

TAB'ERN. See TABARD.

TAB'ERN, n. A provincial name for a cellar.

TAB'ERNAACLE, n. [L. tabernaculum, a tent, from taberna, a shop or shed, from tabula, a board; or rather from its root. See TABLE.] 1. A tent; Numb. xxiv.; Matt. xvii.—2. A temporary habitation.—3. Among the Jews, a movable building, so contrived as to be taken to pieces with ease and reconstructed, for the convenience of being carried during the wanderings of the Israelites in the wilderness. It was of a rectangular figure, thirty cubits long, ten broad, and ten high. The interior was divided into two rooms or compartments by a veil or curtain, and it was covered with four different spreads or carpets. The outer or larger compartment was called the holy place, being that in which incense was burned, and the shew-bread exhibited; and the inner the most holy place, or holy of holies, in which was deposited the ark of the covenant. The word tabernacle is also applied to the temple; Ps. xv.—Feast of tabernacles, the last of the three great annual festivals of the Israelites, which required the presence of all the people in Jerusalem. Its object was to commemorate the dwelling of the people in tents during their journeys in the wilderness, and it was also a feast of thanksgiving for the harvest and vintage. It was celebrated in autumn at the conclusion of the vintage, and lasted eight days, during which the people dwelt in booths made in the streets, in courts, or on the tops of their houses, of the leafy branches of certain trees. These booths were intended to represent the tents in which the Israelites dwelt in the wilderness. [See Lev. xxiii.]—4. A small temple; a place of worship; a sacred place. The meeting houses of the Methodists are often called tabernacles.—5. Our natural body; 2 Cor. v.; 2 Pet. i.—6. God's gracious presence, or the tokens of it; Rev. xxi.—7. An ornamented chest placed on Roman catholic altars as a receptacle of the ciborium and pyxis.—8. In Goth. arch., a canopied stall or niche; a cabinet or shrine ornamented with open-worked tracery, &c.; an arched canopy over a tomb; also, a tomb or monument.

TABERNAÇLE, v. i To dwell; to reside for a time; to be housed; as we say, Christ tabernacled in the flesh.

TABERNAÇLE, a. In arch., like a tabernacle; richly and quaintly ornate; as, tabernacle work.

TABERNACULAR, a. Latticed.

TABERNEMONTANA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Apocynaceæ. T. utilis is the Hya-Hya or Cow-tree of Demerara, the thick juice of which is used as milk.

TABES, n. [L.] A dysthetic or cachectic disease, characterized by a gradually progressive emaciation of the whole body, accompanied with languor, depressed spirits, and, for the most part, imperfect or obscure hectic, without any topical affection of any of the viscera of the head, chest, or belly. Tabes and consumption are different diseases. The name tabes is now retained for only two forms of disease: 1. Tabes mesenterica, that wasting of the body which follows serofulous inflammation of the mesenteric glands; and, 2. Tabes dorsalis, which denotes an impairment of general health, attended by emaciation, muscular debility, and signs of nervous exhaustion, occasioned by an inordinate indulgence of the sexual appetite. It is so called from the weakness which it causes in the back and loins.

TABETIC, a. Tabid; affected with tabes.

TABID, a. [Fr. tabide; L. tabidus, from tabeo, to waste.] Wasted by disease.

In tabid persons, milk is the best restorative. Arbuthnot.

TABIDNESS, n. State of being wasted by disease.

TABINET. See TABBINET.

TABITUDE, n. [L.] The state of one affected with tabes.

TABLATURE, n. [From table.] Painting on walls and ceilings; a single piece comprehended in one view, and formed according to one design.—2. In music, the expression of sounds or notes of composition by letters of the alphabet or ciphers, or other characters not used in modern music. In a stricter sense, the manner of writing a piece for the lute, theorbo, guitar, bass viol, or the like; which is done by writing on several parallel lines, (each of which represents a string of the instrument), certain letters of the alphabet, referring to the frets on the neck of the instrument, each letter directing how some note is to be sounded. This mode of writing music has long been disused.—3. In anat., a division or parting of the skull into two tables.

TABLE, n. [Fr. from L. tabula; It. tavola; W. tavell, a flat mass, a tablet, a slice, a spread; tâb, tâv, a spread, an extended surface; tavlu, to throw, to project; tavu, to spread or overspread; Sax. tafsl, a die; a table-man; D. tafel, a board, a table, whence in ships, tafferel; G. and Sw. tafel, a board or table; Russ. id.; Fr. tableau, a picture.] 1. A flat surface of some extent, or a thing that has a flat surface; as, a table of marble.—2. An article of furniture, consisting usually of a frame with a surface of boards or of marble, supported by legs, and used for a great variety of purposes, as for holding dishes of meat, for writing on, &c.

The nymph the table spread. Pope.
3. Fare or entertainment of provisions; as, he keeps a good table.—4. The persons sitting at table or partaking of entertainment.

Mistress of a fairer table
Hath not history nor fable. B. Jonson.

16. Draughts; small pieces of wood shifted on squares.

We are in the world like men playing at tables. Taylor.

17. In math. and physics, tables are systems of numbers calculated to be ready for expediting operations, or for exhibiting the measures or values of some property common to a number of different bodies, in reference to some common standard; as, tables of logarithms, tables of annuities, tables of rhumbs, tables of the powers or roots of the different numbers, tables of multiplication, tables of specific gravity, of refractive powers, of the expansions of bodies by heat, &c.—

18. Astronomical tables are computations of the motions, places and other phenomena of the planets, both primary and secondary.—19. In chem., a list or catalogue of substances or their properties; as, a table of known acids; a table of acidifiable bases; a table of binary combinations; a table of specific gravities.—20. In general, any series of numbers formed on mathematical or other correct principles. Thus we have chronological tables, tables of mortality, &c.—21. A division of the ten commandments; as, the first and second tables. The first table comprehends our more immediate duties to God; the second table, our more immediate duties to each other.—22. Among jewellers, a table diamond or other precious stone, is one whose upper surface is quite flat, and the sides only cut in angles.—23. A list or catalogue; as, a table of stars.—

Raised table, in sculp., an embossment in a frontispiece for an inscription or other ornament, supposed to be the abacus of Vitruvius.—Round table. Knights of the round table were a military order instituted by Arthur, the first king of the Britons, A. D. 516.—

Twelve tables, the laws of the Roman republic, so called because they were cut in tablets of bronze, and set up in a public place. These laws were drawn up by the Decemvirs, B. C. 451, and hence they were at first called the laws of the Decemvirs. They were originally only ten in number, but two more were added to them B. C. 450. The twelve tables are called by Livy the source of public and private law; and the text of them was preserved down to the latest age of Roman literature. They formed the basis of the greater part of Roman jurisprudence.—

To turn the tables, to change the condition or fortune of contending parties; a metaphorical expression taken from the vicissitudes of fortune in gaming.—

To serve tables, to provide for the poor; or to distribute provisions for their wants; Acts vi.

TABLE, v. i To board; to diet or live at the table of another. Nebuchadnezzar tabled with the beasts.

TABLEAU, n. [Fr.] A picture; a striking and vivid representation.—2. Performers grouped in a dramatic scene.

TABLEAUX VIVANTS. [Fr. living pictures.] An amusement in which groups of persons are so dressed and placed, as to represent some interesting scene in the works of distinguished painters or authors. Such representations are frequently resorted to in Germany and France, on festive occasions.

TA'BLE-BED, n. [table and bed.] A bed in the form of a table.

TA'BLE-BEER, n. [table and beer.] Beer for the table, or for common use; small beer.

TA'BLE-BELL, n. A small bell to be used at table for calling servants.

TA'BLE-BOOK, n. [table and book.] A book on which any thing is engraved or written without ink; tablets.

Put into your table-book whatever you judge worthy. Dryden.

TA'BLE-CLOTH, n. [table and cloth.] A cloth for covering a table, particularly for spreading on a table before the dishes are set for meals.

TA'BLE-COVER, n. [table and cover.] A cloth, made of wool, flax, cotton, &c., usually woven or stamped with a pattern, and laid on a table between meal-times.

TA'BLEMED, pp. Formed into a table; placed upon a table.

TA'BLE-D'HOTE. (täbl döt.) [Fr.] A common table for guests at a French hotel. The same phrase is used in Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, &c.; an ordinary.

TA'BLE-LANDS, n. [table and land.] The name given to extensive plains which are much elevated above the level of the sea, and have steep acclivities on every side, and therefore differ from other plains, which are either not much elevated, or attain their elevation by imperceptible degrees. The chief table-lands are those among the Andes, those of Mexico, those of Southern Africa, and the immense plains in Central Asia, to the north and north-east of Hindostan. A table-land is also frequently called a plateau.

TA'BLE-LINEN, n. Table-cloths, napkins, &c. [In Scotland, formerly called napery, from napperie, Fr.]

TA'BLE-MAN, n. [table and man.] A man at draughts; a piece of wood.

TA'BLE-MONEY, n. In mar. affairs, an allowance to flag-officers in addition to their pay, as a compensation for the necessary expenses which they are put to in furnishing their tables.

TA'BLER, n. One who tables or boards.

TA'BLE-RENTS, n. Rents paid to bishops, &c., reserved and appropriated to their table or housekeeping.

TABLES, n. plur. An old game resembling backgammon.—2. In Scottish eccles. hist., the designation given to the permanent council held in Edinburgh for managing the affairs of the covenanted, during the reign of Charles I. This council is said to have been so named from a green table at which the members sat.

TA'BLE-SHORE, n. In mar. lan., a low level shore.

TA'BLE-SPAR. See TABULAR-SPAR.

TA'BLE-SPOON, n. A large spoon used at table.

TA'BLE-SPOONFUL, n. The full, or once filling, of a table-spoon. Plural, table-spoonfuls.

TA'BLE-SPORT, n. Amusement at table.

TAB'LET, n. A small table or flat surface.—2. Something flat on which to write, paint, draw, or engrave.—In antiquity, tablets covered with wax, paper, or parchment, were used as ordinary writing materials. Tablets of ivory, metal, stone, or other substance were also used in judiciary proceedings, and all public acts and monuments were in early ages preserved on such materials.

Through all Greece the young gentlemen learned to design on tablets of boxen wood. Dryden.

The pillar'd marble, and the tablet brass. Prior.

3. In arch., a word synonymous with table. [See TABLE, No. 9.] Some writers use it to designate a horizontal projection from the surface of a wall; as, earth-tablet, base-tablet, &c.—4. A medicine in a square form. Tablets of arsenic were formerly worn as a preservative against the plague. A solid kind of electuary or confection, made of dry ingredients, usually with sugar, and formed into little flat squares; called also lozenge and troche; also applied to anything made up in a flat square shape, as a tablet of soap.

TAB'LE-TALK, n. [table and talk.] Conversation at table or at meals.

He improves by the table-talk. Guardian.

TAB'LE-TALK'ER, n. A conversationist; one who studies to lead or outshine others in table-talk; a verbal monopolist.

TABLING, ppr. Boarding; forming into a table; letting one timber into another by scores; placing upon a table.

TABLING, n. A forming into tables; a setting down in order.—2. The letting of one timber into another by alternate scores or projections, as in ship-building.—3. In sail-making, a broad hem made on the skirts of sails by turning over the edge of the canvas, and sewing it down.—4. Among Scotch builders, a term used to designate the coping of very common houses.—Tabling of fines, in law, the forming into a table or catalogue the fines, acknowledged in the court of common pleas. This is done by an officer called the chirographer. [See CHIROGRAPH, CHIROGRAPHER.]—Tabling of a summons. In Scots law, it was the practice in former times to set down in a table all summonses, to be called in their turns; those from each quarter into which Scotland was divided, having a particular quarter of the year allotted to them. The setting down of a summons in such a table, was called tabling of the summons. [See SUMMONS, CALLING OF A SUMMONS, under CALLING.]

TABLINUM, n. [L.] An apartment in a Roman house in which records were kept and the hereditary statues placed. It entered immediately from the Atrium.

TABOO', n. In the isles of the Pacific, a word denoting prohibition or religious interdict, which is of great force among the inhabitants.

TABOO', v. t. To forbid, or to forbid the use of; to interdict approach or use; as, to taboo the ground set apart as a sanctuary for criminals. Tabooed ground is held sacred and inviolable.

TA'BOR, } n. [W. taburz; Ir. tabar;
TA'BOUR, } Old Fr. tabour. This, in some languages, is written tambour, and timbrel. The atabal of the Spaniards is probably of the same family. It is probably named from striking, beating; Eng. tap, Gr. τυττω, Syr. tabal, Ar. tabaa.] A small drum used as an accompaniment to a pipe or fife.

TA'BOR, } v. i. To strike lightly and TA'BOUR, } frequently.

Her maids shall lead her as with the voice of doves, taboring upon their breasts; Nah. ii.

2. To play on a tabor or little drum.

TA'BORER, } n. One who beats the TA'BOURER, } tabor.

TAB'ORET, } n. [from tabor.] A TAB'OURET, } small tabor.

TAB'ORINE, } n. [Fr. tabourin; from TAB'OURINE, } tabor.] A tabor; a small drum, in form of a sieve; also called a tambourine.

TA'BORITE, n. A name given to certain Hussites, or Bohemian reformers, in the 15th century: so named from Tabor, a hill-fort, which was their stronghold, called after Mount Tabor, in Palestine.

TAB'OURET, n. [Fr.] A convex seat without arms or back, made of gilt wood, cushioned and stuffed, covered with silk cloth, and ornamented with silk lace, fringe, tassels, &c.

TAB'RRERE, n. A taborer.

TAB'RET, n. [See TABOR.] A tabor; 1 Sam. xviii.

TAB'ULAR, a. [L. tabularis, from tabula, table.] 1. In the form of a table; having a flat or square surface.

—2. Having the form of laminae or plates.—3. Set down in tables; as, a tabular list of substances.—4. Set in squares.—Tabular crystal, one in which the prism is very short.—Tabular spar, in mineral, a silicate of lime, generally of a greyish white colour. It occurs either massive or crystallized, in rectangular four-sided tables. Tabular spar is the schaalstein of Werner, and the prismatic augite of Jameson. It occurs in primary rocks in Norway and other places.—Tabular structure, in mineral, a form of structure consisting of parallel plates, separated by regular seams. It is the consequence of crystallization, and is not uncommonly confounded with stratification.—Tabular differences, in logarithmic tables of numbers, a column of numbers marked D, consisting of the differences of the logarithms taken in succession, each number being the difference between the successive logarithms in the same line with it. When the difference is not the same between all the logarithms in the same line, the number which answers most nearly to it, one part taken with another, is inserted. In the common tables of logarithms, the logarithms of all numbers from 1 to 10,000 can be found by inspection, but by the aid of the tabular differences, the logarithms of numbers between 10,000 and 1,000,000 may be found. Also, by the aid of the same differences, the number corresponding to any given logarithm can be found to 5 or 6 places. In logarithmic tables of sines, tangents, secants, cosines, cotangents, and cosecants, there are three columns of tabular differences in each page. The first of these is placed between the sines and cosecants, the second between the tangents and cotangents, and the third between the secants and cosines. These numbers are the differences between the logarithms on the left hand, against which they are placed, and the next lower, increased in the proportion of 100 to 60. The use of these differences is to facilitate the finding of the logarithmic sine, tangent, secant, &c., for any given degrees, minutes, and seconds, or the degrees, minutes, and seconds corresponding to any given logarithmic sine, tangent, secant, &c.

TAB'ULA RA'SA. [L.] A smoothed tablet. A term applied, figuratively, to the mind; and said of that of an infant, &c.

TAB'ULATE, v. t. To reduce to tables or synopses.—2. To shape with a flat surface.

TAB'ULATED, pp. Having a flat or square flat surface; as, a tabulated diamond.

TABULA'TION, n. In stat. science, the art or act of forming tables; or throwing data into a tabular form.

TACAMAHAC'EA, n. The popular TAC'AMAHAC, } name of Teca tacamahaca, a tree of South America; also of Calophyllum tacamahaca, a tree of Madagascar and the Isle of Bourbon; and, according to the younger Michaux (but probably by mistake), of Populus balsamifera, a tree of North America.—2. A resin, the produce of Calophyllum tacamahaca or calaba; and of Elaphrium tomentosum, sometimes called Fagara octandra, a tree of the island of Curaçoa, and other islands in its neighbourhood.

TAC'CA, n. A genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Taccaceæ. The species inhabit the hotter parts of India, and the South Sea Islands. From the tubers of T. pinnatifida, dubia, and montana, a white, highly nutritious substance, like arrow-root, is separated, which is employed as an article of diet by the inhabitants of the Malayan Peninsula, and the Moluccas. The petioles and stalks of T. pinnatifida, boiled for some time, are also employed as articles of diet in China and Cochinchina. In Singapore, T. cristata is called water-lily.

TAC'CE. [L. taceo.] A term used in Italian music, directing to be silent.

TAC'CES, n. [Etymol. uncertain.] In archæology, armour for the thigh. [See TASSES.]

TAC'CET, in music, is used when a vocal or instrumental part is to be silent during a whole movement.

TACH, n. [See TACK.] Something TACHE, } used for taking hold or holding; a catch; a loop; a button. It is found in Scripture; Exod. xxvi.

TACHO'METER, n. [Gr. ταχυς, quick, and μετρον, measure.] A contrivance for the purpose of indicating small variations in the velocity of machines. A cup, partly filled with mercury, and attached to a spindle, is whirled round by the machine, and the centrifugal force produced by this whirling, causes the mercury to recede from the centre and rise upon the sides of the cup. As this effect is produced by the velocity of the machine, so it is proportionate to that velocity, and subject to corresponding variations.

TACHYDIDAX'Y, n. [Gr. ταχυς, quick, and διδασκω, teaching.] A short method of imparting knowledge.

TACHYDROM'IAN, n. A bird of the genus Tachydromus; one of a tribe of Saurians, of the same name.

TACHY'DROMUS, n. According to Illiger, a genus of wading birds, the cursorius of Lacepede. The same name is given by Fitzinger to a subgenus of Saurian reptiles, found in the Indian islands and China.

TACHYGRAPH'IC, n. Written in TACHYGRAPHICAL, } short hand.

TACHYG'RAPHY, n. [Gr. ταχυς, quick, and γραφω, to write.] The art or practice of quick writing. Sometimes written tacheography. [We now use steno-graphy, and short hand writing.]

TACH'YLITE, n. A mineral resembling obsidian, supposed also to be similar to isoprye. It is found in small masses at Säsabühl, near Göttingen, in basalt and wacke.

TACHYPETES, n. Vieillot's generic name for the frigate bird; the Pelecanus aquilus, Linn.

TAC'IT, a. [Fr. tacite; L. tacitus, from taceo, to be silent, that is, to stop, or to close. See TACK.] Silent; implied, but not expressed. Tacit consent is consent by silence, or not interposing an objection. So we say, a tacit agreement or covenant of men to live under a particular government, when no objection or opposition is made; a tacit surrender of a part of our natural rights; a tacit reproach, &c.—Tacit relocation. [See RELOCATION.]

TAC'ITLY, adv. Silently; by implication, without words; as, he tacitly assented.

TAC'ITURN, a. [L. taciturnus.] Habitually silent; not free to converse; not apt to talk or speak.

TACITURN'ITY, n. [Fr. taciturnité; from L. taciturnitas, from taceo, to be silent.] Habitual silence or reserve in speaking.

Too great loquacity, and too great taciturnity by fits. Arbutnot.

2. In Scots law, a mode of extinguishing an obligation in a shorter period than by the forty years' prescription. This mode of extinguishing obligations is by the silence of the creditor, and arises from a presumption that in the relative situations of himself and creditor, he would not have been so long silent, if the debt had not been paid, or the obligation implemented.

TACITURNLY, adv. Silently; without conversation.

TACK, v. t. [Gr. τασσα, to set, place, ordain, the root of which was ταγω, as appears from its derivatives, ταχυς, ταγμα. Hence Fr. attacher, It. attaccare, Sp. atacar, W. tagu, to stop, Sp. taco, a stopper. See ATTACH. The primary sense is probably to thrust or send.] 1. To fasten; to attach. In the solemn or grave style, this word now appears ludicrous; as, to get a commendam tached to their seats.

And tack the centre to the sphere.

Herbert.

2. To unite by stitching together; as, to tack together the sheets of a book; to tack one piece of cloth to another. [In the familiar style, this word is in good use.]—3. To fasten slightly; to fasten by tacks or small nails; as, to tack cloth on a board.

TACK, n. }
TACHE, n. } † n. [Fr. tache.] A spot.

TACK, n. [Ir. taca; Arm. tach.] 1. A small nail. Tacks are of various kinds, but they are too well known to require description. They are used for various purposes, but principally for stretching cloth upon a board, and fastening slightly any covering.—2. A rope used to confine the foremost lower corners of the courses and stay-sails, when the wind crosses the ship's course obliquely; also, a rope employed to pull the lower corner of a studding sail to the boom. Hence,—3. The part of a sail to which the tack is usually fastened; the foremost lower corner of the courses. Hence,—4. Birds are aptest by their voice to tell tales what they find. Bacon.

In thee are men that carry tales to shed blood; Ezek. xxii.

6. In law, a count or declaration. [Tale, in this sense, is obsolete.]—7. In com., a weight for gold and silver in China and other parts of the East Indies; also, a money of account. In China, each tale is 10 maces=100 candareens=1000 cash.

TALE, † v. i. To tell stories.

TALEBEARER, n. [tale and bear.] A person who officiously tells tales; one who impertinently communicates intelligence or anecdotes, and makes mischief in society by his officiousness.

Where there is no talbearer, the strife ceaseth; Prov. xxvi.

TALEBEARING, a. Officiously communicating information.

TALEBEARING, n. The act of informing officiously; communication of secrets maliciously.

TAL'ED, n. A sort of habit worn by the Jews.

TALFUL, a. Abounding with stories.

TAL'ENT, n. [L. talentum; Gr. talantros, from talano, to bear, allied to L. tollo. The word is said to have originally signified a balance or scales.] 1. Among the ancients, a weight, and a coin. The true value of the talent cannot well be ascertained, but it is known that it was different among different nations. The Attic talent, the weight, contained 60 Attic minæ, or 6000 Attic drachmæ, equal to 56 pounds, eleven ounces, English troy weight. The mina being reckoned equal to £3 4s. 7d. sterling, the talent was of the value of £193 15s. sterling. Other computations make it £243 15s. sterling. The Romans had the great talent and the little talent; the great talent is computed to be equal to £99 6s. 8d. sterling, and the little talent to £75 sterling.—2. Talent, among the Hebrews, was also a gold coin, the same with a shekel of gold; called also stater, and weighing only four drachmas. But the Hebrew talent of silver, called cicrar, was equivalent to three thousand shekels, or ninety-three pounds, twelve ounces avoirdupois, and its value as silver money, £396 5s. 10d.—3. Faculty; natural gift or endowment; a metaphorical application of the word, said to be borrowed from the Scriptural parable of the talents; Matth. xxv.

He is chiefly to be considered in his three different talents, as a critic, a satirist, and a writer of odes. Dryden.

† It is not my talent to conceal my thoughts. Addison.

4. Eminent abilities; superior genius; as, he is a man of talents. [Talent, in the singular, is sometimes used in a like sense.]—5. Particular faculty; skill. He has a talent at drawing.—6. [Sp. talante, manner of performing any thing, will, disposition.] Quality; disposition.

TALENTED, a. Furnished with talents; possessing skill or talents. [This word is formed like a participle, but without a verb, like bigoted, turreted, targeted.]

TALLES, n. [L. talis, plur. tales.] In law, tales de circumstantibus, spectators in court, from whom the sheriff is to select men to supply any defect of jurors who are impanneled, but who may not appear, or may be challenged. In practice, this seldom occurs, except in the case of special jury trials, when the talesmen are taken from the common jury panel in the same court.—Talesmen, persons selected to fill up a jury in the case above stated. Tales book, a book containing the names of such as are admitted of the tales.

TALLESMAN, n. In English law, a person summoned to act as a juror from among the by-standers in open court.

TALTELELER, n. One who tells tales or stories.

TALE-WISE, a. Being in the manner of a tale.

TALIACO'TIAN OPERATION. A surgical operation for the restoration of lost noses. It is so named from the discoverer Taliacotius or Tagliacozzi, professor of anatomy and surgery at Bologna, towards the end of the 16th century. The operation, according to the discoverer's method, is effected by partially detaching a portion of the skin of the arm, moulding it into the proper shape, causing adhesion, and, after a time, finally detaching it from the arm, so that it remains in its new situation. Of late years several successful operations for new noses have been performed, and this is now always done by turning down a flap of integument from the forehead.

TALIE'RA, } n. The Corypha
TALLIE'RA PALM, } talliera, an elegant stately species of palm inhabiting Bengal. It has gigantic fan-shaped leaves, which are used by the natives of India to write upon with their steel styles, and for other purposes.

TALIO, LEX TALIO'NIS. [L.] The law of retaliation, according to which the punishment inflicted is the same in kind and degree as the injury; as an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, &c. This mode of punishment was established by the Mosaic law; Lev. xxiv. 20.

TALION, n. Law of retaliation.

TALIPAT, } n. The Corypha
TALIPUT PALM, } umbraculifera; a gigantic palm, inhabiting Ceylon, with immense fan-shaped leaves resembling those of the Talliera Palm. [See FAN PALM.]

TALIPED, n. [L. talus, an ankle, and pes, a foot.] The disease called club-foot; also, a person affected with this disease.

TALISMAN, n. [Gr. τάλισμα, tribute, or τέλεσμα, accomplishment, both from τάλλω, to terminate. A term introduced into medicine by Apollonius of Lydiana.] 1. A magical figure cut or engraved under certain superstitious observances of the configuration of the heavens, to which wonderful effects are ascribed; or it is the seal, figure, character, or image of a heavenly sign, constellation, or planet, engraven on a sympathetic stone, or on a metal corresponding to the star, in order to receive its influence. The talismans of the Samothracians were pieces of iron, formed into images and set in rings, &c. They were held to be preservatives against all kinds of evils. Talismans are of three kinds, astronomical, magical, and mixed. Hence,—2. Something that produces extraordinary effects; as, a talisman to destroy diseases.

TALISMAN'IC, } a. Magical; hav-
TALISMAN'ICAL, } ing the properties of a talisman or preservative against evils by secret influence.

TALK, v. i. (tauk.) [Dan. tolker; Sw. tolha, to interpret, translate, explain; D. tolken, id.; Russ. tolkuyti, id. This is probably the same word differently applied. The word is formed from tell. See TELL, for the Danish and Swedish.] 1. To converse familiarly; to speak, as in familiar discourse, when two or more persons interchange thoughts.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, but I will not eat with you.

Shak.

In Æsop's time

When all things talk'd, and talk'd in rhyme.

Trumbull.

I will come down and talk with thee; Numb. xi.

Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way? Luke xxiv. 2. To prate; to speak impudently.—3. To talk of, to relate; to tell; to give account. Authors talk of the wonderful remains of Palmyra.

The natural histories of Switzerland talk much of the fall of these rocks, and the great damage done. Addison.

So shall I talk of thy wondrous works; Ps. cxix.

4. To speak; to reason; to confer.

Let me talk with thee of thy judgments; Jer. xii.

To talk to, in familiar language, to advise or exhort; or to reprove gently. I will talk to my son respecting his conduct.

TALK, n. (tauk.) Familiar converse; mutual discourse; that which is uttered by one person in familiar conversation, or the mutual converse of two or more.

Should a man full of talk be justified? Job xi.

In various talk th' instructive hours they past. Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

I hear a talk up and down of raising money. Locke.

3. Subject of discourse. This noble achievement is the talk of the whole town.—4. Among the Indians of North America, a public conference, as respecting peace or war, negotiation and the like; or an official verbal communication made from them to another nation or its agents, or made to them by the same.

TALKATIVE, a. (tauk'ativ.) Given to much talking; full of prate; loquacious; garrulous. One of the faults of old age is to be talkative.

TALK'ATIVELY, adv. In a talkative manner.

TALKATIVENESS, n. (tank'ative-ness.) Loquacity; garrulity; the practice or habit of speaking much in conversation.

TALKER, n. (tauk'er.) One who talks; also, a loquacious person, male or female; a prattler.—2. A boaster.

TALKING, ppr. (tauk'ing.) Conversing; speaking in familiar conversation; Matth. xvii.—2. a. Given to talking; loquacious; as, talking age.

TALKING, n. (tauk'ing.) The act of conversing familiarly; as, foolish talking; Eph. v.

TALKY, a. (tauk'y.) Talkative. [Vulgar.]

TALL, a. [W. tal; tallu, to grow tall. The primary sense is to stretch or extend; W. telhu, to stretch; Sp. talla, raised work, also stature; talle, shape, size; tullo, a shoot or sprout; talludo, tall, slender; talón, the heel, that is, a shoot; Port. talo, a stalk; talludo, stalky; Ar. tallu, to be long, to spread, to be extended, to defer or delay, that is, to draw out in time, Eng. dally, allied probably to L. tollo, Gr. τέλλω. In Sw. tall is a pine-tree.] 1. High in stature; long and comparatively slender; applied to a person, or to a standing tree, mast, or pole. Tall always refers to something erect, and of which the diameter is small in proportion to the height. We say, a tall man or woman, a tall boy for his age; a tall tree, a tall pole, a tall mast; but we never say, a tall house or a tall mountain. The application of the word to a palace or its shadow, in Waller, is now improper.

Dark shadows cast, and as his palace tall. Waller.

2. Sturdy; lusty; bold. [Unusual.]

TALL'AGE, } n. [Fr. tailleur, to cut off.
TALLIAGE, } See TAIL.] Anciently,

a general word including all subsidies, taxes, tenths, fifteenths, or other burdens or charges laid upon any person. It was generally, however, confined in its sense to taxes received by the king. When it was paid out of knight's fees, it was called scutage; when by cities and burghs, talliage; when upon lands not held by military tenure, hidage.

TALL'AGE, v. t. To lay an impost.

TALLIED, pp. Scored with corresponding notches; fitted; suited.

TALL'IER, n. One who keeps a tally. From this word is derived our modern word teller. [See TALLY.]

TALL'NESS, n. Height of stature. [See TALL.]

TALL'OW, n. [Dan. tæg; D. talk; G. and Sw. talg; Eth. talal, to be fat; Ar. talla, to be moist.] The fat of oxen, sheep, deer, and goats, melted and separated from the fibrous, or membranous matter which is naturally mixed with it. When pure, tallow is white and nearly tasteless; but the tallow of commerce usually has a yellow tinge. All the different kinds of tallow consist chiefly of stearine with a little oleine; but that of the goat contains also hircine in small quantity. In com., tallow is divided into various kinds according to its qualities, of which the best are used for the manufacture of candles, and the inferior for making soap, greasing machinery, and several other purposes. Tallow is also much used in the dressing of leather. It is imported in large quantities from Russia. The fat of swine we never call tallow, but lard. The fat of bears we call bear's grease.—Mineral tallow, the same as hatchetina,—which see.

TALL'OW, v. t. To grease or smear with tallow.

TALLOW-CANDLE, n. A candle made of tallow.

TAL/LÖW-CATCH, † n. A receptacle for tallow.

TAL/LÖW-CHÄNDLER, n. [chandler is generally supposed to be from the Fr. chandelier, and the word to signify tallow-candler, a maker of candles; for in Fr. chandelier is a tallow-chandler. See CORN-CHANDLER.] One whose occupation is to make, or to make and sell tallow candles.

TAL/LÖWED, pp. Greased or smeared with tallow.

TAL/LÖW-FACED, a. Having a sickly complexion; pale.

TAL/LÖW-GREASE, n. Tallow, especially candle-fat. [Familiar, and local.]

TAL/LÖWING, ppr. Greasing with tallow.

TAL/LÖWISH, a. Having the properties or nature of tallow.

TAL/LÖW-TREE, n. A tree of the genus Stillingia, the S. sebifera, growing in China. [See STILLINGIA.]

TAL/LÖWY, a. Greasy; having the qualities of tallow.

TAL/LY, n. [Fr. tailleur, Port. talhar, Sp. tallar, to cut. See TAIL.] 1. A piece of wood on which notches or scores are cut, as the marks of number. In purchasing and selling, it was customary for traders to have two sticks, or one stick cleft into two parts, and to mark with scores or notches on each, the number or quantity of goods delivered, or what was due between debtor and creditor, the seller or creditor keeping one stick, and the purchaser or debtor, the other. Before the use of writing, or before writing became general, this or something like it, was the usual method of keeping accounts, and it is still customary among small publicans, milk-men and others, to keep the account or score of a debt by notches. In the Exchequer, tallies were formerly used, which answered the purpose of receipts as well as simple records of matters of account. Hence the origin of exchequer bills. In former times of financial difficulty, (from the period of the Norman conquest,) the practice had been to issue exchequer tallies. An exchequer tally was an account of a sum of money lent to the government, or of a sum for which the government would be responsible. The tally itself consisted of a squared rod of hazel or other wood, having on one side notches, indicating the sum for which the tally was an acknowledgment. On two other sides opposite to each other, the amount of the sum, the name of the payer, and the date of the transaction, were written by an officer called the writer of the tallies. This being done the rod was then cleft longitudinally in such a manner that each piece retained one of the written sides, and one half of every notch cut in the tally. One of these parts was kept in the exchequer, and the other only issued. When the part issued was returned to the exchequer (usually in payment of taxes), the two parts were compared, as a check against fraudulent imitation. Hence our corresponding practice with cheques, and the origin of the term we employ when we say, that a cheque should tally with its counterpart. Hence also the terms "Bill," Norman French, bille, a baton; billet, a short piece of wood, and the origin of the phrase, being on the "staff," as applied to officers in the pay of the crown. The size of the notches made on the tallies varied with the amount. The notch for £100 was the breadth of a thumb; for £1 the breadth of a barley corn. A penny was indicated by a slight slit. Clumsy as this contrivance may appear, it was effectual in the prevention of forgery. Tallies were finally discontinued in the exchequer in 1834. The tellers of the exchequer derived their name from the word tally, teller being originally written tallier. Many different kinds of tally are used in gardens and arbor-etums, for the purpose of bearing either numbers referring to a catalogue, or the names of the plants near which they are placed. It is quite an error to suppose that promissory notes, supported by the credit of government, are a modern invention. They existed for six centuries in this country before the introduction of paper-money; the only difference between the modern and the ancient system is, that the promissory notes which are now made of paper, were formerly made of wood.—2. One thing made to suit another. They were framed the tallies for each other.

Dryden.

TAL/LY, v. t. To score with corresponding notches; to fit; to suit; to make to correspond.

They are not so well tallied to the present juncture.

Pope.

2. In seamanship, to pull aft the sheets or lower corners of the main and fore sail.

TAL/LY, v. i. To be fitted; to suit; to correspond.

I found pieces of tiles that exactly tallied with the channel.

Addison.

TAL/LY, † adv. Stoutly; with spirit.

TAL/LY HO, the huntsman's cry to his hounds.

TAL/LYING, ppr. Fitting to each other; making to correspond.—2. Agreeing; corresponding.—3. Hauling aft the corners of the main and fore sail.

TAL/LYMAN, n. [tally and man.] One who sells for weekly payment.—2. One who keeps the tally, or marks the sticks.

TAL/LY-SHOP, n. A shop or store at which goods or articles are sold on the tally system. [See TALLY TRADE.]

TAL/LY TRADE, n. A system of dealing carried on in London and other large towns, by which shopkeepers furnish certain articles on credit to their customers, the latter agreeing to pay the stipulated price by certain weekly or monthly instalments. The goods thus furnished are usually of inferior quality, and the prices exorbitant. The system is fraught with much mischief to those (chiefly mechanics, labourers, porters, &c.) who resort to tally-shops.

TAL/MUD, n. [Ch. from לָמַד lamad, to teach.] The body of the Hebrew laws, traditions, and explanations; or the book that contains them. The Talmud contains the laws, and a compilation of expositions of duties imposed on the people, either in scripture, by tradition, or by authority of their doctors, or by custom. It consists of two parts, the Mishna and the Gemara; the former being the written law, and the latter a collection of traditions and comments of Jewish doctors.

TAL/MUDIC, } a. Pertaining to the TALMU/DICAL, } Talmud; contained in the Talmud; as, Talmudic fables.

TAL/MUDIST, n. One versed in the Talmud.

TALMUDIST'IC, a. Pertaining to the Talmud; resembling the Talmud.

TAL'ON, n. [Fr. and Sp. talón, the heel, that is, a shoot or protuberance. See TALL.] 1. The claw of a fowl.—2. In arch., the name given by the French to the ogee moulding.

TALOOK'DARS, n. In India, petty zemindars, some of whom pay their rent through a superior zemindar, while others pay it directly to government.

TAL/PA, n. [L.] The mole, a genus of insectivorous mammalia. The common mole (T. europæa, Linn.) is well known from its subterranean habits, and its vexatious burrowings in cultivated grounds. Another species, T. caeca, inhabits the south of Europe.

TAL/PID'Æ, n. The family of moles.

TAL'US, n. [L. talus, the ankle.] 1. In anat., the astragalus, or that bone of the foot which is articulated to the leg.—2. In arch., a slope; the inclination of any work.—3. In fort., the slope of a work, as a bastion, rampart, or parapet. The upper surface of a parapet is called the superior talus or slope; and that surface of a rampart or parapet which is towards the country, or towards the town, is called the exterior, or the interior talus of the work.

In this signification the word is also written Talut.—4. In geol., a sloping heap of broken rocks and stones, at the foot of any cliff.

TAMABILITY, n. Tamableness, — which see.

TAMABLE, a. [from tame.] That may be tamed; capable of being reclaimed from wildness or savage ferociousness; that may be subdued.

TAMABLENESS, n. The quality of being tamable.

TAM'ARACK, n. Hackmatack; the American larch.

TAMARICA'CEÆ, n. A small nat. order of polyetalous exogens. The species are either shrubs or herbs, inhabiting chiefly the basin of the Mediterranean. They are all more or less astringent; and their ashes, after burning, are remarkable for possessing a large quantity of sulphate of soda. [See TAMARISK.]

TAMARIN, n. A small monkey of South America with large ears; the great eared monkey, Simia midas.

TAMARIND, n. [Sp. tamarindo; Port. plur. tamarindos; It. tamarino, tamarindi; Fr. tamarin; said to be a compound of תָּמַר tamar, the palm-tree, and indus or ind, the root of India.] Tamarindus, a genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Leguminosæ.

Tamarind (Tamarindus indica).

There are only two species, both of which are trees having abruptly pinnate leaves, and bearing many pairs of small leaflets and racemes of flowers. The T. indica, or East Indian tamarind, is a native of various districts of the East Indies, and also of the tropical parts of Africa. It forms a handsome tree, with spreading branches. The T. occidentalis, or West Indian tamarind, is distinguished from the other by possessing short legumes. It is a native of South America and the West India islands, forming also a large spreading tree. Both species are cultivated for the sake of their shade, and their cooling, grateful acid fruit, which is a one-celled legume, with from three to six seeds, the valves being filled with pulp between the endocarp and epicarp. The pulp, dried or packed with sugar or syrup, is imported into European countries. [See TAMARINDS.]

TAMARINDS, n. plur. The preserved fruit of the East and West Indian tamarind trees; that of the former being much larger than that of the latter. In the East Indies the pulp is dried either in the sun or artificially with salt added, which latter kind is sent to Europe. The West Indian tamarinds are put into jars, with layers of sugar between them, or with boiling syrup poured over them, and are called prepared tamarinds; but the East Indian tamarinds are most esteemed. Tamarinds have a sharp, penetrating, and agreeable acid taste, softened by a sweetish one. The pulp is frequently employed in medicine; it is cooling and gently laxative, and is peculiarly grateful in fevers and inflammatory diseases.

TAMARISK, n. Tamarix, a genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Tamaricaceae. The species are shrubs or small trees, clothed with very small green leaves, and long spikes of pink flowers. T. gallica is a native of Tamarisk (Tamarix gallica).

France and of the Mediterranean, and is also found in England. Its ashes contain a large quantity of sulphate of soda. T. indica, or the Indian tamarisk, produces galls which are used in dyeing. The largest and most elegant species is the T. orientalis, a native of Arabia, Persia, and the East Indies. The bark of T. africana is used in medicine as a tonic, and its ashes, like those of T. gallica, yield a large quantity of sulphate of soda.

TAMBAC, } n. The white copper of TOMBAC, } the Chinese, which is a mixture of copper, nickel, and zinc, with a small proportion of iron. It is malleable, and very sonorous.—2. Agalochum, or aloes wood.

TAMBOUR, n. [Sp. and Port. tambor, a drum; It. tamburo. The m is probably casual. See TABOUR.] 1. A small drum, used by the Biscayans as an accompaniment to the flageolet; a tambourine.—2. In arch., a term applied to the naked part of Corinthian and Composite capitals, which bear some resemblance to a drum. It is also called the vase, and campana, or the bell. Also, the wall of a circular temple surrounded with columns, and the circular vertical part of a cupola, both below and above it.—3. A little box of timber work covered with a ceiling, within the porches of certain churches.—4. A cylindrical stone, such as one of the courses of the shaft of a column.—5. In the arts, a species of embroidery, in which threads of silk, gold, or silver, are worked by needles of a peculiar form into leaves, flowers, &c., upon a stuff of silk, linen, or muslin, stretched over a circular frame, which is properly the tambour, and so named from its resemblance to a drum. Machines have, of late years, been constructed for tambour-working.—6. In fort., a kind of work formed of palisades, or pieces of wood ten feet long planted closely together, and driven firmly into the ground.

TAMBOUR, v. t. To embroider with a tambour.

TAMBOURINE, n. (tambureno') [Fr. tambourin, from tambour, tabor; Sp. tamboril. See TABOR.] 1. A musical instrument of the drum species. It is much used among the Biscayans, and hence is known by the name of tambour de Basque. It consists of a piece of parchment stretched over the top of a broad hoop, which is furnished with little bells. It is sounded by sliding the fingers along the parchment, or by striking it with the back of the hand, or with the fist or the elbow. The same name is given to a kind of drum much used in Provence. Its case is longer and somewhat narrower than that of the common drum. It is beaten with a drumstick, while the performer at the same time plays with his left hand upon a small flute.—2. A lively French dance, formerly in vogue in operas.

TAMBOURO'NE, n. [Ital.] The Italian name for the military bass-drum. [See TIMBREL.]

TAMBOUR-WORK, n. A kind of embroidery. [See TAMBOUR.]

TAME, a. [Sax. tam; Sw. tam, tamd; G. zahn. See the verb.] 1. That has lost its native wildness and shyness; mild; accustomed to man; domestic; as, a tame deer; a tame bird.—2. Crushed; subdued; depressed; spiritless.

And you, tame slaves of the laborious plough. Roscommon.

3. Spiritless; unanimated; as, a tame poem. [Not elegant nor in use.]

TAME, v. t. [Sax. tamian, getemian; Goth. ga-tamyan; D. tammen; G. zahn; L. domo; Gr. δωμοσ: Fr. dampier; It. domare; Ch. and Heb. דָּמָה , dum, to be silent, dumb; or Ar. ka-thama, to restrain, to stop, shut, silence, subdue, tame.] 1. To reclaim; to reduce from a wild to a domestic state; to make gentle and familiar; as, to tame a wild beast.—2. To civilize; as, to tame the ferocious inhabitants of the forest.—3. To subdue; to conquer; to depress; as, to tame the pride or passions of youth.—4. To subdue; to repress; as wildness or licentiousness.

The tongue can no man tame; James iii. TAMED, ppr. Reclaimed from wildness; domesticated; made gentle; subdued. TAMELESS, a. Wild; untamed; untamable. [Not much used.]

TAMELY, adv. With unresisting submission; meanly; servilely; without manifesting spirit; as, to submit tamely to oppression; to bear reproach tamely. TAMENESS, n. The quality of being tame or gentle; a state of domestication.—2. Unresisting submission; meanness in bearing insults or injuries; want of spirit.

TAMER, n. One that tames or subdues; one that reclaims from wildness; as, Messrs. Van Amburgh and Carter are famed for being lion tamers.

TAMIAS, n. The generic name of the ground-squirrels.

TAMINE, } n. A strainer or bolter of TAMMY, } hair.—2. A tamis,—which see.—3. A thin woollen or worsted stuff, highly glazed.

TAMING, ppr. Reclaiming from a wild state; civilizing; subduing.

TAMIS, n. [Fr.] A worsted cloth, used for the purpose of straining sauces.

TAMIS-BIRD, n. A Guinea fowl.

TAMKIN, n. The stopper of a cannon. [See TAMPION.]

TAMP, v. t. To fill up a hole bored in a rock, for the purpose of blasting it.

TAMPER, v. i. To meddle; to be busy; to try little experiments; as, to tamper with a disease.—2. To meddle; to have to do with without fitness or necessity.

'Tis dangerous tam'ring with a muse. Roscommon.

3. To deal; to practise secretly.

Others tampered

For Fleetwood, Desborough, and Lambert. Hudibras.

TAMPERING, ppr. Meddling; dealing; practising secretly.

TAMPERING, n. The act of meddling or practising secretly.

TAMP'ING, n. [Fr. tampion?] A term used by miners to express the operation of filling up the hole bored in a rock, for the purpose of blasting it with gunpowder. The powder being first put into the hole, and a tube for a conductor of the fire, the hole is rammed to fulness with brick-dust or other matter. The same name is given to the matter thus employed.

TAMPION, } n. [Fr. tampion; Arm.
TOMPION, } tapon.] The stopper of a cannon or other piece of ordnance, consisting of a cylinder of wood placed in its muzzle to prevent the admission of water.

TAMPOE, } n. The fruit of the He-
TAMPUI, } dycarpus malayanus, a sapindaceous plant, found plentifully in the islands of the Indian Archipelago. Tampoe is much esteemed in the East as an edible fruit.

TAMPOON, } n. A tampion.—2. The bung of a vessel.

TAM-TAM, } n. A kind of native
TOM-TOM, } drum used in the East Indies and in Western Africa. The tam-tam is of various shapes; but, generally, it is made of a hollow cylinder, formed of fibrous wood, such as palm-tree, or of earthen ware, each end covered with skin. It is beat upon with the fingers, and also with the open hand, and produces a hollow monotonous sound. Public notices, when proclaimed in the bazaar or public parts of Eastern towns, are generally accompanied by the tam-tam. This is called proclamation by tam-tam.

TANUS, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Dioscoreaceæ. The T. communis, or common black bryony, is a very common plant in hedges and thickets throughout Europe, and is very frequent in England. It is a climbing herbaceous plant, having very large tubers and red berries. The whole plant contains a bitter acrid principle, which renders it unwholesome.

TAN, v. t. [Fr. tanner, to tan; tanne, a little black spot on the face; It. tane, tawny colour. GREGOIRE, in his Armoric Dictionary, suggests that this may be from tan or dan, which in Leon signifies an oak. But this is very doubtful. In Ir. tionsain signifies a tan-house, and tionsonaim, is to drop or distil. Spotting is often from sprinkling, and dyeing from dipping. In Gaelic, dean is colour. It seems to be allied to tawny, and perhaps to dun.] I. In the arts, to convert animal skins into leather by steeping them in an infusion of oak or some other bark, by which they are impregnated with tannin or tannic acid, an astringent substance which exists in several species of bark, and thus rendered firm, durable, and in some degree impervious to water.—2. To make brown; to imbrown by exposure to the rays of the sun; as, to tan the skin.

His face all tann'd with scorching sunny rays. Spenser.

TAN, n. The bark of the oak, willow, chestnut, larch, and other trees abounding in tannin, bruised and broken by a mill, and used for tanning hides. It bears this name before and after it has been used. Tan, after being used in tanning, is used in gardening for making hot-beds; and it is also made into cakes and used as fuel. In some places, such cakes are commonly, but improperly, called turf; thus confounding it with peat fuel, which, however, it somewhat resembles.

TANACE'TINE, n. A non-azotized compound obtained from Tanacetum vulgare. It is very bitter, and soluble in alcohol, but its nature has not yet been ascertained.

TANACE'TUM, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Compositæ, sub-order Corymbifera. T. vulgare, or common tansy, is a well-known plant, being abundant in Britain, and throughout Europe, on the borders of fields and road sides. Every part of the plant is bitter, and it is considered as tonic and cordial, and has been administered in medicine in cases of worms and hysteria. The young shoots yield a green colouring-matter, used by the Finlanders for dyeing their cloth of that colour. It is said that if meat be rubbed with the fresh leaves, the flesh-fly will not touch it.

TAN'AGRA, } n. A genus of passerine
TAN'AGERS, } birds of the dentirostral family, placed, in Cuvier's system, between the fly-catchers and thrushes.

Tanager (Tanagra cyanocephala).

There are several species, all resembling the finches in their habits. They are remarkable for their bright colours. They are chiefly inhabitants of the tropical parts of America.

TANAGRI'NE, n. The family of the tanagers.

TAN'-BED, n. [tan and bed.] In gardening, a bed made of tan; a bark bed or stove.

TAN'-HOUSE, n. A building in which tanner's bark is stored.

TAN'-PIT, n. [tan and pit.] A bark pit; a vat in which hides are laid in tan.

TAN'-SPUD, n. [tan and spud.] An instrument for peeling the bark from oak and other trees. [Local.]

TAN'-STOVE, n. [tan and stove.] A hot-house with a bark stove. Also the stove itself.

TAN'-VAT, n. [tan and vat.] A vat in which hides are steeped in liquor with tan.

TAN'-YARD, n. An inclosure where the tanning of leather is carried on.

TAN'DEM. [Horseman's Latin.] Horses are harnessed tandem when they are placed single, one before another. But tandem properly refers to time and not to length of line.

TÂNE, † pp. for ta'en, taken.

Two trophies tane from th' east and western shore,

And both these nations twice triumphed o'er. May, Virg.

TANG, n. [Gr. ταγγω, rancour; ταγγω, rancid; It. tanfo.] 1. A strong taste; particularly, a taste of something extraneous to the thing itself; as, wine or cider has a tang of the cask.—2. Relish; taste. [Not elegant.]—3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind. She had a tongue with a tang. Shak.

4. † Sound; tone.—5. In carpentry, the part of chisels and similar tools which is inserted into the handle.

TANG, † v. i. To ring with; to have the twang or sound of. [This may be allied to ding, dong.]

TAN'GENCIES, n. Among the ancient geometers, the problem of tangencies was a branch of the geometrical analysis, the general object of which was to describe a circle passing through given points, and touching straight lines or circles given in position, the number of data being always limited to three.

TAN'GENCY, n. A contact or touching.

TAN'GENT, n. [Fr. tangente; L. tangens, touching. See TOUCH.] In geom., a straight line which touches or meets a circle or curve in one point, and which being produced, does not cut it. Euclid has shown, that the straight line drawn at right-angles to the diameter of a circle, from the extremity of it, is a tangent to the circle. In trigonometry, the tangent of an arc or angle is a straight line touching the circle of which the arc is a part, at one extremity of the arc, and meeting the diameter passing through the other extremity. Thus, in the figure let

AH be a straight line drawn touching the circle ADE at A, one extremity of the arc AB, and meeting the diameter IB produced, which passes through the other extremity B in the point H; then AH is the tangent of the arc AB, or of the angle ACB, of which AB is the measure. The tangent of an arc or angle is also the tangent of its supplement. Thus, AH is the tangent of the supplement AI, or of the angle ACI; for it is easy to see, that the definition above given applies equally to the arc AB and to the arc AI. The arc and its tangent have always a certain relation to each other; and when the one is given in parts of the radius, the other can always be computed by means of an infinite series. For trigonometrical purposes tangents for every arc from 0 degrees to 90 degrees, as well as sines, cosines, &c., have been calculated with reference to a radius of a certain length, and these or their logarithms formed into tables. In the higher geometry, the word tangent is not limited to straight lines, but is also applied to curves in contact with other curves, and also to surfaces.—Method of tangents, the name given to the calculus in its early period. When the equation of a curve is given, and it is required to determine the tangent at any point, this is called the direct method of tangents; and when the subtangent to a curve, at any point, is given, and it is required to determine the equation of the curve, this is termed the inverse method of tangents. The above terms are synonymous with the differential and integral calculus.—Tangent plane, a plane which touches a curved surface; as a sphere, cylinder, &c.—Natural tangents, tangents expressed by natural numbers.—Artificial tangents, tangents expressed by logarithms.—Line of tangents, a line usually placed on the sector and Gunter's scale, by means of which the length of the tangent to any arc having a certain radius may be determined.—Tangent screw, a screw which acts in the direction of a tangent to an arc or circle. Such screws are used to adjust theodolites and other circular instruments. [See WORM-WHEEL.]

TANGENT'IAL, a. Pertaining to a tangent; in the direction of a tangent.—Tangential force, in circular motion, the same as centrifugal force.

TANGENT'IALLY, adv. In the direction of a tangent.

TAN'GHIN, n. A deadly poison obtained from the seeds of Tanghinia venenifera,—which see.—Trial by tanghin, a kind of ordeal in Madagascar, to determine the guilt or innocence of an accused person, by taking the tanghin poison. The result is entirely in the power of the administrators, who kill or favour the party, according to circumstances.

TANGHINIA, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Apocynaceæ. T. venenifera is a tree which produces the celebrated tanghin poison of Madagascar. The poisonous quality resides in the kernel, and one seed is said to be sufficient to kill twenty persons.

Tanghinia venenifera.

TANGHININE, } n. A non-azotized
TANGUINE, } principle obtained from the seeds of Tanghinia venenifera.
It is crystallizable, very bitter and acid, and also poisonous.

TANGIBILITY, } n. [from tangible.]
TANGIBLENESS, } The quality of being perceptible to the touch or sense of feeling.

TANGIBLE, a. [from L. tango, to touch.] 1. Perceptible by the touch; tactile.—2. That may be possessed or realized.

TANGIBLY, adv. So as to be perceptible to the touch.

TANGLE, v. t. [This word, if n is casual, seems to be allied to the W. tagu, to choke, Goth. taga, hair; from crowding together. In Ar. dagaa signifies to involve.] 1. To implicate; to unite or knit together confusedly; to interweave or interlock, as threads, so as to make it difficult to unravel the knot.—
2. To ensnare; to entrap; as, to be tangled in the folds of dire necessity.

Tangled in amorous nets. Milton.

3. To embroil; to embarrass.
When my simple weakness strays,
Tangled in forbidden ways. Crashaw.

[Entangle, the compound, is the more elegant word.]

TANGLE, v. i. To be entangled or united confusedly.

TANGLE, n. A knot of threads or other things united confusedly, or so interwoven as not to be easily disengaged; as, hair or yarn in tangles.—
2. Laminaria, a genus of sea-weeds.
[See LAMINARIA.]

TANGLED, pp. United confusedly.
TANGLING, ppr. Uniting without order.

TANGLINGLY, adv. In a tangling manner.

TANGLY, a. Knotted; intertwined; intricate.

TANGUM, } n. The primeval stock of TANGAN, } the piebald horse, found in Thibet, of which it is a native. It appears to be related to the Tartar horse, and to the Kiang, or wild horse of the Himalayas.

Tangum or Thibet Horse.

TANIST, n. [Gaelic, tanaiste, a lord,
the governor of a country; in Ireland, the heir apparent of a prince; probably from tan, a region or territory, or from the Gr. δυναστος, a lord, which is from δυναμις, to be powerful or able, the root of the Gaelic duine, a man. But both may be of one family, the root tan, ten, Gr. τενω, L. teneo, W. tannu, to stretch, strain, or hold.] Among the descendants of the Celts in Ireland, a lord, or the proprietor of a tract of land; a governor or captain. This office or rank was elective, and often obtained by purchase or bribery.

TANISTRY, n. [Gaelic, tanaisteachd.]
In Ireland, a tenure of lands by which the proprietor had only a life estate, and to this he was admitted by election.
The primitive intention seems to have been that the inheritance should descend to the oldest or most worthy of the blood and name of the deceased.
This was in reality giving it to the strongest, and the practice often occasioned bloody wars in families.

TANK, n. [Fr. etang, a pond; Sp.
estanque; Port. tanque; Sans. tanghi;
Japan, tange. This seems to be from the root of stanch, to stop, to hold.]
A large basin or cistern; a reservoir for water or other fluids. Tanks are generally formed by making excavations in the earth, and lining the sides and bottom with bricks, stone, timber, cast-iron, or sheet-lead, or puddling them with clay. They are covered over, and used to collect and retain water and liquid manure, for domestic and agricultural purposes. In high mountainous pastures, tanks for collecting rain-water are indispensable to supply both men and cattle with water.
The same name is sometimes applied to large open receptacles or ponds, formed by excavating the ground, and disposing the removed earth in the form of banks to retain the water.—
2. In the navy, a case of sheet-iron for the stowage of the ship's water. It is generally about four feet square, and contains about two tons of water. Bilge tanks of various forms are also employed.

TANKARD, n. [Ir. tancard; Gaelic, tancard; tank and ard.] A large vessel for liquors, or a drinking vessel, with a cover.

Marius was the first who drank out of a silver tankard, after the manner of Bacchus.
Arbuthnot.

TANKE, n. In her., a kind of deep round cap, called also a cap-tanke. It was used by the ancient servile Romans.
TANLING, n. One tanned or scorched by the heat of the sun.

TANNA, n. In India, a police station;
also a military post.

TANNADAR, n. In India, the keeper or commandant of a tanna.

TANNATE, n. A salt formed by the union of tannic acid with a base; as, the tannate of potash or of magnesia. The tannates are characterized by striking a deep bluish black colour with the persalts of iron.

TANNED, pp. [from tan.] Converted into leather. [See TAN.]—2. Darkened by the rays of the sun.

TANNER, n. One whose occupation is to tan hides, or convert them into leather by the use of tan.

TANNER'S-BARK, n. The bark of the oak, chestnut, willow, and other trees, which abounds in tannic acid, and is employed by tanners in the preparation of leather. [See TAN.]

TANNERY, n. The house and apparatus for tanning.

TANNIC ACID, or TANNIN, n. A peculiar acid which exists in every part of all species of oak, especially in the bark, but is found in greatest quantity in gall-nuts. Tannic acid, when pure, is nearly white, and not at all crystalline. It is very soluble in water, and has a most astringent taste without bitterness. It combines with animal gelatine, forming an insoluble curdy precipitate, which has been called tannogelatine. It derives its name from its property of combining with the skins of animals, and converting them into leather, or tanning them. Its ultimate elements are 30 atoms of carbon, 18 of hydrogen, and 24 of oxygen. It is the active principle in almost all astringent vegetables.

TANNIER, n. One of the popular names of the Arum esculentum, an esculent root.

TANNIN, n. The name formerly applied to the tannic acid, before its acid character was known and understood.
—Artificial tannin, the name given by Mr. Hatchett to a brown substance obtained by digesting powdered charcoal in nitric acid, and evaporating the solution. It has an astringent taste, and forms an insoluble compound with gelatine.

TANNING, ppr. Converting raw hides into leather.

TANNING, n. The practice, operation, and art of converting the raw hides and skins of animals into leather, by effecting a chemical combination between the gelatine of which they principally consist, and the astringent vegetable principle called tannic acid, or tannin. The object of the tanning process is, to produce such a chemical change in skins as may render them unalterable by those agents which tend to decompose them in their natural state; and in connection with the subsequent operations of currying, or dressing, to bring them into a state of pliability and impermeability to water, which may adapt them for the many useful purposes to which leather is applied. The larger and heavier skins subjected to the tanning process, as those of buffaloes, bulls, oxen, and cows, are technically called hides; while those of smaller animals, as calves, sheep, and goats, are called skins. After being cleared of the hair, wool, and fleshy parts, by the aid of lime, scraping, and other means, the skins are usually steeped in an infusion of ground oak bark, which supplies the astringent or tanning principle, and thus converts them into leather. Different tanners, however, vary much in the mode of conducting the process of tanning, and also the skins intended for different kinds of leather require to be treated differently. Various improvements have been made in the process of tanning, by which time and labour are much reduced, but it is found that the slow process, followed by the old tanners, produces leather far superior to that produced by quick processes.

TAN'REC, } n. The popular name of TEN'REC, } the several species of TEN'DRAC, } the insectivorous mammalian genus Centeres, of which there are three species. They are small quadrupeds, inhabiting Madagascar and the Isle of France.

TANSY, n. (s as z.) [Fr. tanaisie; It.
and Sp. tanacet; L. tanacetum.] The popular name of a genus of plants.
[See TANACETUM.]

TANT, n. A small spider with two eyes and eight long legs, and of an elegant scarlet colour.

TANTALIDÆ, n. A family of wading birds, of which the genus Tantalus of Lin. is the type. The Tantalus reli-giosus is the celebrated Ibis worshipped by the ancient Egyptians.

TANTALISM, n. [See TANTALIZE.]
The punishment of Tantalus; a teasing or tormenting by the hope or near approach of good which is not attainable.

Is not such a provision like tantalism to this people? J. Quincy.

TANTALITE, n. Another name for the mineral called columbite, which is found in New England and in Europe.

TANTALIZATION, n. The act of tantalizing.

TANTALIZE, v. t. [from Tantalus, in fable, who was condemned for his crimes to perpetual hunger and thirst, with food and water near him which he could not reach.] To tease or torment by presenting some good to the view and exciting desire, but continually frustrating the expectations by keeping that good out of reach; to tease; to torment.

Thy vain desires, at strife
Within themselves, have tantaliz'd thy life.
Dryden.

TANTALIZED, pp. Teased or tormented by the disappointment of the hope of good.

TANTALIZER, n. One that tantalizes.

TANTALIZING, ppr. Teasing or tormenting by presenting to the view some unattainable good.

TANTALIZINGLY, adv. By tantalizing.

TANTALUM, n. A name once used for columbium, the metallic basis of the mineral called tantalite or columbite.

TANTALUS, n. [L. from Gr.] In fab.
hist., a Lydian king who was condemned to be plunged in water, with choice fruits hanging over him, without the power of reaching them, to satisfy his hunger or his thirst. Hence the English word tantalize.

TANTALUS'S CUP, n. A philosophical toy. It consists of a siphon so adapted to a cup, that the short leg being in the cup, the long leg may go down through the bottom of it. When water is poured into the cup, it rises in the shorter leg of the siphon until it reaches up to the top of the bend of the siphon, when it flows over into the longer leg, and escapes through the bottom of the cup, so that if water is not supplied to the cup as fast as it escapes by the siphon, the cup will soon be emptied. In the toy the siphon is concealed within the figure of a man, whose chin is on a level with the bend of the siphon. Hence, as soon as the water rises up to the chin of the image, it begins to subside, so that the figure, like Tantalus in the fable, is unable to quench his thirst.

TANTAMOUNT, a. [L. tantus, so much, and amount.] Equal; equivalent in value or signification; as, a sum tantamount to all our expenses. Silence is sometimes tantamount to consent.

TANTATIVY, adv. [said to be from the note of a hunting horn; L. tanta vi.]
To ride tantivy, is to ride with great speed.

TANTIVY, † n. [Possibly an application of the preceding word as a nickname to a rustic country gentleman.] A devoted adherent of the court, in the time of Charles II.; a royalist; an opponent of the bill of Exclusion.

Those who took the king's side were anti-Birminghams, abhorers, and tantivies.
These appellations soon became obsolete.

Macaulay.
TANTLING, n. [See TANTALIZE.]
One seized with the hope of pleasure unattainable.

TANT'RUMS, n. plur. In colloq. lan., childish ill humours; high airs; as to be in the tant'rums.

TAP, v. t. [Fr. taper; Arm. tapa, tapein; Dan. tapper, to throb; Gr.
ταπειν, τυπειν.] To strike with something small, or to strike a very gentle blow; to touch gently; as, to tap one with the hand; to tap one on the shoulder with a cane.

TAP, v. t. To strike a gentle blow. He tapped at the door.

TAP, v. t. [Sax. tæppan; D. tappen;
G. zapfen.] 1. To pierce or broach a cask, and insert a tap.—2. To open a cask and draw liquor.—3. To pierce for letting out fluid; as, to tap a tumour; to tap a dropsical person.—
4. To box or bore into; as, to tap a maple tree to obtain the sap for making sugar.

TAP, n. A gentle blow; a slight blow with a small thing.

She gives her right hand woman a tap
on the shoulder. Addison.

2. A pipe for drawing liquor from a cask. [But in Sp. tapar is to stop, and a tap may be a stopper. In this case, the verb to tap should follow the noun.]
—3. A tap-house, or tap-room.

TAP, In mech., an instrument employed for cutting the threads of internal screws or nuts. It consists simply of an external or male screw of the required size, formed of steel, and more or less tapered, portions of the threads being filed away in order to present a series of cutting edges. This being screwed into the nut in the manner of an ordinary bolt, forms the thread required.

TAPE, n. [Sax. tappe.] A narrow fillet or band; a narrow piece of woven work, used for strings and the like;
as, curtains tied with tape.

Tantalus Cup.

TAPE LINE, n. A painted tape, marked with inches, &c., and inclosed in a case, used by engineers, &c., in measuring.

TAPER, n. [Sax. taper, tapur. Qu. It.
doppiere, a torch, W. tampyr.] A small wax candle; a small lighted wax candle, or a small light.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius.
Shak.

TAPER, a. [supposed to be from the form of a taper.] Regularly narrowed toward the point; becoming small toward one end; conical; pyramidal;
as, taper fingers.

TAPER, v. i. To diminish or become gradually smaller toward one end; as, a sugar loaf tapers toward a point.

TAPER, v. t. To make gradually smaller in diameter.

TAPERING, ppr. Making gradually smaller.—2. a. Becoming regularly smaller in diameter toward one end; conical or pyramidal; gradually diminishing toward a point.—Tapering root, in bot., a root generally fleshy, and of an elongated conical form, either undivided or branched at its lowest extremity. The most common example is afforded by the garden carrot. In the radish it is spindle-shaped, or tapering toward both ends.

TAPERINGLY, adv. In a tapering
manner.

TAPERNESS, n. The state of being taper.

TAPER SHELL BIT, n. A species of boring-bit used by joiners. It is conical both within and without, and its horizontal section is a crescent, the cutting edge being the meeting of the interior and exterior conical surfaces.
Its use is for widening holes in wood.

TAP'ESTRIED, pp. Ornamented with tapestry.

TAP'ESTRY, n. [Fr. tapis, a carpet;
tapisserie, hangings, tapestry; L. tapes, tapestry; Fr. se tapis, to crouch, to lie flat; Sp. tapiz, tapestry, and a grass-plot; It. tappeto, a carpet; tappezzeria, tapestry; Arm. tapigz, a carpet; tapigziry, tapestry. Qu. from weaving or spreading.] A kind of woven hangings of wool and silk, often enriched with gold and silver, representing figures of men, animals, landscapes, &c., and used formerly for lining or covering the walls of elegant apartments, churches, &c. The French ascribe the invention to the Saracens, but it was known among Eastern nations from a very remote era. A manufactury of tapestry was established at Paris in 1606 or 1607, which was conducted by Flemish artists; but the manufactory of the Gobelins, instituted in France under Louis XIV., became the most celebrated for the beauty and strength of the cloth, for elegance of design, and happy choice of colours. The finest paintings were copied, and eminent painters employed to furnish designs. In painting, tapestry is applied to a representation of a subject in wool or silk, or both, worked on a woven ground of hemp or flax.

TAP'ESTRY, v. t. To adorn with tapestry.

TAP'ET, n. [supra.] Worked or figured stuff.

TAP'ETI, n. An animal of the hare kind; the Lepus Brasiliensis, a rodent mammal inhabiting South America.

TAP'ETLESS, a. Heedless; foolish.
[Scotch.]

TAPE-WORM, n. [tape and worm.] A worm bred in the human intestines.

The popular name of various worms infesting the alimentary canal of different animals. They are parenchymatous entozoa, of the tenoid family. The broad tape-worm is the Bothrioccephalus latus; the common tape-worm is the Tænia solium. Both of these infest the human species, and are destroyed by the oil of turpentine in cathartic doses. [See TENIA.]

TAP'-HOUSE, n. [tap and house.] A house where liquors are retailed; a house where beer is served from the tap.

TAPIO'CA, n. A farinaceous substance prepared in South America, from the root of Janipha, or Jatropha manihot, the bitter Cassada or Manioc plant. This root presents the union of a deadly poison with highly nutritive qualities. The former appears to reside exclusively in the juice. In preparing cassava or manioc flour, the principal product yielded by the manihot, the roots, after having undergone the preliminary process of grating, &c., are subjected in bags to pressure in a screw press. The poisonous juice thus expressed, after being allowed to stand and settle for a short time, deposits a fine floury substance, which constitutes the tapioca of commerce. Tapioca is very nutritious and easy of digestion, being free from stimulating qualities. A spurious kind of tapioca is prepared from gum and potato flour.

TAPIR, n. A genus of pachydermatous, or thick-skinned mammals, of which three existing species, and several extinct ones, have been determined. The nose resembles a small fleshy proboscis; there are four toes to the fore feet, and three to the hind ones. The South American tapir, T. Americanus, is the size of a small ass, with a brown skin, nearly naked. The flesh is eaten. Another American species has been discovered in the Cordilleras, the back of which is covered with hair, and the bones of the nose more elongated, and approximating somewhat to the palæotherium. The T. Malayanus, or indicus, is found in the forests of Malacca and Sumatra. It is larger than the American species. The tapirs are allied both to the hog and to the rhinoceros, but they are much smaller than the latter. Fossil tapirs are scattered throughout Europe, and among them is a gigantic species, T. giganteus, Cuv., which in size must have nearly equalled the elephant.

TAP'PIS, n. [Fr.] Tapestry. Formerly tapestry was used to cover the table in a council chamber; hence, to be on or upon the tapis, is to be under consideration, or on the table.

TAP'LASH, n. [from tap.] Poor beer. TAP'PED, pp. Broached; opened. TAPPET, n. A small lever connected with the valve of the cylinder of a steam-engine.

TAP'PING, ppr. Broaching; opening for the discharge of a fluid.

TAP'PING, n. In surgery, paracentesis, or the operation of removing fluid from any of the serous cavities of the body, in which it has collected in large quantity; as in cases of ascites, hydrothorax, and hydrocele. It is performed by means of a trocar and a tube, in which it exactly fits.

TAP'PIT HEN, n. A colloquial phrase, denoting a tin measure containing a quart, so named from the knob on the lid, as being supposed to resemble a crested hen. [Scotch.]

TAP' ROOM, n. A room in which beer is served from the tap.

TAP'-ROOT, n. [tap and root.] The main root of a plant, which penetrates the earth directly downward to a considerable depth.

TAP'-ROOTED, a. Having a tap-root. TAPSALTEE'RIE, adv. Topsy turvy. [Scotch.]

TAP'STER, n. One whose business is to draw ale or other liquor.

TÁ'PUL, n. In ancient armour, the sharp projecting ridge down the centre of some breastplates.

TÁR, n. [Sax. tare, tyr, tyrwa; D. teer; G. theer; Gael. tearr. In D. teeren signifies to smear with tar or pitch, and to pine, waste, consume, digest, prey, subsist, feast, and teer is tender, as well as tar. The D. teeren is the G. zehren, Dan. tærer, Sw. tåra, to fret, gnaw, consume; Eng. tare, in commerce. Tar then is from flowing, or from wasting, perhaps in combustion.] 1. A thick, impure, resinous substance, of a dark brown or black colour, obtained from pine and fir trees, by burning the wood with a close smothering heat, or by distilling it in close vessels, or ovens. It is prepared in great quantities in Norway, Sweden, Russia, Germany, North America, and in other countries where the fir and pine abound. It is also manufactured from pit coal. Tar is soluble in alcohol, ether, and in the fixed and volatile oils. It consists of resin, empyreumatic oil, and acetic acid, or vinegar. According to Reichenbach it contains the following proximate principles: paraffine eupion, creasote picamar, capnomar, and pittacal. The most important of these is creasote. Oil of tar is a brown liquid obtained by distilling tar with water. Mineral tar, a variety of bitumen resembling petroleum. Tar inspissated is called pitch, and is much used in ships and cordage.—2. A sailor; so called from his tarred clothes.

TÁR, v. t. To smear with tar; as, to tar ropes.—2. † [Sax. tiran, tyrian.] To tease; to provoke.

TARÁBE, n. A large parrot with a red head.

TAR'ANIS, n. A Celtic divinity, regarded as the evil principle, but confounded by the Romans with Jupiter.

Chides the tardy-gaited morn. Clifton.

TARE, n. [Sax. tiran, to prey upon; to consume, because it destroys the corn. See the next word.] The common name of different species of Vicia, a genus of leguminous plants, and which are also known by the name of vetch. There are numerous species and varieties of tares or vetches, many of which have been proposed to be introduced into general cultivation, but that which is found best adapted for agricultural purposes is the common tare, Vicia sativa, of which there are two principal varieties, the summer and winter tare. They afford excellent food for horses and cattle, and hence are extensively cultivated throughout Europe. [See VETCH.] The name tare is also given to two British leguminous plants of the genus Ervum, the E. hirsutum, or hairy tare, and E. tetraspermum, or smooth tare. Both are annuals, and are found growing in fields and hedges. The tare, (Zizania), mentioned in scripture, is supposed to be the Lolium temulentum, or darnel,—which see.

TARE, n. [Fr. id.; It. and Sp. tara; D. tarra; It. tarare, to abate; Dan. tærer, to waste, G. zehren.] In com., deficiency in the weight or quantity of goods by reason of the weight of the cask, bag, or other thing containing the commodity, and which is weighed with it; hence, the allowance or abatement of a certain weight or quantity from the weight or quantity of a commodity sold in a cask, chest, bag, or the like, which the seller makes to the buyer on account of the weight of such cask, chest, or bag. Tare is distinguished into real tare, customary tare, and average tare. The first is the absolute weight of the package; the second, its supposed weight according to the practice among merchants; and the third is the medium tare deduced from weighing a few packages and taking it as the standard for the whole. In this country the prevailing practice, as to all goods that can be unpacked without injury, is to ascertain the real tare. Sometimes, however, the buyer and seller make a particular agreement about it. When the tare is deducted, the remainder is called the net or neat weight.—Tare and tret, a rule in arithmetic by which the neat weight of a quantity of goods is ascertained, the gross weight and the allowances for the tare and the tret being given. [See TRET.]

TARE, v. t. To ascertain or mark the amount of tare.

TARE, oldpret. of Tear. We now use tore.
TARED, pp. Having the tare ascertained and marked.

TAREN'TISM, } n. [L. tarentismus,
TARAN'TISM, } from tarentum.] A feigned or imaginary disease endemic in the environs of Tarentum. It was characterized by an extreme desire to dance to the sound of musical instruments, and was popularly supposed to be caused by the bite of the Tarentula. According to others, this disease consisted in a state of somnolency, which could not be overcome except by music and dancing.—2. A disease in its effects resembling St. Vitus's dance and leaping ague.

TAREN'TULA, } n. [L. diminutive of TARAN'TULA, } Tarentum, now Taranto, in the kingdom of Naples.] A kind of spider, the Lycosa tarantula, found in some of the warmer parts of Italy. When full grown it is about the size of a chestnut, and is of a brown colour. Its bite was at one time supposed to be dangerous, and to cause the disease called tarentism,—which see; it is now known not to be worse than that of a common wasp.—2. A dance practised in the neighbourhood of Tarentum, and named from the spider already referred to.—3. An air of a light gay character, played to the dance of the same name.

TARGE, for Target, is obsolete.

TARG'ET, n. [Sax. targ, targa; Fr. targe; It. targa; W. targed, from tarau, to strike, whence tariad, a striking against or collision, a stopping, a staying, a tarrying; tariaw, to strike against, to stop, to tarry.] We see that target is that which stops; hence, a defence; and from the root of tarry and tardy.] 1. A shield or buckler of a small kind, used as a defensive weapon in war. It was formerly much used in Scotland.—2. A mark for the artillery to fire at in their practice.

TARG'ETED, a. Furnished or armed with a target.

TARG'ET'EER, } n. One armed with TARG'ET'IER, } a target.

TARGUM, n. [Ch. תַּרְגָּוִם, targum, interpretation.] A translation or paraphrase of the sacred scriptures in the Chaldee language or dialect. There are ten targums extant; of which the most ancient, and the most valued by the Jews, are those of Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel. The targum of Onkelos is a paraphrase, or rather a Chaldee version of the Pentateuch, and is supposed to have been written in the first century of the Christian era. The targum of Jonathan is a paraphrase upon the greater and lesser Prophets, and is said to have been written in the third century. The targum of the Pseudo-Jonathan, and the Jerusalem targum, are both on the Pentateuch, and are of considerable antiquity. The remaining six are comparatively modern. All the targums taken together form a paraphrase of the whole of the Old Testament, except Nehemiah, Ezra, and Daniel.

TARGUMIST, n. The writer of a Targum.

TAR'IAN, n. The earliest form of the British shield. It was round and flat, and its exterior coating, made sometimes of bronze, was ornamented frequently with concentric circles surrounding the umbo, and studded over with little knobs beaten up from beneath.

TAR'IFF, n. [Fr. tarif; It. tariffa; Sp. tarifa, a town in Spain, at the entrance of the Straits of Gibraltar, where duties were formerly collected, hence the proper spelling would be tarif.] 1. Properly, a list or table of goods with the duties or customs to be paid for the same, either on importation or exportation, whether such duties are imposed by the government of a country, or agreed on by the princes or governments of two countries holding commerce with each other. The principle of a tariff depends upon the commercial policy of the state by which it is framed, and the details are constantly fluctuating with the change of interests and the wants of the community, or in pursuance of commercial treaties with other states. The British tariff has recently undergone several important alterations.—2. A list or table of duties or customs to be paid on goods imported or exported.

TAR'IFF, v. t. To make a list of duties on goods.
TAR'IN, n. [Fr.] A bird of the genus Fringilla, kept in cages for its beauty and fine notes; the citrinella.
TARING, ppr. Ascertaining or marking the amount of tare.

TARN, n. [Ice. tiorn.] 1. A small mountain, lake, or pool.—2. A bog; a marsh; a fen. [Local.]

TARNISH, v. t. [Fr. ternir, ternissant.] 1. To sully; to soil by an alteration induced by the air, or by dust, and the like; to diminish or destroy lustre; as, to tarnish a metal; to tarnish gilding; to tarnish the brightness or beauty of colour.—2. To diminish or destroy the purity of; as, to tarnish reputation or honour.

TARNISH, v. i. To lose lustre; to become dull; as, polished substances or gilding will tarnish in the course of time. Metals tarnish by oxidation.

TARNISH, n. A spot; a blot; soiled state.
TARNISHED, pp. Sullied; having lost its brightness by oxidation, or by some alteration induced by exposure to air, dust, and the like.

Gold and silver, when tarnished, resume their brightness by setting them over certain lyes. Copper and pewter, &c., tarnished, recover their lustre with tripoli and potashes. Cyc.

TARNISHING, ppr. Sullyng; losing brightness.

TAR'O, n. A plant of the genus Arum, the A. esculentum, or Colocasia esculenta, Taro (Colocasia esculenta).

cultivated in the Polynesian islands for the sake of its esculent root, which, although pungent and acrid in its natural state, becomes mild and palatable by baking or boiling.

TAR'OC, n. A game at cards.

TAR'PAN, } n. The wild horse, the TAR'PANY, } original stock of the bay horse. Tarpans are found pure only in Northern Asia, or the borders of China. They are not larger than an ordinary mule, are migratory, and have a tolerably acute sense of smell. Their colour is invariably tan or mouse. During the cold season their hair is long and soft, lying so close as to feel like a bear's fur, and then it is grizzled; in summer it falls much away, leaving only a certain quantity on the back and loins.

TARPAULIN, } n. [from tar.] A TARPAULING, } piece of canvas well daubed with tar, and used to cover the hatchways of a ship to prevent rain or water from entering the hold.—2. A sailor's hat covered with painted or tarred cloth;
a painted or tarred canvas cover generally.—3. A sailor; in contempt.

TARQUINISH, a. Like Tarquin, a king of Rome; proud; haughty.

TAR'RACE, } n. A volcanic earth re-
TAR'RASS, } sembling puzzolana,
TER'RASS, } used as a cement; or a TRASS, } coarse sort of plaster or mortar, durable in water, and used to line cisterns and other reservoirs of water. The Dutch tarras is made of a soft rock stone found near Colleen, on the lower part of the Rhine. It is burnt like lime, and reduced to powder in mills. It is of a grayish colour.

TAR'RAGON, n. A plant of the genus
Artemisia, (A. dracunculus), celebrated for perfuming vinegar in France.

TARRE, † v. t. To stimulate; to urge on; to provoke. [See To TAR.]

TARRED, pp. Smear'd with tar.

TAR'RANCE, † n. [from tarry.] A tarrying; delay; lateness.

TAR'RIED, pp. Waited for; staid; delayed.

TAR'RIER, n. A dog. [See TERRIER.]
—2. [from tarry.] One who tarries or delays.

TAR'RING, ppr. Smearing with tar; impregnating with tar; as, tarring
ropes; tarring yarn.

TAR'ROCK, n. A name given to the young of the Larus tridactylus, or Kittiwake gull, while in their first year. The birds in this state were at one time supposed to be a distinct species.

TAR'ROW, v. i. To delay; to hesitate; to feel reluctance; to loathe; to refuse. [Scotch.]

TAR'RY, v. i. [W. tariaw, to strike against any thing, to stop, to stay, to tarry; Ir. and Gael. tairism. It is of the same family as tardy and target.
The primary sense is to thrust or drive, hence to strike against, to stop;
W. tarw, L. taurus, a bull, is from the same root.] 1. To stay; to abide; to continue; to lodge.

Tarry all night and wash your feet;
Gen. xix.

2. To stay behind; Exod. xii.—3. To stay in expectation; to wait.

Tarry ye here for us, till we come again to you; Exod. xxiv.

4. To delay; to put off going or coming; to defer.

Come down to me, tarry not; Gen. xlv.

5. To remain; to stay.

He that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight; Ps. ci.

TAR'RY, v. t. To wait for.

I cannot tarry dinner. † Shak.

TAR'RY, [from tar.] Consisting of tar, or like tar; smear'd with tar.

TAR'RYING, ppr. Staying; delaying.

TAR'RYING, n. Delay; Ps. xl.

TAR'SAL, a. Pertaining to the tarsus or instep; as, the tarsal bones.

TARSE, the same as tarsus,—which see.

TARSEL, n. A kind of hawk; a tiercel.
TAR'SIER, n. A quadruped; the woolly jerboa.

TAR'SUS, n. pl. Tarsi. [Gr. ταρσος: Fr.
tarse.] The instep, or that part of the foot which is between the leg and me-tatarsus. It is composed of seven bones, viz., the astragalus, os calcis, os naviculare, os cuboides, and three others, called ossa cuneiformia.—2.
The thin cartilage situated at the edges of the eyelids to preserve their firmness and shape.—3. In entom., the last segment of the leg. It is divided into several joints, which have been supposed to represent the toes of quadru-peds. The last joint of the tarsus is generally terminated by a claw, which is sometimes single and sometimes double. In birds, the word tarsus is sometimes applied to the third segment of the leg, which corresponds with the tarsus and metatarsus conjoined.

TART, a. [Sax. teart; D. taartig. See the next word.] 1. Acid; sharp to the taste; acidulous; as, a tart apple.
—2. Sharp; keen; severe; as, a tart reply; tart language; a tart rebuke.

TART, n. [D. taart; Sw. tart; Fr.
tarte; It. torta; G. torte. The Italian and German orthography seem to connect this word with torto, L. tortus, twisted; and this may be the primary sense of tart, acid, sharp, and hence this noun, something acid or made of acid fruit. But qu.] A species of pie or pastry, consisting of fruit baked on paste.

TARTAN, n. [Sp. and It. tartana.] A vessel used in the Mediterranean, both for commercial and other purposes.
It is furnished with a single mast on which is rigged a large lateen sail;
and with a bowsprit and fore-sail.

Tartan.

When the wind is aft, a square-sail is generally hoisted like a cross-jack.

TARTAN, n. A well-known species of cloth, checkered or cross-barred with threads of various colours. It was originally made of wool or silk, and constituted the distinguishing badge of the Scottish Highland clans, each clan having its own peculiar pattern.
An endless variety of fancy tartans are now manufactured for ladies' dresses, some of wool, others of silk, others of wool and cotton, or of silk and cotton. The word tartan is supposed to be derived from the Fr.
tiretaine, which signified a kind of linsey-woolsey anciently worn by the peasants of France, and which was most probably particoloured. The name, along with the manufacture itself, seems to have been imported into Scotland from France or Germany.

TARTAR, n. [Fr. tartre; Sp. tartaro; from tart, acid.] 1. An acid concrete salt, called also argal or argol, deposited from wines completely fermented, and adhering to the sides of the casks in the form of a hard crust.
It is white or red, according to the wine from which it is obtained, the white being most esteemed. It is a bitartrate of potash, and when purified, it is quite white, and forms cream of tartar, which is much used in dyeing, and also in medicine as a laxative and diuretic. [See CREAM.]—Salt of tartar, carbonate of potash obtained by calcining cream of tartar,—Soluble tartar, a neutral or bibasic salt, obtained by adding cream of tartar to a hot solution of carbonate of potash till all effervescence ceases. It has a mild saline, somewhat bitter taste, and is used as a laxative.—Tartar-emeti- c, tartrate of potash and antimony, an important compound, used in medicine as an emetic, purgative, diaphoretic, sedative, febrifuge, and counter-irritant.—Tartar of the teeth, an earthylike substance which occasionally concretes upon the teeth, and is deposited from the saliva. It consists of salivary mucus, animal matter, and phosphate of lime.—2. A person of a keen irritable temper.—3. A native of Tartary; a corruption of Tatar.—To catch a tartar, in ludicrous style, to lay hold of or encounter a person who proves too strong for the assailant.

TARTAR, † n. [L. Tartarus.] Hell.
TARTAR'EAN, } a. Hellish; pertain-
TARTAR'EOUS, } ing to Tartarus.
TARTAR'EOUS, a. Consisting of tartar; resembling tartar, or partaking of its properties.

TARTAR'IC, } a. Pertaining to Tar-
TARTAR'IC, } tartar, in Asia.

TARTAR'IC ACID, n. The acid of tartar. It exists in grape juice, in tamarinds, and several other fruits;
but principally in bitartrate of potash, or cream of tartar, from which it is usually obtained. It crystallizes in large rhombic prisms, transparent and colourless, and very soluble in water.
It is inodorous and very sour to the taste. A high temperature decomposes it, giving rise to several new products. The solution of tartaric acid acts with facility upon those metals which decompose water, as iron and zinc; it combines readily with alkalis, earths, and metallic oxides, forming salts called tartrates. Tar-taric acid has a most remarkable disposition to form double salts, as the tartrate of potash and soda or Rochelle salts; the tartrate of potash and antimony, or tartar-emeti. In a crystallized state it is composed of 8 atoms of carbon, 4 of hydrogen, 10 of oxygen, and 2 of water; and in its dry state it is composed of 8 atoms of carbon, 2 of hydrogen, and 8 of oxygen. Tartaric acid is largely employed as a discharge in calico-printing, and for making soda powders. In medicine it is used in small doses as a refrigerant.

TARTARIN, } n. [from tartar.] A TARTARINE, } name given by Kirwan to fixed vegetable alkali or potassa.

TARTARINATED, a. Combined with tartarin.

TARTARIZA'TION, n. The act of forming tartar.

TARTARIZE, v. t. To impregnate with tartar; to refine by means of the salt of tartar.

TARTARIZED, pp. Impregnated with tartar; refined by tartar.—Tartarized iron, tartrate of potash and peroxide of iron, used in medicine.—Tartarized antimony, another name for tartar-emetic.

TARTARIZING, ppr. Impregnating with tartar; refining by means of the salt of tartar.

TARTAROUS, a. Containing tartar; consisting of tartar, or partaking of its qualities.

TARTARUM, n. A preparation of tartar, called petrified tartar.

TARTARUS, n. [Gr. ταρταρος.] In Greek and Roman mythol., the name of the infernal regions, in which the Titans were confined, and the shades of the wicked were punished. In the earliest mythology of the Greeks, it denoted the regions of the dead in general, or the realm of Pluto.

TARTTISH, a. [from tart.] Somewhat tart.

TARTLY, adv. Sharply; with acidity.—2. Sharply; with poignancy; severely; as, to reply or rebuke tartly.—3. With sourness of aspect.

TARTNESS, n. Acidity; sharpness to the taste; as, the tartness of wine or fruit.—2. Sharpness of language or manner; poignancy; keenness; severity; as, the tartness of rebuke.

TARTRALATE, n. A salt formed by the union of tartaric acid with a base; as, the tartrate of lime, or of baryta.

TARTRALIC ACID, n. An acid formed by the action of heat on tartaric acid. It forms a transparent mass not crystalline, deliquescent and soluble in alcohol. Its composition is the same as that of crystallized tartaric acid deprived of one-fourth of its water.

TARTRATE, n. [from tartar.] A salt formed by the combination of tartaric acid with a base; as, tartrate of potassa; tartrate of soda. Some of the tartrates are neutral; as the tartrates of ammonia, potash, soda, and lime; others are acid, as the acid tartrate of ethyle, the acid tartrate of potash, or tartar. Tartaric acid also forms a number of double tartrates; as the tartrate of potash and ammonia, of potash and oxide of ethyle, of potash and boracic acid, of potash and soda, &c. The tartrates are amongst the most interesting of organic salts.

TARTRELATE, n. A salt formed by the union of tartrellic acid with a base; as, the tartrate of lime, or of baryta.

TARTRELIC ACID, n. An acid formed by the action of heat on tartaric acid. Its composition is the same as that of crystallized tartaric acid deprived of one-half of its water.

TARTROVINIC ACID, n. Acid tartrate of ethyle, a crystallizable compound obtained by the reaction of tartaric acid and alcohol on each other. It has a fine white colour, and a sweetish agreeable acidulous taste, but is destitute of smell.

TARTSCHE, n. A round shield formerly much in use with the Turks.

TARTUFFE, n. [Fr.] A hypocrite, a pretender to devotion.

TARTUFFISH, † a. [Fr. tartuffe.] A hypocrite. Precise; formal; hypocritical.

TAR-WATER, n. [tar and water.] A cold infusion of tar, which was formerly a celebrated remedy for many chronic affections, especially of the lungs.

TASCES. See TASSES.

TAS'CO, n. In mineral, a sort of clay for making melting-pots.

TASK, n. [Fr. tache; W. tasg, a bond, a pledge, that which is settled or agreed to be done, a job, a task; Gael. and Ir. tasg, task, and tasgair, a slave; It. tassa. The sense is that which is set or fixed, from throwing or putting on.] 1. Business imposed by another, often a definite quantity or amount of labour; something to be learned or studied. Each man has his task. When he has performed his task, his time is his own; Exod. v.—2. Business; employment.

His mental powers were equal to greater tasks. Atterbury.

3. Burdensome employment.—To take to task, to reprove; to reprimand; as, to take one to task for idleness.

TASK, v. t. [W. tasgu, to bind, to rate, to task, to spring, start, leap back, to urge.] 1. To impose a task; to assign to one a definite amount of business or labour.—2. To burden with some employment; to require to perform. There task thy maids, and exercise the loom. Dryden.

TASKED, pp. Required to perform something.

TASKER, n. One that imposes a task.

TASKING, ppr. Imposing a task on; requiring to perform.

TASKMASTER, n. [task and master.] One who imposes a task, or burdens with labour. Sinful propensities and appetites are men's most unrelenting taskmasters. They condemn us to unceasing drudgery, and reward us with pain, remorse and poverty. Next to our sinful propensities, fashion is the most oppressive taskmaster.—2. One whose office is to assign tasks to others; Exod. i.; iii.

TASK'-WORK, n. Work imposed or performed as a task.

TAS'LET, n. A piece of armour for the thigh.

TASSEL, n. [W. tasel, a sash, a bandage, a fringe, a tassel; taslaw, to tie; tas, that binds or hems in; It. tassello, the collar of a cloak.] 1. A sort of pendent ornament, consisting of a bunch of silk or gold fringe, attached to the corners of cushions, to curtains, the strings of mantles, robes of state, &c., and ending in loose threads.—2. In arch., tassels are the pieces of boards that lie under the mantle-tree; they are otherwise called torsels.—3. A bur. [See TEASEL.]—4. A male hawk; properly terzol; It. terzuolo.—5. The flower ribbons, or head of plants; as, of maize.

TASSEL, v. t. To put forth a tassel, or flower; as, maize.

TASSELLED, a. Furnished or adorned with tassels; as, the tasselled horn.

TASSEL-GRASS, n. A British plant of the genus Ruppia, the R. maritima. [See RUPPIA.]

TASSES, or TASSETS, n. plur.

Armour for the thighs; appendages to the ancient corselet, consisting of skirts of iron that covered the thighs. They were fastened to the cuirass with hooks.

Corselet with Tasses, A. D., 1225.

TAS'SIE, n. [Fr. tasse.] A cup or vessel. [Scotch.]

TASTABLE, a. [from taste.] That may be tasted; savoury; relishing.

TASTE, v. t. [Fr. tâter, to feel; It. tastare; Norm. taster, to touch, to try; G. and D. tasten; Dan. tasser. The Dutch has toetsen, to touch, to try, to test; Dan. taster and, to attack or assault. This shows that the primary sense is to thrust or drive; allied perhaps to dash; hence to strike, to touch, to bring one thing in contact with another.] 1. To perceive by means of the tongue; to have a certain sensation in consequence of something applied to the tongue, the organ of taste; as, to taste bread; to taste wine; to taste a sweet or an acid.—2. To try the relish of by the perception of the organs of taste.—3. To try by eating a little; or to eat a little.

Because I tasted a little of this honey; 1 Sam. xiv.

4. To essay first.—5. To have pleasure from.—6. To experience; to feel; to undergo.

That he by the grace of God should taste death for every man; Heb. ii.

7. To relish intellectually; to enjoy.

Thou, Adam, wilt taste no pleasure. Milton.

8. To experience by shedding, as blood. When Commodus had once tasted human blood, he became incapable of pity or remorse. Gilbon.

TASTE, v. i. To try by the mouth; to eat or drink; or to eat or drink a little only; as, to taste of each kind of wine.—2. To have a smack; to excite a particular sensation, by which the quality or flavour is distinguished; as, butter tastes of garlic; apples boiled in a brass-kettle, sometimes taste of brass.—3. To distinguish intellectually.

Scholars, when good sense describing, Call it tasting and imbibing. Swift.

4. To try the relish of anything. Taste of the fruits; taste for yourself.—5. To be tintured; to have a particular quality or character.

9. To have the experience or enjoyment of.

They who have tasted of the heavenly gift, and the good word of God; Heb. vi.

TASTE, n. The act of tasting; gustation.—2. A particular sensation excited in an animal by certain bodies, which are called sapid, applied to the tongue and palate, and moistened with saliva; as, the taste of an orange or an apple; a bitter taste; an acid taste; a sweet taste. This is the original and proper meaning of the word taste; but as the qualities of bodies which produce these sensations are unknown, they have obtained the names of the sensations themselves, by substituting the cause for the effect. We possess very few words to designate the endless variety of tastes, of which we are very sensible. Tastes have been divided into simple and compound, and philosophers have endeavour to ascertain the number of each species.—3. The sense by which we perceive the relish of a thing. The organs of this special sense, are certain parts within the cavity of the mouth, obviously so disposed as to take early cognizance of matters about to be swallowed, and to act as sentinels for the remainder of the alimentary canal, at the entrance of which they are situated. They serve to give timely notice of any acrid, caustic, or nauseous quality; of any undue temperature; of any inconvenient hardness, irregularity, size, or sharpness in the material submitted to them; and thus to protect the stomach against the intrusion of many hurtful agents. They, moreover, establish for our appetites a scale of liking and disliking. The organs of taste are confined to a portion of the tongue and a portion of the palate. The tip and sides of the tongue, and a small space at the root of it, together with a small surface at the anterior and superior part of the roof of the palate, are the only portions of surface in the cavity of the mouth and throat that can distinguish taste or sapidity from mere touch.—4. Intellectual relish, or discernment; as, he had no taste of true glory.

I have no taste

Of popular applause.

Dryden.

Note.—In this use, the word is now followed by for. "He had no taste for glory." When followed by of, the sense is ambiguous, or rather it denotes experience, trial.—5. Judgment; discernment; nice perception, or the power of perceiving and relishing excellence in human performances; the faculty of discerning beauty, order, congruity, proportion, symmetry, or whatever constitutes excellence, particularly in the fine arts and belles lettres. Or it may be defined, that faculty of the mind by which we both perceive and enjoy whatever is beautiful and sublime in the works of nature and art, the perception of these two qualities being attended with an emotion of pleasure, distinguishable from every other pleasure of our nature. This faculty relishes some things, is disgusted with others, and to many is indifferent. Taste is not wholly the gift of nature, nor wholly the effect of art. It depends much on culture. It is the joint result of natural sensibility, of a good judgment, and an intimate acquaintance with the best productions of art. We say, a good taste, or a fine taste.—6. Style; manner, with respect to what is pleasing; the pervading air, the choice of circumstances, and the general arrangement in any work of art, by which taste in the artist or author is evinced; as, a poem or music composed in good taste.—7. The choice, whether good or bad, of ornaments, of pleasures, or pursuits, by which a person is distinguished.—8.† Essay; trial; experiment.—9. A small portion given as a specimen.—10. A bit; a little piece tasted or eaten.—11. A kind of narrow ribbon.

Head of Ko-towa-towa, a New Zealand chief.

a variety of figures, on the face and other parts of the body. This practice is very prevalent among the South-sea islanders, and the word tattoo appears to be formed by a reduplication of a Polynesian verb ta, meaning to strike, in allusion to the method of performing the operation. The instruments generally used in tattooing, among the south-sea islanders, are edged with small teeth, somewhat resembling those of a fine comb. These are applied to the skin, and being repeatedly struck with a small mallet, the teeth make the incisions required, while the colouring tincture is introduced at the same time. In some cases, however, various instruments are employed, and the operation is very tedious and painful. Degrees of rank are indicated by the greater or less surface of tattooed skin. Sometimes the whole body, the face not excepted, are tattooed; as among the New Zealanders. The age for performing the operation appears to vary from eight or ten years, up to about twenty.

TAU, n. The toad fish of Carolina, a species of Gadus, (G. tau).—2. A species of beetle; also, a species of moth, (Phalena); also, a kind of fly, (Musca).—3. In her., the cross-tau, or cross of St. Anthony. It is nearly the same as the cross-potent, and derives its name from the Greek letter tau, which it resembles exactly.

Cross-Tau.

TAUGHT, a. (taut.) [from the root of tight.] In marine lan., tight; stretched out; not slack; applied to a rope or sail. As applied to a sail, it also implies a great quantity of sail set. It is sometimes written taut.

TAUGHT, pret. and pp. of Teach, pron. taut. [L. doctus.] Experience taught him wisdom. He has been taught in the school of experience.

TAX, n. [Fr. taxe; Sp. tasa; It. tassa; from L. taxo, to tax. If from the Gr. ταξις, τασσω, the root was tago, the sense of which was to set, to thrust on. But this is doubtful. It may be allied to task.] 1. A rate or duty, laid by government on the incomes or property of individuals, or on the products consumed by them; the produce of such duty or rate being placed at the disposal of government, for the public good. Tax is a term of general import, including almost every species of imposition on persons or property for supplying the public treasury, as tolls, tribute, subsidy, excise, impost, or customs. But more generally, tax is limited to the sum laid upon incomes, lands, houses, horses, cattle, professions, and occupations. So we speak of a land tax, an income tax, a window tax, a tax on carriages, &c. A tax may be either direct or indirect. It is said to be direct, when it is imposed on the incomes or property of individuals; and indirect, when it is imposed on the articles on which such incomes or property are expended. A tax may also be either general or particular; that is, it may either affect all classes indiscriminately, or only one or more classes. All taxes must ultimately be paid from the revenue of a country, or from its capital or stock. Assessed taxes, those duties imposed by government on windows, carriages, horses, dogs, men-servants, &c.—2. A sum imposed on individuals or on their property for local or civic purposes. Of this nature are county rates, taxes for the repair of roads or bridges, taxes for the support of the poor, usually called poor rates; borough tolls and dues; light dues, harbour dues; police taxes, &c. So a private association may lay a tax on its members for the use of the association.—3. That which is imposed; a burden. The attention that he gives to public business is a heavy tax on his time.—4. Charge; censure.—5. Task.

TAX, v. t. [L. taxo; Fr. taxer; It. tassare.] 1. To lay, impose, or assess upon individuals a certain sum of money or amount of property, to be paid to the public treasury, or to the treasury of a corporation or company, to defray the expenses of the government or corporation, &c.

We are more heavily taxed by our idleness, pride and folly, than we are taxed by government. Franklin.

2. To load with a burden or burdens. The narrator... never taxes our faith beyond the obvious bounds of probability.

J. Sparks.
3. To assess, fix or determine judicially, as the amount of cost on actions in court; as, the court taxes bills of cost.—4. To charge; to censure; to accuse; usually followed by with; as, to tax a man with pride. He was taxed with presumption.

Men's virtues I have commended as freely as I have taxed their crimes. Dryden.
[To tax of a crime, is not in use, nor to tax for. Both are now improper.]

TAXABILITY, n. The state of being taxable.

TAXABLE, a. That may be taxed; liable by law to the assessment of taxes; as, taxable commodities.—2. That may be legally charged by a court against the plaintiff or defendant in a suit; as, taxable costs.

TAXABLENESS, n. The state of being taxable.

TAXABLY, adv. In a taxable manner.

TAXACEÆ, n. A nat. order of gymnospermous plants, inhabiting chiefly the temperate parts of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. The plants of this order are trees or shrubs, having a woody tissue marked with circular disks, with evergreen, and mostly narrow, rigid, entire, and veinless leaves. The order yields trees which are valued for their timber, and, like the coniferæ, possess resinous properties. The Dacrydium taxifolium or Kahaterro of New Zealand acquires a height of 200 feet. [See TAXUS.]

TAXATIO ECCLESIAS'TICA. [L.] The name formerly given to the assessment and levy of taxes upon the property of the church, and of the clergy.

TAXATION, n. [Fr. from L. taxatio.] 1. A taxing; the act of laying a tax, or of imposing taxes on the subjects of a state by government, or on the members of a corporation or company by the proper authority. Taxation is probably the most difficult subject of legislation.—2. Tax; sum imposed; the aggregate of particular taxes.

He daily such taxations did exact. Daniel.
3. That branch of political economy which explains the mode in which the revenue required for the public service may be most advantageously raised.—

TAX'ING, n. The act of laying a tax; taxation; Luke ii.

TAX'IS, n. [Gr. ταξις, order.] In surg., an operation by which those parts which have quitted their natural situation are replaced by the hand without the assistance of instruments; as, in reducing hernia, &c.—2. In ancient arch., a term used to signify that disposition which assigns to every part of a building its just dimensions. It is synonymous with ordonnance in modern architecture.

TAXO'DIUM, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Coniferæ. It has been distinguished from the genus cupressus, principally on account of the arrangement of the male catkins in racemose panicles, the small number of flowers in the female catkins, and the numbers of cotyledons possessed by the embryo. The T. distichum, or deciduous cypress, is a native of North America, where its wood is used for all the purposes to which timber is applied. The bark exudes a resin which is used by the negroes for dressing wounds. The roots are remarkable for the production of large conical knobs, hollow inside. In America they are called cypress knees, and are used by the negroes for bee-hives.

Taxodium distichum.

TAXON'OMY, n. [Gr. ταξις, order, and νομος, law.] 1. That department of natural history which treats of the laws and principles of classification.—2. The laws or principles themselves of classification.

TAX'OR, n. In the university of Cambridge, an officer appointed to regulate the assize of bread, the true gauge of weights, &c.

TAX'US, n. The yew; a genus of evergreen plants, the type of the natural order Taxaceæ. The species are natives of Europe and North America. [See YEW.]

TAYLOR'S THEOREM. In the higher mathematics, a very elegant formula, of most extensive application in analysis, discovered by Dr. Brook Taylor, and published by him in 1715. It is to the following effect. Let u represent any function whatever of the variable quantity x; then if x receive any increment, as h, let u become u'; then we shall have $u' = u + \frac{du}{dx} \cdot h +$

$\frac{d^2 u}{dx^2} \cdot \frac{h^2}{1 \cdot 2} + \frac{d^3 u}{dx^3} \cdot \frac{h^3}{1 \cdot 2 \cdot 3} + \frac{d^4 u}{dx^4} \cdot \frac{h^4}{1 \cdot 2 \cdot 3 \cdot 4} +$, &c., where d represents the differential of the function u. The great value of this theorem was overlooked till it was made the basis of the differential and integral calculus, by Lagrange, in 1772.

TA'ZEL, n. A plant; teasel,—which see.

TAZ'ZA, n. [It.] In antiquities, a large basin or reservoir of water, set apart for the various lustrations which were in general use among the ancients.

TEA, n. [Chinese, tcha or tha. Grosier. Russ. tshai; Sp. te; It. tè; Fr. thé.] 1. The dried leaves of different species of plants of the genus Thea, extensively cultivated in China. All the teas of China are in commerce brought under two distinct terms, green teas and black teas. These are produced from thea

Black Tea (Thea bohea).

viridis, and thea bohea, both of which species yield the two kinds of tea. The difference between green and black tea is attained by means of some peculiarity in the manipulation during the process of manufacture. The black teas include bohea, congou, souchong, and peko; the green teas, twankay, hyson-skin, young hyson, hyson, imperial, and gunpowder. Paraguay tea is yielded by Ilex paraguayensis. [See ILEX.] Tea, taken in moderation, is strengthening and exhilarating. It also has the effect of a very mild narcotic. The green varieties are more exhilarating than the black, and a strong infusion of the former, generally produces considerable excitement and wakefulness. Tea was first introduced into this country about the middle of the seventeenth century. [See THEA.]—2. A decoction or infusion of tea leaves in boiling water. Tea is a refreshing beverage.—3. Any infusion or decoction of vegetables; as, sage tea; chamomile tea, &c.

TEA, v. i. To take or drink tea. [Provincial.]

TEA-BOARD, n. [tea and board.] A board to put tea furniture on.

TEA-CADDY, n. A box for holding the tea used in a household; a tea-canister.

TEA-CANISTER, n. [tea and canister.] A canister or box in which tea is kept.

TEA-CHEST, n. A slightly formed wooden package, covered with Chinese characters and devices, and lined with thin sheet-lead, used for sending tea in from China.

TEA-CUP, n. [tea and cup.] A small cup in which tea is drank.

TEA-DEALER, n. A merchant who sells teas.

TEA-DRINKER, n. [tea and drinker.] One who drinks much tea.

TEA-KETTLE, n. A portable boiler, made of copper, of brass, or of tinned or cast iron, in which water is boiled for making tea.

TEA-LEAD, n. Thin sheet-lead, used in lining tea-chests, sent from China.

TEA-PLANT, n. The tea-shrub. [See THEA.]

TEA-POT, n. [tea and pot.] A vessel with a spout, in which tea is made, and from which it is poured into tea-cups.

TEA-SAUCCER, n. [tea and saucer.] A small saucer in which a tea-cup is set.

TEA-SPOON, n. [tea and spoon.] A small spoon used in drinking tea and coffee.

TEA-TABLE, n. [tea and table.] A table on which tea-furniture is set, or at which tea is drank.

TEA-TREE, n. [tea and tree.] The shrub or plant that produces the leaves which are imported and called tea. [See THEA.]

TEA-TRAY, n. A tea-board, made of japanned sheet-iron, pasteboard, papier maché, &c.

TEA-URN, n. A vessel in the form of a vase, placed on the tea-table, for supplying heated water for tea.

TEACH, v. t. pret. and pp. Taught. [Sax. tæcan, to teach, and to take; L. doceo; Ir. deachtain, to teach, to dictate; Gaelic, deachtam, which seems to be the L. dico, dicto, and both these and the Gr. διδάσκω, to show, may be of one family; all implying sending, passing, communicating, or rather leading, drawing.] 1. To instruct; to inform; to communicate to another the knowledge of that of which he was before ignorant.

He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; Is. ii.

Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples; Luke ix.

2. To deliver any doctrine, art, principles, or words for instruction. One sect of ancient philosophers taught the doctrines of stoicism, another those of epicureanism.

In vain they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men; Matt. xv.

3. To tell; to give intelligence.—4. To instruct, or to practise the business of an instructor; to use or follow the employment of a preceptor; as, a man teaches a school for a livelihood.—5. To show; to exhibit so as to impress on the mind.

If some men teach wicked things, it must be that others may practise them. South.

6. To accustom; to make familiar.

They have taught their tongue to speak lies; Jer. ix.

7. To inform or admonish; to give previous notice to.

For he taught his disciples, and said... Mark ix.

8. To suggest to the mind.

For the Holy Spirit shall teach you in that same hour what ye ought to say; Luke xii.

9. To signify or give notice.

He teacheth with his fingers; Prov. vi.

10. To counsel and direct; Hab. ii.

TEACH, v. i. To practise giving instruction; to perform the business of a preceptor.

The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire; Mic. iii.

TEACH, n. [Ir. and Gaelic, teagham, to heat.] In sugar works, the last boiler.

TEACHABLE, a. That may be taught; apt to learn; also readily receiving instruction; docile.

We ought to bring our minds free, unbiased and teachable, to learn our religion from the word of God. Watts.

TEACHABLENESS, n. The quality of being capable of receiving instruction; more generally, a willingness or readiness to be informed and instructed; docility; aptness to learn.

TEACHER, n. One who teaches or instructs.—2. An instructor; a preceptor; a tutor; one whose business or occupation is to instruct others.—3. One who instructs others in religion; a preacher; a minister of the gospel.

The teachers in all the churches assembled themselves. Raleigh.

4. One who preaches without regular ordination.

TEACHING, ppr. Instructing; informing.

TEACHING, n. The act or business of instructing.—2. Instruction.

TEACHLESS, a. Unteachable; indocile.

TEAD, } + n. [L. tæda.] A torch; a

TEDE, } flambeau.

TEAGUE, n. (teeg.) An Irishman; in contempt.

TEAK, n. A tree of the East Indies, which furnishes an abundance of ship timber. It is the Tectona grandis. [See TECTONA.]

TEAL, n. [D. taling.] An aquatic fowl of the genus Anas, the A. crecca, Linn., the smallest and most beautiful of the European anatidæ, or duck kind. The common teal makes its appearance in England about the end of September, and remains till spring has made considerable progress, when it generally returns again to more northern localities to breed. In many parts of Scotland, however, it remains all the year. Teals frequent fresh-water lakes, and feed on seeds, grasses, water-plants, and insects. Their flesh is much prized.

Common Teal (Anas crecca).

TEAM, n. [Sax. team, offspring, progeny, race of descendants, hence a suit or long series; tyman, to team, to bear, to bring forth, also to call, to summon. The primary sense is to shoot out or extend.] 1. Two or more horses, oxen or other beasts, harnessed together to the same vehicle for drawing, as to a coach, chariot, waggon, cart, plough, and the like. It has been a great question whether teams of horses or oxen are most advantageously employed in agriculture. Wherever the land is only partially cultivated, and a portion of it remains in coarse pasture, which costs little or nothing to the occupier, or where extensive open commons afford cheap food for oxen, these ought to be employed in farm labour; but wherever arable land is the chief object of the farmer's attention, and the tillage of the soil is brought to any degree of perfection, horses should be employed.

—2. Any number passing in a line; a long line.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high. Dryden.

[This is the primary sense, but is rarely used.]

TEAM-RAILWAY, n. A railway on which horses are used as the motive power.

TEAMSTER, n. [team and ster.] One who drives a team.

TEANY, In her. [See TENNE.]

TEAR, n. [Gaelic, dear, deur; Goth. tagr, contracted in Sax. tear; G. zähre; Sw. tar; Dan. taare; W. daigyrr; Gr. δακρυ: from flowing or pouring forth; Ar. tauka, to drop or distil.] 1. Tears are the limpid fluid secreted by the lacrymal gland, and appearing in the eyes, or flowing from them.

A tear, in the singular, is a drop or a small quantity of that fluid. Tears are excited by passions, particularly by grief. This fluid is also called forth by any injury done to the eye.

It serves to moisten the cornea and preserves transparency, and to remove any dust or fine substance that enters the eye and gives pain. Tears are a little heavier than water; they have a saline taste and an alkaline reactivity, owing to the presence of free soda.—2. Something in the form of a transparent drop of fluid matter; as gums or resins exuding in the form of tears from the eye.

TEAR, v. t. pret. Tore; pp. Torn; old pret. Tare, obs. [Sax. tearan, to tear; tiran, tyran, tyrian, tyrigan, to fret, gnaw, provoke; Russ. deru, to tear. In Sw. tära is to fret, consume, waste; Dan. tærer, id.; D. tæren, G. zehren, id. These are probably the same word varied in signification, and they coincide with L. tero, Gr. τεροω. In W. tori, Arm. torri, Corn. terhi, is to break; Ch. and Syr. تيرا, tera, to tear, to rend.] 1. To separate by violence or pulling; to rend; to lacerate; as, to tear cloth; to tear a garment; to tear the skin or flesh. We use tear and rip in different senses. To tear is to rend or separate the texture of cloth; to rip is to open a seam, to separate parts sewed together.—2. To wound; to lacerate.

The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tear. Shak.

3. To rend; to break; to form fissures by any violence; as, torrents tear the ground.—4. To divide by violent measures; to shatter; to rend; as, a state or government tear by factions.—5. To pull with violence; as, to tear the hair.—6. To remove by violence; to break up.

Or on rough seas from their foundation tear. Dryden.

7. To make a violent rent.

In the midst, a tearing groan did break The name of Antony. Shak.

To tear from, to separate and take away by force; as, an island tear from its possessor.

The hand of fate

Has tear thee from me. Addison.
To tear off, to pull off by violence; to strip.—To tear out, to pull or draw out by violence; as, to tear out the eyes.—To tear up, to rip up; to remove from a fixed state by violence; as, to tear up a floor; to tear up the foundations of government or order.

TEAR, v. i. To rave; to rage; to rant; to move and act with turbulent violence; as a mad bull.

TEAR, n. A rent; a fissure. [Lit. us.]

TEARER, n. One who tears or rends any thing.—2. One that rages or raves with violence.

TEAR-FALLING, a. [tear and fall.] Shedding tears; tender; as, tear-falling pity.

TEAR-FILLED, a. Filled with tears.

TEARFUL, a. [tear and full.] Abounding with tears; weeping; shedding tears; as, tearful eyes.

TEARING, ppr. [from tear, to rend.] Rending; pulling apart; lacerating; violent; raging.

TEARLESS, a. Shedding no tears; without tears; unfeeling.

TEAR-STAINED, a. Having traces of the passage of tears; as, tear-stained cheeks.

TEASE, v. t. (s as z.) [Sax. tæsan, to pull or tear.] 1. To comb or card, as wool or flax.—2. To scratch, as cloth in dressing, for the purpose of raising a nap.—3. To vex with importunity or impertinence; to harass, annoy, disturb, or irritate by petty requests, or by jests and raillery. Parents are often teased by their children into unreasonable compliances.

My friends tease me about him, because he has no estate. Spectator.

TEASED, pp. Carded.—2. Vexed; irritated; annoyed.

TEASEL, } n. (*tee'z*l.) [Sax. tæst.] 1.
TEAZEL, } The English name of TEAZLE, } several plants of the genus
Dipsacus, belonging to the nat. order Dipsacæ. Common teasel or fuller's thistle, (D. fullorum), is a plant which grows wild in hedges, but it is cultivated in those districts of England where Common Teasel (Dipsacus fullorum).

a, Hooked scale of the Receptacle; b, Corolla slit open.

cloth is manufactured, for the sake of the awns of the head, which are employed to raise the nap of woollen cloths. For this purpose the heads are fixed round the circumference of a large broad wheel or drum, so as to form a kind of brush. The wheel is made to turn round, while the cloth is held against the brush thus formed, and the fine hooked awn of the teasel readily insinuates itself into the woollen web, and draws out with it some of the fine fibres of the wool. These are afterwards shorn smooth, and leave the cloth with the fine velvet-like nap which is its peculiar appearance. Teasels, before being used, are sorted into kings, middlings, and scrubs, according to their size. Every piece of fine broad cloth requires from 1500 to 2000 teasels to bring out the proper nap, after which they are useless.

TEASEL, TEAZLE, or TEAZEL, v. t. To cut and gather teasels.

TEASELER, } n. One who uses the TEAZLER, } teasel for raising a nap on cloth.

TEASELING, } ppr. Gathering teasels;
TEAZLING, } as a noun, the cutting and gathering of teasels.

TEASER, n. One that teases or vexes.
TEASING, ppr. Combing; carding; scratching for the purpose of raising a nap; vexing with importunity.

TEAT, n. [Sax. tit, titt; G. zitze; D. tet; W. ieth; Corn. titi; Ir. did; Gaelic, did; Fr. teton, breast, It. tetta; Gr. τεθος. It coincides with tooth, teeth, in elements, and radical sense, which is a shoot.] The projecting part of the female breast; the dug of a beast; the pap of a woman; the nipple. It consists of an elastic erectile substance, embracing the lactiferous ducts, which terminate on its surface, and thus serves to convey milk to the young of animals.

TEATED, a. Having teats; having protuberances resembling the teats of animals.

TEATHE, n. The soil or fertility left on lands by feeding cattle on them. [Scotch.] TEATHE, v. t. To feed and enrich land by feeding cattle on it. [Scotch.]

TEATHING, n. In Scotland, the practice of carrying provender to the field to be consumed there by cattle during winter, for the purpose of enriching the soil by the dung of the cattle. This practice is considered to be very objectionable. [See TATH.]

TEAZE TENON, n. In arch., a tenon on the top of a tenon, with a double shoulder and tenon from each, for supporting two level pieces of timber at right angles to each other.

TEAZEL, or TEAZLE. See TEASEL.

TE'BETH, n. [Heb.] The tenth month of the Jewish ecclesiastical year, and fourth of the civil. It answers to our December.

TECH'ILY, adv. [from techy, so written for touchy.] Peevishly; fretfully; frowardly.

TECH'INESS, n. Peevishness; fretfulness.

TECH'NIC, } a. [L. technicus; Gr.
TECH'NICAL, } τεχνικος, from τεχνη, art, artifice, from τεχνω, to fabricate, make or prepare. This word and τεσσω have the same elements.] 1. Pertaining to art or the arts. A technical word is a word that belongs properly or exclusively to an art; as, the verb to smelt, belongs to metallurgy. So we say, technical phrases, technical language. Every artificer has his technical terms.—2. Belonging to a particular profession; as, the words of an indictment must be technical.

It is of the utmost importance clearly to understand the technical terms used by the eastern theologians. Prof. Lee.

TECH'NICALLY, adv. In a technical manner; according to the signification of terms of art or the professions.

TECH'NICALNESS, } n. The quality TECH'NICALITY, } or state of being technical or peculiar to the arts.

TECH'NICS, n. The doctrine of arts in general; such branches of learning as respect the arts.

TECH'NOLOG'ICAL, a. [See TECH-NOLOGY.] Pertaining to technology.
—2. Pertaining to the arts; as, technological institutes.

TECHNOL'OGIST, n. One who discourses or treats of arts, or of the terms of arts.

TECHNOL'OGY, n. [Gr. τεχνη, art, and λογος, word or discourse.] 1. A description of arts; or a treatise on the arts.—2. An explanation of the terms of the arts.

TECH'Y, a. [so written for touchy.] Peevish; fretful; irritable. [More correctly touchy.]

TECOMA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Bignoniaceæ. The species are erect trees or shrubs or climbing plants, Tecoma impetiginosa.

with unequally pinnate or digitate simple leaves, with terminal panicles of yellow or flesh-coloured flowers. They are natives of the Old and New World, in tropical and sub-tropical climates. A climbing species, T. radicans, a native of North and South Carolina, of Florida, and Virginia, is a favourite in this country as an ornamental plant. From the shape of its corolla, the plant has received the name of trumpet-flower. Some of the species of Tecoma are medicinal, as T. impetiginosa, which abounds in tannin, and whose bark is bitter, mucilaginous, and used in lotions, baths, &c., in cases of inflammations of the joints and debility.

TECTIBRANCHIATA, n. [L. tectus, concealed or covered, and Gr. βραχίον, gills.] The fourth order of Gastropods in the arrangement of Cuvier, comprehending those species in which the gills are attached along the right side, or on the back, in form of leaves more or less divided. The mantle covers them more or less, and contains nearly always in its thickness a small shell. They resemble the Pectinibranchiata in the form of the organs of respiration, and live like them in the sea, but they are all hermaphrodites. The order contains the following genera: pleurobranchus, pleurobranchæa, aplysia, dolabella, notarchus, ahera, gasteroptron, gastroplax, umbrella.

TECTONA, n. The teak, a genus of plants; nat. order Verbenaceæ. T. grandis, the teak-tree, is a native of different parts of India, as well as of Burmah, and of the islands from Ceylon to the Moluccas. It grows to an immense size, and is remarkable for its very large leaves, which are from 12 to 24 inches long, and from 8 to 16 broad. Teak timber is found to be excellent for ship-building, and has been called the oak of the East. It works easily, and though porous, is strong and durable; is easily seasoned, and shrinks but little; and from containing a resinous oil, it resists the action of water, as well as insects of all kinds. Besides being employed in ship-building, teak timber is extensively used in the East, in the construction of houses and temples. The tree which yields the African teak is not known. It belongs to the nat. order Euphorbiaceæ.

TECTONIC, a. [Gr. τεκτονικός, from τεκνω, to fabricate.] Pertaining to building.

TECTORIUM OPUS, n. [Lat.] In ancient arch., the name given to a species of plastering used on ceilings and interior walls.

TECTRYCES, n. [from L. teco, to cover.] In ornith., the same as coverts,—which see.

TED, v. i. [W. téd and tēz, [teth], a spread; tedu, to distend.] Among farmers, to spread; to turn new mowed grass or hay from the swath, and scatter it for drying.

TED'DED, pp. Spread from the swath; as, tedded grass.

TED'DER, n. [W. tid, a chain; Ir. tead, teidin; Gaelic, tead, teidin, teud, a chain, cord, or rope; Sw. tiuder; probably from extending. See TED.] 1. A rope or chain by which an animal is tied, that he may feed on the ground to the extent of the rope and no further. Hence the popular saying, a person has gone to the length of his tedder.—2. That by which one is restrained. [See TETHER.]

TED'DER, v. i. To tie with a tedder; to permit to feed to the length of a rope or chain.—2. To restrain to certain limits.

TED'DERED, pp. Tied with a tedder; restrained to certain limits.

TED'DING, ppr. Spreading from the swath, as hay.

TED'DING, n. In agriculture, the operation of scattering, spreading, turning, and, in short, of making hay.

TE DEUM, n. The title of a celebrated hymn or song of thanksgiving, so called from the first words, "Te Deum laudamus." We praise thee, O God. It is sung on particular occasions, as on the news of victories, and on high festival days in catholic and also in some protestant churches. In the English church, Te Deum is sung in the morning service between the two lessons.

Te Deum was sung at St. Paul's after the victory. Bacon.

TE'DIOUS, a. [Sp. and It. tedioso, from tedio, L. tedium; probably connected with W. ted, tedder, from the sense of drawing out.] 1. Wearisome; tiresome from continuance, prolixity, or slowness which causes prolixity. We say, a man is tedious in relating a story; a minister is tedious in his sermon. We say also, a discourse is tedious when it wearies by its length or dullness.—2. Slow; as, a tedious course.

TE'DIOUSLY, adv. In such a manner as to weary.

TE'DIOUSNESS, n. Wearisomeness by length of continuance or by prolixity; as, the tediousness of an oration or argument.—2. Prolixity; length.—3. Tiresomeness; quality of wearying; as, the tediousness of delay.—4. Slowness that wearies.

TE'DIUM, n. [L. tedium.] Irksomeness; wearisomeness.

TE'DIUM-STRICKEN, a. Struck with irksomeness.

TEE, n. In India, an umbrella in general; also, an umbrella of open iron-work, covering the Buddhist pagodas of Ava and Pegu.

TEEM, v. i. [Sax. tyman, to bring forth, to bear; team, offspring; also tyman, teaman, to call, to summon; D. teemon, to whine, to cant, that is, to throw.] 1. To bring forth, as young.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen. Shak.

2. To be pregnant; to conceive; to engender young.

Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryden.

3. To be full; to be charged; as a breeding animal; to be prolific. Every head teems with politics.—4. To bring forth; to produce, particularly in abundance. The earth teems with fruits; the sea teems with fishes.

TEEM, v. i. To produce; to bring forth.

What's the newest grief?
Each minute teems a new one. Shak.

[This transitive sense is not common.]
—2. † To pour.

TEEMER, n. One that brings forth young.

TEEMFUL, a. Pregnant; prolific.—2. Brimful.

TEEMING, ppr. Producing young; fruitful; prolific; replete with.

TEEMLESS, a. Not fruitful or prolific; barren; as, the teemless earth.

TEEN, † n. [infra.] Grief; sorrow.

TEEN, † v. i. [Sax. teonan, to invoke, to irritate.] To excite; to provoke.

TEENS, n. [from teen, ten.] The years of one's age reckoned by the termination teen. These years begin with thirteen, and end with nineteen. Miss is in her teens.

TEESDA'LIA, n. A genus of cruciferous plants, so named after Mr. Teesdale, an English botanist. Class Tetradynamia, order Siliculosæ, Linn. The species, which are not important, are small annual smooth herbs, with stalked expanded vertical leaves, and flowers usually small and white. T. nudicaulis is a British species, found in sandy and gravelly places.

TEETH, plur. of Tooth,—which see.—In the teeth, directly; in direct opposition; in front.

Nor strive with all the tempest in my teeth. Pope.

Teeth, or cogs of a wheel, in mech., are projecting pieces which may be either formed on, or inserted into, the rim of a wheel which is intended to transmit motion from one axis to another, by the intervention of a similar wheel. The teeth being disposed at equal distances on the rims of both, when one wheel is turned its teeth enter successively the spaces between those of the other, thereby imparting motion to it. Toothed wheels are most frequently employed in machinery to transmit motion from one axis to another, and to regulate the relative velocities of two shafts; the larger one being termed the wheel, and the smaller the pinion. The velocities of revolution of every wheel and pinion which work in one another, have the same proportion as their number of teeth taken in a reverse order; so that by this means the relative velocities of wheels and pinions may be accurately determined according to any proposed rate, and consequently the relative velocities of the shafts which they turn. The teeth of wheels require to be formed with the utmost accuracy, according to certain mathematical curves, as that of the epicycloid, in order that the motion may be transmitted with the requisite smoothness and uniformity. [See WHEEL.]

TEETH, v. i. [from the noun.] To breed teeth.

TEETHING, ppr. Breeding teeth; undergoing dentition.

TEETHING, n. The operation or process of the first growth of teeth, or the process by which they make their way through the gums, called dentition.
